"The Purple Hieroglyph," a story of adventure on the Pacific Coast and an American romance shrouded in Oriental mystery has been purchased by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, as the next Earle Williams production to follow "The Master Stevedore." Chester Bennett will direct the star in this feature, and is now finishing the script in collaboration with J. Grubb Alexander. Filming will soon start at Vitagraph’s California studios. The story is by Will F. Jenkins and recently appeared in a popular magazine.

“The Heart Line” to be Adapted by Mullin

Eugene Mullin, former scenario editor of Vitagraph, Universal and Goldwyn, has associated himself with Arthur E. Beck, president of Gibraltar Pictures, and will signalize his new connection by adapting Gelett Burgess "The Heart Line," production of which will begin shortly at the Robert Brunton Studios, Los Angeles, recently leased by Gibraltar. "The Heart Line" pictorial rights were bought by Arthur E. Beck two months ago in a highly competitive market for $25,000.

New Exchange System Ready

EDUCATIONAL FILMS CORPORATION announces that it expects to be serving the motion picture trade of the entire country through its own exchange system by June 1st. These offices are said to offer the first national specialization in short subjects offered by a film organization. The entire force of each office will be confined to Educational product and no picture longer than two reels will be handled.

Contracts have already been signed for the exchanges in Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Columbus, Indianapolis, Chicago, Detroit, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle. Announcements of the contracts for St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver and Seattle are expected early today. One of the officials of the New York office has been sent to the southern territory to arrange for exchanges in Atlanta and either Dallas or New Orleans.

Educational’s new exchange system marks something new in motion picture distribution in that local exhibitor interests own a portion of the stock in each office, though the control of the entire exchange office is vested in the parent company. This system is expected to have the result of increasing the 1st day, profit and assuring the exhibitor of the fullest cooperation, while the fact that Educational itself retains control over the maintenance, exhibits and purchase opportunity. Each exchange will be under the direct supervision of a district sales management in New York and Chicago and will receive the entire exploitation and exhibitor service from the main office.

Some weeks ago Educational decided to discontinue its service through the independent exchanges which have been handling its releases and therefore the pictures that have accumulated in the meantime have not been placed on the market. The company will start distribution through its own exchange service with what is claimed to be far greater number of new short subjects ever offered by any organization. These prints, with a necessity, be new, yet at the same time be in harmony with our plan of exploitation. We have already taken advantage of the benefit of the pre-release showings at leading New York theatres and have seen the various films and have been impressed by the values in the trade press.

"We feel that we have completed an epoch in our organization," said E. W. Hammons, vice president and general manager, in making the announcement. "We Educational began its activities it was generally regarded as an experiment though we were convinced that there was a demand for a company before the company was organized. We have always looked forward to the day when we could have our own distribution organization, but we have had to wait until there was a volume of product that warranted the establishment of these offices. We first had to establish the merit of our own product and then to win for it a place in the public estimation. We now believe that the fruits of this labor will be seen in the coming months, and we are confident that the educational exchange system will be a complete success.

The corporation is planning to continue its program of excellence and will continue to offer a wide variety of films suited to the needs of the educational market. The company is also in the process of developing new programs tailored specifically to the needs of educational institutions. With the establishment of the exchange system, Educational Films Corporation is poised to become a major player in the educational film market.

METRO
Summer Releases Are Named

WITH production sources for next season guaranteed to new sub-franchise owners in Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for contracts on which stars and directors are now working, and which provide what exhibitor officials of the company term "the most sanguine advance expectations in feature picture annals," announcement is made this week by Frank Holm of the announcement of seven productions to be released as the prelude to the fall season.

The total of releases for the 1920-1921 period, to be made under the sub-franchise plan, will give exhibitor members productions from more than a dozen studios devoting their entire time and facilities to the making of First National attractions.

This schedule is subject to increase by the inclusion of copyright protection rights to independent special feature attractions which may be offered to Associated First National by producers other than those now affiliated with it.

Each studio organization contracts with the stars, directors and producers whereby the shows assigned to the independent exhibitors by Circuit official, is arranging its activity to comply, as nearly as possible, with the framing schedules of exhibitors by the exhibitors. In no case will production units identified with Associated First National be obliged, by contract demand of exhibitors, to speed their work or stress the normal facilities of their staffs to meet the screening requirements of the franchise owners.

The first of the summer releases in "The Yellow Typhoon," an adaptation of the story by Harold McGrath, and starring Anita Stew- art. This was released in the first week of May and has not been offered for the so-called summer season. Following this will be "The Splen- did," a story of the management of a strong cast headed by Henry B. Walthall and presented by Mayflower. This, according to present plans, will be given in its first run presentations on May 31st.

Constance Talmadge will have a small part in the production of "Hemingway" in which she will star for the first time in her series for First National. This will be "The Perfect Woman," a production scheduled for release about the 28th of June.

To Norma Talmadge falls the distinction of starring in the only production the Circuit will offer during July. This will be "Yes or No," and has been placed on the schedule for July 21st. August, when the fall season begins to get under way, will bring three features into regular exhibition. The first of these will be "Curtain," starring Katherine MacDonald. It is an adaptation of the story of the same title, written by Rina Weinman and published in the Saturday Evening Post. It is listed for August 2nd. On August 19th the first run house will present the sequel to "The Victor" production for First National, entitled "The Jack Knife Man," from the story of the same name by Ellis Parker Butler.

Another important release for the month will be on August 23rd, when the initial First National attraction from Charles Ray will be available to exhibitor members.

This is the color version of the stage classic, "Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway," which its author, Ruth McEwen, has made the equivalent of five features, and which, in screen form, will realize a few hundred more legacies of six figures proportions.

The schedules for September, October, November and December are expected to be completed as the stars and producers have had an opportunity to determine what will be a safe and reasonable summer load for each of the stories obtained for fall and winter release.

First contracts pledge the lead in independent features, who will hold subfranchises in Associated First National fall productions from the independent sources: Norma and Constance Talmadge, Charles Chaplin, Marion Davies, Katherine MacDonald, Charles Ray, Mack Sennett, Whim- man Bennett, who is producing a series of four pictures staring Johnnie Walker and the Dwan, Raoul Walsh, Sydney Franklin, M.G.M., and Mrs. Carter De Haven, Mildred Harris, Chaplin, Anita Stewart, King Vidor and Henry Lehrman.

Seven Pictures on First National Schedule

Career of Fox Star Reviewed

HE elevation of Eileen Percy to stardom by William Fox is made the subject of statements just issued from the Fox offices. Miss Percy's career before the camera is traced with considerable detail and some of those who have worked with her in the past. The first of those to do with her success on the screen.

The Fox statement follows:

"For nearly three years Miss Percy has been playing the leading female roles opposite the biggest male stars in pictures. She started in pictures as leading woman to Douglas Fairbanks, and did four features with that star; during the past year she has been a welcome addition to the screen from the Broadway stage.

"Here is a beauty of the sort sometimes referred to as charming, and cream. Her eyes are large, round, grey-blue and wide apart, high cheeks, high developed arti- culate sense and depth of feeling. It was her youthful beauty which gained for her in New York City the oppor- tunity to appear in the famous Mather- ing fairy tale "The Bluebird," which made her real as the heart of the metropolis at the Century theatre. Here and on the road, for a period of three years, the refresh- ing star was麾 to the delight of every child part in The Blue- bird, including Tybalt and Myhill, the two child principals about whom the story is woven.

Career of Fox Star Reviewed

Statement Recalls Past Work of New Star, Eileen Percy

Eileen Percy went into Elsie Janis' company, then playing "The Lady or the Slip- per. Here she was a member of the Joan Family, and ascribed her success to her specialty dancing and singing.

"This experience stood the new Fox star in good stead during her early screen career; but it was her experience in both the musical comedy and the straight dramatic field that really gained her Fox work she has done and which she now has before her in Fox productions.

"With the late Gaby Deslys, Miss Percy made a distinct hit in musical numbers, and her dancing is still re- membered by Broadway and those who keep pace with the season's successes. Later she played the doped girl in Mary Nash and Held (Holly in The Man Who Came Back); this last she was engaged in the midnight show at the Folies. Recently Harrison Fisher selected Eileen Percy for one of his favorite creations, Mildred of the Girl Series, and her beauty has adorned many magazines and periodicals, which have brought her admirers from the far corners of the globe. It was while she was appearing at the Century Roof that she was discovered by a well- known screen star and signed up for series of film features.

"With the success she has achieved in the parts she has already assumed before the camera, she is expected, in time, to fill the minds of those who know, as to the outcome of the decision by William Fox to make her a star.

"Besides appearing as leading woman in 'Wild and Woolly,' 'Down to Earth,' 'The Man From Painted Post,' and 'Reaching For the Moon,' opposite Fair- banks, she carried off high honors with Bert Lytell in 'Hitting the Hour,' won for 'The Bluebird,' and 'One-Thing-At-a-Time O'Day.'

"Eileen Percy has already completed her first starring vehicle for William Fox, it is a screen adaptation of Aline Van Ness Hite's stage success 'Her Honor the Mayor.' This will be announced for release shortly. Already her next two plays have been secured by Fox. They are: 'Myra Meets the Minister,' 'A Post story by F. Scott Fitzgerald, and 'Beware of the Bride,' a novel by Edgar Franklin, which will soon appear and which is now available in most bookstores. She has appeared on every page of one of our most popular magazines. Such a good start for such a charming new star as Eileen Percy.
Art Exhibit Praises F. P.-Lasky Inserts

When the American Institute of Graphic Arts opened its annual exhibition of fine printing, engraving and allied arts at the National Arts Club, New York City, on May 5, the trade paper insert advertisements published by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation were well represented.

Of the many advertisements offered to the judges for exhibition at this showing of the highest and most representative forms of printing art, three trade paper inserts issued by Famous Players for Paramount Arcturus Pictures advertising, were selected.

American Cinema Film Handled by Pioneer

Under the terms of a contact made this week between Walter F. Nichols, president of the American Cinema Corporation and M. J. Hoffman, general manager, of the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, the latter corporation has acquired the sole distribution rights in the State of New York and northern New Jersey of the entire series of American Cinema Productions in the next twelve months. This includes immediate delivery of "The Inner Voice," starring E. K. Lincoln, "Stolen Moments," starring Marguerite Naunara and "His Brother's Keeper," an all-star production, now being completed in the American Cinema Corporation's studio, under the direction of Wilfrid North.

Tracy Novel Near Ready

"Silent Barrier" Being Titled; Author Knighted by King George

"The Silent Barrier," first picture by Sir Louis Tracy to be filmed under the Gibraltar banner by Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., will be ready for preview within a few days. It is now well advanced in the titling stage. The author was knighted by King George of England while the picture was in the process of production.

There are sixteen striking interior sets in "The Silent Barrier," four of these being of unusual beauty. The reception set, in which sixty persons are on the stage at once, is said by Director William Worthington, to be one of the finest interiors of recent film history. This scene alone cost $35,000 to stage and the picture was completed for $130,000. It is a five-reel offering.

Director Worthington is now on his way to California where he is to direct Leah Baird's next picture play. He was accompanied on his journey by his assistant, William J. Ryan, Robert S. Stevens, technical expert of the Gibraltar forces and Virgil Miller, staff cameraman.

"The Silent Barrier," includes Sheldon Lewis, Ada Rehan and Blanche Walsh, Gladys Hulette and Donald Cameron, who played the male lead in "East is West," and Corrine Barker.

Pathe Ads a Huge Success

Exhibitors Compliment Officials on Campaign for "The Third Eye"

The Pathe branch offices have been highly complimented by exhibitors for the service they have rendered in connection with "The Third Eye," the fifteen episode serial which has been elected to succeed "Daredevil Jack" on Pathe's schedule.

Manager Stombaugh, of the Minneapolis branch reports that the twenty-four sheet poster has made a big "hit" with the exhibitors in his territory. It is in three colors, showing a striking handling of red, yellow and blue. The paper, caption cards and other advance matter have been in the hands of exchanges for some time now and exhibitors who have, already booked "The Third Eye" were supplied the means with which to open up their campaigns immediately, an item of high importance to the showman.

In addition to the extensive billboard advertising campaign mapped out for "The Third Eye," Pathe has made a large money appropriation for special newspaper advertising. The method to be adopted in distributing this newspaper advertising applies a co-operative scheme between the exhibitor proper and the exchanges.

George L. Sargent Will Direct Alice Joyce

George L. Sargent is Alice Joyce's new director at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio. Mr. Sargent was engaged by Albert E. Smith to direct the production of "The Prey," to follow the Alice Joyce special production, "Dollars and the Woman," which will be released this month.

Bryant Washburn Seen in Farce Comedy

Bryant Washburn comes back to make things merry for motion picture patrons in the Paramount-Arcafaert version of a famous old farce-comedy, "Mrs. Temple's Telegram." The release date of which is May 9. Washburn's current vehicle was booked for the present week at the Rialto theatre, New York. The authors of "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" were Frank Wyatt and William Morris, both of the actors as well as playwrights.

Mr. Washburn's role is that of Jack Temple. Wanda Hawley, who has the role of Mrs. Temple, is featured, as is Walter Hiers in the role of Frank Phillips. The siren and clever character roles are interpreted by Sylvia Ashton, Leo White and Anne Schaefer. James Cruze directed the production.

Harry I. Day Resigns from Cosmopolitan

Harry I. Day, for the past year director of advertising and publicity for Cosmopolitan Productions, has tendered his resignation effective June 1. Mr. Day is now engaged in associating himself in an executive capacity with a new combination, details of which will be announced later.

Day has handled some extensive advertising campaigns for Cosmopolitan Productions, among them the campaign for "The Miracle of Love," "The Cinema Murder," "April Folly," and "Humoresque."

American Film Wins in Central America

American films have wrested supremacy from French and Italian films in Central America and the northern part of South America, said Monroe Isen on the eve of sailing for Panama several days ago to resume his duties as manager of Universal's branch office in the Republic of Panama. Six months ago, said, French films were all the rage and were shown almost to the exclusion of the standard American product.
NOT in vain did Robertson-Cole promote the film in America “the greatest picture to which it so far has put its smite” in “The Fortune Teller,” the Albert Capellani triumph, with Marjorie Rambeau as its star, if the New York press is to be believed.

Judge on the heels of the unanimous applause which was given the Sir Ernest Shackleton South Pole picture, which opened at the Broadway last season, in a picture production-flattering notices for the second Robertson-Cole picture. The best support which the Capellani machine “so far done” is the verdict of the New York papers for “The Fortune Teller” at the opening of its engagement at the R. S. Moss Broadway theatre.

The papers emphasize particularly the pictures which are一律 in presenting by Robertson-Cole in presenting the picture. “The Fortune Teller” is a production of the greatest human appeal, telling a story which relates itself deep appeal to the heart for its effects. So, in this way, the general support which the picture by the press points out its future as a box office attraction, and gives to the man, seeking to look in the eye with the broadness of the picture, the support of an unbiased force.

“The Fortune Teller,” declared by the French master director, Albert Capellani, to be the best picture he has made, is released by Robertson-Cole as the first of a series of productions to set a new standard for Robertson-Cole attractions, and to give an idea of the quality of the for the exhibitor when the new contracts providing for a greater length of time, and a greater expenditure on each picture begin to yield products.

“The Evening Mail,” a newspaper which pays especial attention to the new and meritorious things of the screen, led off its motion picture column, on the next day after the opening, with a very flattering review of “The Fortune Teller.”

The Mail said: “At the Broadway theatre, Marjorie Rambeau, who is at present starring in ‘The Sign of the Don’ at the Republic theatre, can be seen on the screen this week in the same role that she created on the stage in the ‘Fortune Teller,’ adapted to the celluloid by Albert Capellani. As a stage offering, Princess Wallack, Zazu Pitts in “The Heart of Twenty,” a Robertson-Cole picture.

The Spring of the new productions released under the Pathe banner, according to committee reports, “Simple Souls” is from the novel by John Hastings Turner and was especially selected for Miss Sweet. She is seen in the role of the Eastern girl—a soul so simple that even marrying a Duke doesn’t impress her or overburden her with love. He is just another simple soul to her and the Duke himself is a regular fellow who knows he is a simple soul. But his relatives are sure they have a monopoly on all the blue blood in the world and therefore hangs the tale.

In a deliciously humorous way the two simple souls confound the aristocrats who worry about them and who are sure that every picture is certain to find great favor in this country because of its exposure of the sins of aristocracy, but which instead would love story, and an appealingly sympathetic revelation of the sweetness of a simple heart.

The picture will be released on May 23rd and already a number of advance contracts have been released. The result of the contracts is from exhibitors who have played the previous productions but there are several who were delayed in coming on the others and who desire to be on the most up-to-date one.
Handbook on Films Issued
General Information in Booklet Published by Dept. of Interior

A necessary step in the encouragement of the schools of the country to devote more attention to motion pictures has just been taken by the Bureau of Education of the Department of the Interior with the issuance of a booklet entitled "Motion Pictures and Motion Picture Equipment." It is a handbook of information that will be especially valuable to all of those who are seeking to get technical knowledge of motion picture exhibition, since it explains the technicalities in a popular manner. An interesting portion of the booklet is devoted to the nomenclature of industry. The booklet was written by Mr. Carl Anderson, now with the Motion Picture Corporation, during the period that he was serving with the Bureau of Education in connection with F. W. Reynolds, the extension division of the University of Utah.

It is interesting to note that the booklet was prepared with the direct purpose of answering the hundreds of inquiries that were received by the bureau after a questionnaire seeking motion-picture information had been sent out. Mr. Anderson carefully compiled these inquiries and then set out to answer them, the result being that the booklet supplies practically all of the information that should be sought by one about to engage in the non-theatrical exhibition of motion pictures.

One of the first subjects is the difference between the standard and narrow width films, it being made clear that the film furnished by the section of visual instruction is standard and cannot be used in the odd-sized machines. Attention is also given to the throw of the picture, the adaptability of various currents explained, and many details of the actual projection of pictures given.

Realart Sets B'way Record
Twelve Broadway Showings in a Row Gives Realart Clean Sweep

The record for Broadway runs now being established by Realart took a sudden spurt this week when another new production was booked for big Rialto houses, jumping the total from nine in a row to twelve. As a result the month of May will see Realart paper plastered over the nearly White in quite a liberal fashion. The young actress in the swing stage age Hotel building is scheduled to make a couple of complete loops in celebration of this.

"Sinners," which was the star boarder at the Capitol theatre during the week of April 25th was listed in the Realart record books as Number Eight. A short time ago "The Stolen Kiss" was on the verge of breaking the Rialto theatre for a week. It holds a place in history as the ninth rung in Realart's ladder of Broadway successes.

For a day the record remained there until this week when Realart introduced a new Mayflower special production called "A Retrieved Euthan." After seeing it Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol theatre, called for a fountain pen and a contract and ordered it wrapped up and sent to his big playhouse.

The Deep Purple, an R. A. Walsh production, presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, occupied the Capitol during the week of May 2nd. It is an adaptation of the famous stage success of a decade ago by Paul Armstrong and Wilton Mizen.

Suddenly tipped Dr. Hugo Riesman off that "Miss Hobbs," Wanda Hawley's first Realart picture was to be a winner. He followed the tip up and took a contract for the production for the Rialto theatre during the week of June 6th.

Manager of National Exchanges on Tour
Hunter Bennett, vice-president and general manager of National Exchanges, Inc., leaves New York next week on an extended trip embracing the principal exchange centers throughout the country. Mr. Bennett's trip is for the purpose of completing negotiations for franchises in National Exchanges, Inc., and study conditions on the ground first hand.

Mr. Bennett stated that his organization, which is receiving financial backing from the Johnson & Hopkins Company, intends to release a limited schedule of high-class productions which will be strongly exploited.

"The Harvest Moon" is Given Preview
A preview of "The Harvest Moon," the latest Augustus Thomas drama to be filmed by Detrich-Bick, Inc., for Gibraltor Pictures, and starring Doris Kenyon, was given last Monday night at the Detroit theatre, Detroit, Mich., under novel conditions. The occasion developed into a sort of professional reunion, Miss Kenyon making a speech, after the showing, followed by Mr. Cumberland, who plays in the opposite role.

Tom Moore Will Star in Mystery Farce
Word is received from the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, California that the mystery farce, "Stop Thief!" will soon be placed in production with Tom Moore as the star. In this, as in "Officer 666," which he has just completed, Moore will be directed by Harry Beaumont. Although the cast for "Stop Thief!" has not yet been selected, it is announced that Hazel Dalby will be the star's leading woman.

In common with "Officer 666," "Stop Thief!" has the distinction of being one of the most successful plays ever staged by Cohan & Harris. It ran for a full year at the Curitiz theatre, New York, where it was first presented in the fall of 1913.

HAROLD LLOYD
in AN EASTERN WESTERNER
A TWO REEL COMEDY

Listen!
Harold Lloyd is a giant in filmdom to-day.
His comedies are generally billed bigger than the feature, because they pull bigger than the feature.
Just read a few of the comments on the last Lloyd comedy, "Haunted Spooks":
"One of the funniest and cleverest comedies yet registered."
——Morning Telegraph.
"A word of blessing for 'Haunted Spooks.' Hilarious enough to cause even a medium to cease for the time being to take ghosts seriously."—N. Y. Sun.
"Astonishingly fresh and diverting."—N. Y. Tribune.
"The audience roared. It's the funniest comedy of the season."
——N. Y. Evening Sun.
"Lloyd made a hit."—N. Y. Globe.
"Brightest spot on the Strand program this week. 'Haunted Spooks' brought down the house."—Wid's.
"Contains a flock of snickers. An object lesson to comedy producers."—Variety.
"Brightest spot on the Rivoli program. Comedy in the real sense."—Variety.
"The man who discovered Harold Lloyd deserves a vote of thanks. If you never heard laughter, come in sales you will when you see his latest comedy."—Minneapolis Tribune.
"Haunted Spooks' attains the supreme heights of comedy. Not an inch of wasted film. Every scene counts as a laugh. The gags are startling, original and sidesplitting. Lloyd is a big league comedian, his company is big league and whoever does the directing is big league."—Wid's.
Can the daughter of "common" parents marry the blue-blooded millionaire and both be happy?

Can the one step up without... the other stepping down? Or is similarity of soul the only thing that counts?

The Reason Why

WHY does the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. advertise when it is the busiest poster producing concern in the world, and when we are now working night and day to keep even with our orders? We feel that we owe it both to the buyer of posters and ourselves to advertise. Ours is an educational advertising campaign undertaken as a mutual protection against the mediocre poster. We wish to implant into the poster buyer's mind the highest possible standard, wherewith he will judge all posters. Then we will have achieved that purpose.

Few people stop to consider that advertising is one of the great arts—and that poster advertising is its highest and most complex development. Indeed it is so highly complex that it is not possible for the average business man to have an expert knowledge of the qualities of posters, although he realizes perfectly well the great importance of having good ones. It is that fact which enables a lot of lithographers, advertising agents and publicity men to put over a lot of stuff that is quite valueless. This is pure waste, and these advertisements are written in an effort to overcome that waste!

The ultimate result of this campaign will be to convince the buyer that there are just two ways of getting great posters. One way is by making a life long study of the subject—the other way is to insist upon having RITCHEY posters!

Why the Guarantee?

In two cities, Baltimore and Spokane, exhibitor action that is almost of a concerted nature has blocked the course of percentage booking. Other sections, while not reporting definite action, give signs of a growing storm of opposition to percentage.

We can't say, after looking at many forms of contract on percentage, that we can blame exhibitors.

Percentage, in theory, means a gamble—a gamble in which both parties share. Percentage, in the show game, called for both parties to take a showman's gamble.

But there is little of the showman about most of the contracts we see—with their large guarantee, usually equal to or in excess of the amount an exhibitor would consider a fair rental for the production.

Percentage will not be hastened on such a basis.

Percentage must mean equity—else there will be no percentage.

The Right Idea

J. WILLIAMS saw deep into the seat of much of the exhibitors' troubles when he declared at Chicago, "Let your majority rule. Be good soldiers. Bury your personal whims and stand by your leaders as long as the majority votes them your leaders. If you don't like them, throw them out—if the majority feels the way you do."

Minority cantankerousness has been the rock on which national exhibitor organization has always foundered.

But there are two kinds of majorities in exhibitor bodies. There is the supposed majority created by credentials committees, steam rollers, convenient proxies, etc. There is the real, all-wool majority of theater-owning exhibitors, each having his say, and no one else having a word.

Mr. Williams points the way; let someone else bar the way to politics; and then—may the majority rule.

The Direct Route

EVERYTHING in the picture business is tending towards direct action. Now it is the Associated Producers who have decided, after months of propositions from various other organizations, to establish their own distributing system.

Chicago's High-light

The outstanding point of the Chicago convention of independent exhibitors was the evident and impressive earnestness of those present, the sincere desire for a real national organization.

Politics may have attempted to enter the scene, but the stay was short. And as the convention found its footing and gathered coherent shape, personalities and politics beat a hasty retreat.

No self-seeker could stand long against the exhibitors of the South, presenting facts and figures from their own experience to show the need of protective, national organization. No politician could stand unabashed before the sincere self-effacing attitude of such men as Sig Samuels and Willard Patterson, who called the convention, or of Frank Rembusch, who shouldered the burden of chairmanship.

If the Cleveland convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association profits by the addition of the energetic men who gathered in Chicago, if, out of the three days session in June, there emerges a solidified national organization—exhibitors will be grateful for the calibre of their representatives in Chicago.

Kohn Plans More Comedies
Will Produce Series of Ten a Year to Fill Exhibitors' Demand

WITH a definite program already mapped out, Martin H. Kohn, head of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, Inc., announces that he will produce a series of ten comedies, costing $25,000 or more, each year in addition to his popular priced short subjects starring "Smiling Bill" Jones and Polly Moran.

With the larger producing and distributing organizations breaking away from two-reel comedies and the larger two-reel producers making five-reel comedies, there is an appalling shortage of high-quality comedies for the theatres in the larger cities," states Mr. Kohn, "and that shortage must be filled." With two of the largest programs without a single comedy release, and a third about to withdraw its last remaining short subject, I firmly believe that unless we independents make up this shortage there will be an awful howl, both from exhibitors and from the patrons.

"I don't care to discuss why the large distributors are 'laying off:' subject, but I can see the exhibitors angle and he wants comedies for his bill of fare and is willing to pay the price for the class of pictures his customers demand."

Lejaren a Hiller Takes Up Production Work
Lejaren a Hiller, illustrator and painter, whose work is familiar to magazine readers, is the latest knight of the brush and palette to turn his art "moviewards." His first production, "The Sleep of Cynba Rogel," a seven-reel drama of romance and intrigue, will be ready for a trade showing in a few weeks. This is the first picture of a series that Mr. Hiller will make under the general title of "Never Told Tales of a Studio." Helen Gardner will be featured in "The Sleep of Cynba Rogel."

Falkner-Tyrol, Inc., to Produce Pictures
A new production corporation under the firm name of Falkner-Tyrol, Inc., has opened offices at 117 West 46th Street, New York, Fred W. Falkner is the president and general manager, and Jacques Tyrol is the secretary and treasurer. The company, which is incorporated for $200,000, plans to make pictures only of the special type which have had a long run on Broadway or legitimate plays. According to Mr. Tyrol, it is planned to make four pictures a year, each picture to have special exploitation and to be publicized with a heavy advertising campaign.

Arrow Film Company Moves Its Office
W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, announced that his company has found it necessary to make another move. Larger quarters have been secured on the fourth floor of the Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City, just below those formerly occupied.

Pearl White, the William Fox star who returns from abroad this week to begin production of a new feature for the Fox program under Charles Gilbey's direction.

Variety and Splendor in Koskim Serial
Lavish sets will be one of the features of "The Hope Diamond Mystery," a serial made for Koskim Film, Inc. Several of the episodes are laid in India in the sixteenth century and the splendor of Hindu temples and Indian bazaars is said to have been faithfully reproduced.

The story, which was written by May Yoke, traces the sinister history of the Hope diamond, which causes death and sorrow to follow in its wake. There is plenty of variety of setting, for the serial opens in India, shifts to America, then to England, and finally returns to India in the sixteenth century. May Yoke was a recent visitor at the studios in Hollywood, where she met Director Stuart Paton and members of the company. She will herself appear in several episodes.

This is the first time George Klein, president of Koskim Films, has produced a serial since "Gloria's Romance," with WillBurke as star.

New Officers Elected by Pioneer Film

A. E. Lefcourt has been elected to the presidency of the Pioneer Film Corporation. Mr. Lefcourt is one of the most successful figures in New York business and financial circles. M. H. Hoffman has been elected vice-president and still remains active directing head as general manager. The other officers elected recently were Louis Haas, secretary and treasurer, and Morris Rose, vice-president.

During the past year the number of exchange which the Pioneer Film product has increased from two in number to twenty and to be found in every exchange center in the United States and Canada. The volume of business handled by the Pioneer organization for the month of April more than doubles that of any previous month in the history of the corporation.

"Empty Arms" Rights Go to Pioneer Film
After bidding among several New York State buyers, the film "Empty Arms" went to the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, who have acquired the rights for New York State, including Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

The Pioneer Film Corporation which is located at 150 West 46th street, New York, requests all managers in their territory to address them directly. At the present moment, scores of theatres are communicating with the Photoplay Libraries, Inc.

Merit Film Exchanges Open New Branches

Franklyn Farnum Will Be Starred in Series

With his return from the coast after a two week’s stay with Colonel William N. Selig, Jack Weinberg, president of the Canyon Pictures Corporation, announces that a deal has been consummated by which Colonel Selig will produce a series of six Franklyn Farnum features, for which the deal involves $350,000 and production will be started May 24.

Mr. Farnum is at present working out the details of his first production, and has secured a well-known story title of which will be announced later. Each of the series will present this popular star in his famous western parts, while the locales will vary in the East and West, with Mr. Farnum equally able to portray either part.

Territory Selling For “Illiterate Digest”

Joe Braudi, Eastern representative of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, Inc., by special arrangement with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, are producing the weekly series, “Illiterate Digest,” by Will Rogers. Reports that the demand for this short subject is proving to be greater than all expectations.

“The Illiterate Digest” features the clever quips and gags of the famous N. Y. Police star and also shows him in action, performing the stunts which have made him famous.

National Film Studios Prepare For Action

There is a great change apparent in the studios of the National Film Corporation of America since C. A. Willard, the National’s new general manager, assumed charge of the plant on the west coast. Mr. Willard, states a communication from the National studios, has “cleared decks for action,” and recently, for a contract, promises Mr. Willard, production on several new features, short subjects and well under way.

A total of eleven units will be busy at that time, according to the same news source.

Bennett Story Bought By Art-O-Graph Film

According to an announcement of Jay Casey, president and general manager of the Art-O-Graph Film Company, his company recently closed a deal with Bennett who has the picture rights to “Out of the Depths,” a Robert Ames Bennett story. Dog To Be Starred In Unique Film Comedy

What is said to be the most unique comedy of the year will be the offering of the Unique Films, Inc., starring Braco, known industry slang with the human brain.” Preparations are under way to start production on the first of these series of two reel comedies and the shooting will begin about May 10th.

Screen Craft to Sign Stars

President Lawson to Visit New York and May Close Contracts

H. M. LAWSON, president and general-manager of Screen Crafts, Inc., one of the newest organizations of film producers, contemplates a trip to New York soon for the purpose of communicating with certain well known artists of the screen, whom he plans to bring back with him to his studios in Cuyler, Cal. At the same time he will negotiate release contracts and discuss plans with New York headquarters of his company for the launching of a tremendous exploitation campaign for forthcoming Screen Crafts productions, now in the making at the company’s studio.

At present Screen Crafts has two companies busily engaged in the production of plays for the screen, one being an all-star company headed by Bob McKim and Rhea Mitchell, which is making “The Great Physicist,” a seven-reel metaphysical story, under the direction of Chadwick Ayres, and the other headed by Bumps Adams, who is featured in a series of two-reel athletic comedies.

While no definite announcement is at present issued by President Lawson, it is thought he will offer contracts to a number of popular screen artists in the Eastern metropolis with whom it is known he has been in almost daily correspondence during the past few weeks. Mr. Lawson states, however, that it is the plan and purpose of his organization to make its studio one of the leading film emporia on the West coast and four and possibly five companies will soon be engaged in production there, he declares.

“Great Physician” to be Ready in Ninety Days

“The Great Physician,” a Screen Crafts picture, is to be the first of a series of three productions of the same general character to be made during the year.

Kohn Extends Production

Production Schedule to Include New Series of Ten Comedy Films

WITH a definite program already mapped out, Marion H. Kohn, head of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, Inc., announces that he will produce a series of ten comedies costing $50,000 for each, aside to his popular-priced short subjects, starring “Smiling Bill” Jones and Poli Moran.

“With two of the foremost programs without a single comedy release, and a third about to withdraw its last remaining short subject, I firmly believe that unless we independent make up this shortage there will be an awful howl, both from the exhibitors and from the patrons. I don’t care to discuss why the larger distributors are ‘laying off’ the short subject, but I can see the exhibitor’s angle, and he wants comedies for his bill of fare and is willing to pay the price for the class of pictures his customers demand.

“I talked with the foremost exhibitor in California on the short subject question, and he told me only last week that he is absolutely at the mercy of the short subject distributors, simply because there is a dearth of good films of this character and because he must give his patrons comedies along with features.”
Pioneer Records Broken by "Jekyll and Hyde"

Pioneer's version of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde in which Sheldon Lewis plays the stellar roles has broken all previous records during the month of April. The contract department at the Pioneer home office in New York, has just fulfilled their tabulation of the bookings played during April, which shows that in each of the twenty Pioneer exchanges throughout the country, "Jekyll and Hyde" outdid all the other released both in the number of showings as well as the gross receipts.

Another Polly Moran Comedy is Ready

The second of the series of two-reel Polly Moran Comedies being produced by the Marion H. Kohl Productions, is now ready for release, according to an announcement from Joe Brandt, eastern representative of the company.

Big Return Business on "The River's End"

A high water mark in rebookings and return dates that the world is in confidence is anticipated by J. R. Grafinger, in charge of sales for a Marshall Nelan Productions, on "The River's End."

L. Hiller Likes "Mary's Attic"

A significant announcement this week in connection with the great comedy feature, "Up in Mary's Attic," which is being released by Fine Art Pictures, Inc., on the independent market, is the fact that L. L. Hiller has purchased a substantial interest in this big production. Mr. Hiller's judgment is another endorsement of the magnitude and huge possibilities for the independent buyer, with "Up in Mary's Attic."

"During all my experience in the state right field," says Mr. Hiller, "I have never seen a picture which contains the colossal box office possibilities of this great comedy feature, 'Up in Mary's Attic.' And I have been identified with some of the biggest productions in the field. 'Up in Mary's Attic' arouses my enthusiasm from the very first. It contains every element of success and I feel, and am in a position to know, that it is the greatest comedy feature ever released. In fact, it is more than a comedy. It runs the gamut of every human emotion. It registers a big human appeal without the hackneyed triangle love affair. It brings forth genuine hearty laughter without the slapstick buffoonery that is becoming so tiresome to a public saturated with nonsense of this kind. It holds the interest from first to last without effort and the usual make-shifts.

Reelcraft Expands Its Facilities

The demand for Reelcraft short subjects exceeds the present supply, according to the announcement of R. C. Cooper, president of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, who has just returned to New York after a three-weeks' trip visiting the different Reelcraft Exchanges and their allied distributors in the eastern and central states. The Standard Film Service of Cleveland, Cincinnati, and Detroit; the S. & S. Film Supply Company of Pittsburg; the Dooley Exchanges, Inc., of Buffalo and Syracuse; the R. D. Marson Attractions of Boston, all distributors of Reelcraft releases, and the managers of the Reelcraft branches in New York, Chicago, Milwaukee, Indianapolis and Minneapolis, report an unprecedented number of requests for short subjects.

During convention week in Chicago, a conference of Reelcraft managers was held at the Chicago office. Managers Carl Harthill, of the Chicago branch; George Wilson of the Philadelphia branch; Larry Stiles, of the Milwaukee branch, Harry Muir, of the Minneapolis branch; Julius Singer, of the New York branch, and Erskine J. Ireland in Charge of Productions at the Chicago Studio were present with President R. C. Cooper, at which time many important matters concerning Reelcraft distribution were considered. The future plans of the producing department were outlined to the managers.

Discussion relative to the coming series of educational pictures to be made by Reelcraft brought forth many interesting facts, not generally known. It appears from facts offered, that the United States Department of Agriculture is one of the largest buyers of educational educational subjects in the United States, not conforming the subjects to one and two reels, but owning at least one hundred feature length educational films. Another picture which has been made by Reelcraft brought forth from cotton planters in certain sections a hundred subjects have been filmed, ranging from a one-reel educational, titled "Why Eat Cotton Seeds" to a valuable photographic illustration of how to make hens lay more eggs. Moreover, these educational films are being produced in such a manner as to be not only instructive but graphically interesting as well. Reelcraft plans its Educational numbers to be along these same interesting lines.

Increased production at the West Coast Studio has complicated Studio Manager Nat Spitzer to build addition to the studio to accommodate Reelcraft producing companies. Three companies are working at the Hollywood studio, each company having its own production unit. Texas Guinan is busy making a series of two-reel Western dramas and Billy Franiey, under the direction of George Jiske is producing a series of one-reel comedies, and has been working nights and Sundays endeavoring to have some productions completed before May 17th, which has been set for the first release. Milburn Moranti is at work on a series of two-reel comedies, while Alace Howell is producing her series of two-reel comedies. Reelcraft officials spent considerable time at the Hollywood Studio filming the series for an additional production unit. The out-town managers were kept busy directing films from their local territories, showing them around the studio while Alice Howell was making her "Cinderella Cinderella" production. The projection room was also running overtime screening the coming releases.

News Notes from the West Coast

By J. C. Jessen

ROBERTSON-COLE

THERE is but one point of similarity in the four Robertson-Cole productions, and that is the fact that the stars in all of these—Sessue Hayakawa, Dustin Fairman, Fred Stroey and Bessie Barriscale—all play dual role parts.

Sessue Hayakawa this week worked in the final scene for his sixteenth and last production under the original contract, which is titled "An Arabio Katjil." This is a story of adventure in Egypt, directed by Charles Swickard, which has a big cast including Lillian Hall, Jean Acker, Marie Pave, Elaine Hanisoune, Harvey Clark, Fred Jones, Roy Colston and Thomas Dattle. Mr. Hayakawa departed for New York this week, his first trip east in five years. While in the city he will spend several days at Philadelphia where he will make personal appearances at first-run theatres showing his productions.

Up on Hayakawa's return to Los Angeles, work will be started on the very well known play by Frances Parkinson, "The Gay Life." This is a Chinese story placed under option a long time ago, as the result of many requests from picture lovers to see Hayakawa in this production. It is to be made as a big special, as well as all of the future Hayakawa subjects, this star has been allotted six productions each year.

Colin Campbell is making the final scenes for the initial Robertson-Cole Dustin Fairman production, "Big Happiness," which is an adaptation from the story of the English author known as "Pan." Supporting Fairman in this dual role play are Kathryn Adams, Troth Leonard, Malatesta, Violet Schram, William Brown, and Aggie Herrington. As soon as the shoot is ended, producer Gordon Thalberg will go to the motion-picture company to go the finer quality for exteriors, and it is an adaptation from the novel, "The Trail of The Aze."

The initial Robertson-Cole release starring Ed Storpy is now completely edited, and it is expected will be released shortly. The picture is titled, "Moon Madness," which is from the original photoplay by J. Griffith Alexander. Colin Campbell directed this production, and the cast is one made up of exceptionally well known people, some of the players being Wallace MacDonald, Joseph Swickard, Sam de Graff, William Courtright, Frederick Starr, Little Frankie Lee and Irene Hunt. Continuity will be ready in a few days for the filming of "The Beach of Dreams," which is adapted from the novel of that name written by H. DeVere Saville.

Bessie Bannscalcie is to be starred in bigger productions that will be of the nature of specials, and the first of these is at present known as "Life's Twist," being an adaptation from the magazine story of that name written for the screen by Harvey Gates. Woman, Christy Cabanne is directing this film, and Walter McGrail is the leading man. King Baggot has an important role, and Claire Dubyn is the feminine lead. William V. Mong plays a leading character role, and Trudy Shakam and Martha Mannion make up the cast.

The final scenes have been taken for the third Lew Cody, "The Mischievous Man," by Elmer Forst, directed by James W. Horne. Betty Blythe, Lillian Rambeau, Elinor Jan, Dorothy Wallace, Cleo Ridgeway, Paul Bern, William Sherry and Lloyd Hamilton make up the cast.

After this Picture is now being made for the first Pauline Frederick Robertson-Cole special, and these provide the star with her own individual studio, and are placed in the near future, as all this scenario can be prepared and working organization established.

Our Skimmer is to come to the coast early in June to work in his Robertson-Cole production adapted from his most famous stage play, "Skimut." No details concerning the Skimmer production have been worked out.

The Cinematone Company have contracted to produce a series of "Arne Lupin" stories for Robertson-Cole which will feature Wedgwood, the title character. Script for the first of this series is now being prepared, and will be titled, "The Kid." J. L. Simrak will direct this production.

The Christie Company is giving the "Chuck Sales" picture, "The Smart" and "Storey and Stinnett" it will be shipped cast this week. Plans at this studio provide for the filming of "So Long Leuty." Work will be started in about two weeks.

UNIVERSAL

BEFORE his departure for New York, President Carl Laemmle gave his official O. K. to a production schedule for Universal City that will keep this producing plant busy for the next six weeks. Additional plans will be O. K'd by Mr. Laemmle from New York, prior to July 6th, on which date we will call for a trip of several months in England. Laemmle will be accompanied by his family and several others, the party numbering fifteen in all.

Mr. Laemmle will visit pictures made in the country of the British Isles, giving particular attention to the latter with respect to the presidency of the Universal establishing a producing studio in London. Laemmle will also engage to make contracts with a number of European authors for screen rights on their stories, Irving Thalberg, secretary to President Laemmle, will remain in Los Angeles to represent the president on the advisory board of the production company.

The productions now in the making, which will take the time of the Universal casting staff for the next six weeks are "Marrakes," being directed by Norman Daven and starring Edith Roberts in a South Sea Islands setting, "The Red Lane," being directed by Lynn Reynolds from the Holman story "Road to Marrakes," "The Girl in the Rain," directed by Rollin Sturgeon and starring Ann Cornell, "Fighting Joe," by H. H. Van Loan, starring Harry Carey under the direction of Reeves Eason, and the Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran comedy, "La La Luella," from the musical comedy by Fred Jackson.

Carmel Myers, who was featured in a number of Universal subjects, and who has since been playing in musical comedy in New York, has been secured by Universal, and is returning to this stage some time this month. The first version of this star will work in is titled, "The Case of the Missing Alone," which is from a story by John Colton.

Two other stories have been purchased by Universal. One is "The Isle of Life," by Stephen French Whitman, and the other is the story, "Out of a Clear Sky," which will serve as a vehicle for Edith Roberts.

The Universal is to continue to give particular attention to short subjects and this week added the fifth company which will devote its attention to the making of two reel comedies. The Universal recently purchased the series of stories by Paul Amukier, known under the title of "Spike," and being the adventures of the same character. Leo D. Maloney, well known in films for the past five years, and who has been working as serials as leading man for Helen Holmes and Helen Gibson, has been engaged for six months, to play the first character in this series. Mack Wright, who has been directing two reel subjects for Universal, has been engaged for director of the "Spike" Maloney Company.

"Hoot" Gibson, the Universal comedian who was recently starred in short subjects and serials, will direct himself in forthcoming subjects, and this week began work this week on the first of a series of character. This will be titled "The Fighting Terror." Lee Kohrman, the character actor and star of Universal, who recently came to Los Angeles with a road show attraction, has been engaged by Universal to play in a series of comedies, and working under the direction of John L. Robertson in the filming of the first of this series, and will be titled, "The Last Bottle."

Four other comedy companies are at work in Los Angeles, producing "A Hero 'Newerything," William Watson is producing a two reel Comical comedy; James Davis is making a comedy, a comedy already a favorite in this city, starring "Brownie," the wonder dog, and F. C. Windemere is making a two reel comedy titled, "An Awful Skit."

NATIONAL

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week by C. A. Willats, the new general manager of the National Company, that the companies will be at work at this plant from the next fortnight. In addition to a total of two short subject units, the serial company making "The Son of Tarzan," there will be feature companies put to work on big productions. In the period we have in mind the National has three short feature units working making Buddy Post in "The Son of Tarzan," or Thelma and Edwards comedies, and the serials three units are at work on Marion H. Reel Productions, the list including Cecil Shannon, "Le Roi," and "Smiling" Bill Jones units.

All parts for the cast of "The Son of Tarzan" have been filled with the exception of one, and pro-

"Love Without Question"

HAS created enthusiastic praise wherever shown. Hard boiled New York critics said it was a triumph for all concerned in its making.

YOUR patrons will claim it the most alluring screen story they have ever seen.
SILAS BLACKBURN, an aged and wealthy recluse, resides with his ward, Katherine, and a butler. The man is possessed of a great fear, as it is of impending danger, expression of which causes his ward to worry concerning his welfare.

On a dark and stormy night, Katherine comes to her foster father and finds him extremely nervous and irritable. He informs her that he is going to charge his bill, cutting off his ward and a grandson of whom he disapproves because the young man is dissolute. He accuses both Katherine and his grandson, Robert, of conspiring to secure his money. Katherine denies the accusation and defends Robert, although admitting that there is no longer a romance between them. The old man in anger orders her to her room. Katherine obeys but is unable to rest or sleep owing to a presentiment that something is about to occur. She rises and goes down stairs, there to find that old Silas is about to retire in the abandoned room, so called because it is never used since three generations of the family have met death while sleeping there.

Katherine begs the old man not to spend the night in the room but he insists, giving as a reason that he is afraid to sleep elsewhere. Later, still restless, Katherine and the butler enter the abandoned room and find that the old man is dead, with a pin-like wound at the base of the skull, evidence that he has been murdered.

On the same night Robert, the grandson, is pursuing the path of pleasure in the rooms of an actress. He has been drinking heavily in spite of the protestsations of a friend of the family, supposedly, Carlos Paredes. Paredes, unable to persuade the boy to leave the actress and go to his uncle's home where he has had an appointment, departs, leaving the two people.

In the morning Robert comes to his senses in an abandoned farm house near his uncle's home. In the meantime a detective and the coroner, who happens to be a friend of Katherine's, have been called to the house to look into the mystery of the murder of old Silas. They are making their inquiry, the detective questioning Katherine sharply and inferring that Robert is the guilty person, when the old man has recovered from his attack of aphasia, comes to the house.

He is questioned as to his whereabouts on the previous night and is unable to give an account of his actions. The supposed friend, Paredes, does not attempt to come to his aid. All the persons present, including Robert himself, are suspicious that the boy has had something to do with the murder of his grandfather, although the coroner is inclined to be charitable and suggest that the crime was committed during the attack of aphasia which Robert had experienced.

The detective continues his investigation and mystified as to how the murder was committed in the abandoned room, all doors having been securely locked, determines to sleep in the room. He retires and in the morning is found dead, having been killed in the same manner as was Silas Blackburn. After a few days later, Silas Blackburn is buried and a new detective comes to attempt to unravel the mystery of the double murder. In the meantime Katherine has learned that Paredes is in communication with the actress who had detained Robert on the night of his uncle's murder, and learning of an appointment the two have, goes to the place where they are to meet, accosting both persons of knowing something concerning the murder and expressing her conviction that Robert is innocent and her determination to prove that he is. In the hope of finding clues which will lead to the guilty party, Katherine begins an investigation of her own. She is seen by Robert kneeling about through the forest, and while he keeps the knowledge of himself, begins to worry if she will not be concerned in the murders. That night Robert, in an attempt to learn how the murders have been committed in the abandoned room announcing that he will sleep there, he retires to the room but does not go to bed, sitting near a window through which the moonlight comes strongly through so he can watch the bed in which the two men have come to their death. Late in the night, he sees a hand reach through the wall at the head of the bed and rushing to the spot grasps the arm. The member is that of Katherine, she having opened a secret slide door into the room from the hall. Robert accuses Katherine of having been instrumental in murdering his grandfather and the detective but she denies the acts and upbids him for his lack of faith in her.

The following night old Silas is found sitting in his favorite chair in front of the fireplace. The old man refuses to explain where he has been and expressed anger at the reference that he had died. The coroner who had pronounced the two persons who had slept in the abandoned room dead, now proposes that the grave in which the remains of Silas Blackburn had been laid be opened. This is done and the casket is found to be empty. The mystery is deeper than ever.

Fate now takes a hand in unraveling the mystery. Mario, the actress, comes to the Blackburn home. At the sight of the girl, Silas draws a revolver from his clothing and shoots himself.

Explanations then are forthcoming from the butler, who is an old family servant. On the night of the story, a twin brother of Silas Blackburn's, from whom he had stolen a large sum of money while both were in South America, had come to the house and threatened to expose the old man. The butler had found the brother should remain over night on the plea that a settlement could be agreed upon in the morning. The brother was shown to the abandoned room. While Silas was at the door after leaving his brother inside, Katherine had appeared and disarmed some plans the old man had. He had intended to murder his brother and hide the body, but after telling Katherine that he intended to sleep in the abandoned room himself was forced to let the body of his brother be mistaken for that of himself. He had gone away for a few days but had finally returned. Mario, the actress, was the daughter of Silas's brother. She had known that either her uncle or her father had been killed. She came to the Blackburn home to determine which one it was. Paredes proved to be a lover of Mario who was attempting to aid the girl's father to recover his property from old Silas. Robert and Katherine are reunited, Robert promising to mend his ways.

YOU can't deny that a photo-drama having tense dramatic scenes, a bit of spice, an absorbing story and a talented, beautiful star will fail to draw big business.

THAT'S why you owe it to yourself and your patrons to book this picture. It's made to order to break box office records.

LOBBY DISPLAYS

An effective lobby display, one easily constructed and at a very moderate cost, would be to build a room to represent that which is featured in the picture as the abandoned room from which the story takes its title.

The walls of the room should be covered with some old fashioned, dull looking wall paper which can be used as wallpaper. A single door, preferably of old fashioned design and in colonial style, can be installed as the entrance to the room. On the opposite side from the door a window with small panes of glass and disclosing the fact that the window had not been cleaned long enough would be erected. Old fashioned window curtains and a black and dull blue dress the window. The door and window covering should be of the old fashioned type, with corner blocks and a moulding about the outside, or painted to represent this. The point on the window, door and curtain, should be painted white. On one side of the room an old fashioned, turned post bed should be placed, and the other one, known as a "cord bed" in lieu of springs on which the bed clothing is placed would be best. A striped cotton coverlet of some kind can be placed on the ropes. For a coverlet an old fashioned patch work quilt would be best. Near the window place a chair which will match the bed and general appearance of the room. A rug carpet can be used to advantage on the floor. On the table a tall candle in one of the old time pewter candles should be placed with a pair of "snuffers" along side the candle. For further atmosphere, such articles as pie tins filled with red plush covers, a colored "turkey red" tablecloth for the stand, rag rugs and other hair cloth furniture such as settee, a wardrobe, with old time sheet music lying about, and old pictures in black walnut frames would be best.

If you use a border for your wall paper, which should be done, select one which is wide enough to permit a painting of the title on it, extending on the three sides of the display you erect. If your wall paper looks "new" it would be an easy matter to deaden the new appearance.

WINDOW DISPLAYS

The opportunity for a window display along the lines suggested for use in the lobby is particularly good in connection with furniture stores. The "abandoned room" atmosphere could be attempted on one side of the street or in a modern up to date room in the other end. Appropriate sign cards for these to become a part of the display, and this the "light without question depends on some material comforts, which you think would best cultivate the interest of the people." She abandoned this room to dwell in the other with love without question asked.

Directed by B. A. Rolfe. Adapted from the novel by C. Wadsworth Camp. Produced by Jans Pictures, Inc.

Another plan would be to construct a ball between the two rooms with a wax figure of a man and a woman in the modern room in a position that would suggest she was listening to something that had occurred in the abandoned room. In the abandoned room bed place the wax figure of a man whose face could be made up to represent the character of Silas Blackburn of the picture. This figure would have a wax head suspended over his head with a hat pin protruding. Use a sign which reads: "Who Killed Silas Blackburn?" Then ask the question of "Love Without Question" the play off play feature plays. This complete picture would be a strong feature for the sale of the picture.

The picture being an adaptation of C. Wadsworth Camp's popular mystery novel, "The Abandoned Room," will be able to arrange for window displays with bookstores in which your advertising will figure. Arrange as many of these as you can using stills from the picture and attractive sign cards as a basis of your portion of the display.

UTILIZE THE LIBRARIES

Some time before your opening date purchase a goodly number of copies of the novel and place them with the different libraries in your city. In your newspaper advertising announce that you have presented the books in order that every person who desires to read the novel before seeing the picture may have an opportunity to do so. Keep harping on this up to the time you open with the feature.

HOW TO STAGE A CONTEST

If you desire to hold a contest for which you can offer substantial prizes you are given an opportunity in the fact that this is a mystery story. Invite your patrons to compete by sending them the novel and then from the point where the second murder has been committed write an original solution of the mystery as to who is guilty, how the crimes could have been committed, with plausible reason back and make it give an outline of a new way to develop the plot from this point. State that there are a number of opportunities for explaining how the men could have been killed and the assistants escaped unneccessed, for logically telling how Silas Blackburn could apparently have been hurt and still remain alive. It might be well to print a synopsis of the story up to the point of the solution of the mystery and offer your prizes for a completion of the story in the way the various connective could it might have been finished.

PROLOGUE SUGGESTIONS

For a prologue the scene from the picture where Robert has entered the abandoned room to attempt to learn how the murders with every probability of its proven interesting.

Set your character playing Robinson at the window. With lights town and a blue flood through the window showing "Robert" and striking across to the bed and the wall next to its head, open the slide door and have a woman reach through groping for something. Robert goes hastily but noiselessly across the room and grasps the hand. They struggle a moment and then Robert attempts to hold the woman with one hand and open the door with the other. She wrenches away from him and runs. The person should be dressed in a black cloak and be heavily veiled. The audience does not see her face as she rushes by the door clushing Robert, who clutches at her garments but does not detain her. Robert exits in pursuit.

The room as shown in the picture as the "abandoned room" can be easily duplicated.

This scene may be staged prior to the screening or be cut in at the place it occurs in the film and used in place of the strip itself.

BALLYHOO SUGGESTION

A veiled woman with black flowing cloak walking mysteriously along the streets at night with no explanation as to the reason therefor, if played judiciously would be almost sure of being a big feature newspaper story and the space provided it is not overdone. We would suggest that the "woman" keep on the darker streets and move about the walls daily in parks, vacant lots, etc., early in the evening just after it becomes dark. If approached she should hurry away, but not run unnecessarily.

LESS forced to do so, just before you are ready to open your engagement throw the woman to be caught, by the right parties of course.

If you stand in pretty well you can create a framework to write the news stories yourself, but you don't, take a chance on the stunt being good for a "peeping Tom" article or two.

NEWSPAPER DISPLAYS

Those who go in for the "tender form of advertising have an exceptiontly subject in this mystery story. Varying styles of teasers may be used even the stereotyped "Who Killed Silas Blackburn?" being good for this picture.

If you wished to use an illustrative one with your story, a figure holding a candle over a bed with the lights shining dimly on the scene of a man would be appropriate.

For straight selling displays we would suggest the use of a scene from the picture where Silas Blackburn is lying on the floor with the other characters in the cast grouped around him. Play up the mystery part of this scene, but not the novel from which it was adapted rather than Olive Tell or the people of the story. If you have any players are especially popular in your city. Your catch lines and selling talk should dwell on the mystery part of the story. Let your catch lines be introductory to your selling talk, calling attention to it, rather than as a part of the picture, and in your selling talk mention the crimes which were committed, the fact that a number of people could be suspected. There is also a lead in the apparatus of the story where Silas Blackburn coming back into the picture after being supposedly dead. It might be good to inspire in not too blunt a manner if your patrons believe in ghosts, or a spiritual world, especially the latter since at this time there is considerable talk about the occult world, etc.

We would buy large space for your displays where a descriptive cut-out was used. For newspaper stories which might be put over in a tie-up there is the local hamited house and abandoned room which are good for articles if properly written. The "haunted room" story would work excellently and get your attraction attention in a lot of places which could not be reached by display advertising.

USE OF ACCESSORIES

The use of 24 sheet stands placed in good locations, especially close to your entrance and display windows and lobby display windows on the second floor, window cards, tack cards and heralds will be especially good for this picture.
"Love Without Question"

YOUR public will want to know who killed.

SATISFY that curiosity by showing this wonderful filmization of C. Wadsworth Camp's thrilling novel "The Abandoned Room," the most exciting story ever penned made more exciting than ever on the screen.
PROGRAM READERS

Who killed Silas Blackburn, the wealthy old recluse who lived alone with his ward, Katherine, and her supposed one family servant? That is the problem that is finally solved in "Love Without Question," the seven-reel special feature which has been booked for showing at this theatre beginning —

The old man retired in the "abandoned room" so called since three generations of Blackburns had met sudden death in it. In the morning he was found with a small wound at the base of his brain. Who could and who had reason to murder him? His grandson or beautiful ward, both of whom had been cut off in the drawing of his latest will? The old servant who might have some secret grudge? Some unknown person who had planned revenge? The supposedly friend of the family whose past was a dark mystery? The actress who evidenced such interest in the solitude of the old man? All these might have killed the old man as he slept. Some of them knew more than they were telling, that was evident. But who is the guilty person?

That is the story of "Love Without Question," an absorbing mystery picture adapted from C. Wadsworth Camp’s popular novel, "The Abandoned Room."

The star of this picture is popular Olive Tell, and her support includes James Morrison, Ivo Davison, and other well known players.

Olive Tell in the leading role appears to excellent advantage. She is given opportunity for some fine dramatic work the performance of which is faultless and also her beauty makes a fine impression. James Morrison, one of the best known leading men in pictures appears opposite Miss Tell. The balance of the cast is more than adequate. The picture is fine in every detail, produced by the Jans Pictures, Inc, with B. A. Rolfe directing. The production was adapted from C. Wadsworth Camp’s well known novel, "The Abandoned Room."

Mystery stories usually make fine screen entertainment, and "Love Without Question," a seven-reel drama from the studios of the Jans Pictures, Inc, with Olive Tell in the starring role, and the attraction at the —— theatre, is no exception.

The picture is a well produced melodrama principally concerned in solving in a logical manner of how two persons were mysteriously murdered in the "abandoned room" of the Blackburn home; why Silas Blackburn, after being supposedly dead and buried, is found sitting in his favorite arm chair and the reason for the old man’s committing suicide when an actress whom the audience does not know he had ever seen, calls on him.

The production has been adapted from C. Wadsworth Camp’s well known novel, "The Abandoned Room. Miss Tell gives a wonderfully expressive performance as the heroine, and James Morrison is ideal in the role of the grand son and Miss Tell’s lover. The balance of the cast is exceptionally capable and well balanced. B. A. Rolfe directed and is responsible for a fine continuity that builds well to the picture’s climax. The production has suspense and action two of the prime requisites for success in a production of this type. It can be recommended to theatre-goers who enjoy the mystery melodramatic picture.

Jans and His Big Plans

THE Jans Pictures, Inc., despite what its name suggests, is a picture plant that has been in business for only a few years. It has been driven by an idea to become a major factor in the motion picture industry. Its first production, the classic ! "Woman Without Question," starring Olive Tell, has put the company on the map. The success of the film was not accidental; it was the result of careful planning and execution. The Jans Pictures Corporation, under the leadership of Herman F. Jans, the president, has been working hard to ensure that the company's future is secure. The success of "Madonnas and Men" has proven that the Jans Pictures Corporation is on the right track.

The Jans Pictures organization began the actual work of producing on December 15, 1919. Since then, the company has produced four pictures, three of which have been starring vehicles for Olive Tell. The first, entitled "Woman Without Question," was released March 31, 1920. The second, "The Woman's Business," is now in the cutting stage, and will be given a premiere showing in the near future. The third, "Wings of Pride," is also awaiting the finishing touches. The last scene for "Madonnas and Men" was filmed last week, thus completing the fourth feature turned out by Jans Pictures since the company's inception.

"Love Without Question" was given its first public showing on Wednesday, March 24, at the Strand theatre, New York. The play's press reviews were uniformly favorable, and the unusually heavy bookings which have been registered since for this production further testify to favorable impression made upon the trade.

Fred C. Backer, the general sales manager, declares that within six weeks after the date of release the picture's territorial rights have been secured for the entire country, except for eleven per cent of the United States territory. "This," says Mr. Backer, "marks a new record for rapid selling of picture rights on a state rights production.

The heavy exploitation put behind "Love Without Question" has done much to bring the picture before the public. The book has been syndicated and has appeared serially in some of the larger dailies in different cities of the country. The screen version is an adaptation of the novel, "The Abandoned Room," by C. Wadsworth, a novel that is of the mystery type, centering around the murder of Silas Blackburn, a wealthy mining magnate. The story is a classic example of the crime story, and the plot is a masterpiece of intrigue and suspense. The picture is a thrill-building, edge-of-the-seat experience, and the audience is kept on the edge of their seats throughout the entire film. The cast is a who's who of Hollywood celebrities, and the acting is superb. The picture is a true masterpiece of the mystery genre, and it is sure to be a hit with audiences everywhere.

Concerning the third of Olive Tell's series, "Wings of Pride," no formal statement as to the story or cast has been issued by the Jans Pictures Corporation. However, it is known that the plot is a typical Olive Tell adventure, with her character facing a series of challenges and obstacles. The picture is expected to be a continuation of the success of "Woman Without Question," and it is sure to be a hit with audiences. The cast is expected to be a who's who of Hollywood celebrities, and the acting is sure to be top-notch. The picture is a true masterpiece of the adventure genre, and it is sure to be a hit with audiences everywhere.

With the completion of "Madonnas and Men," the final scenes of which were taken last Sunday, the Jans Pictures Corporation will cease production activities for about six weeks. This period of inactivity will be for the purpose of allowing the releasing department to catch up with the production. Speaking of release dates and a set production schedule, Mr. Jans declared himself opposed to hold these practices. He said that he did not intend to establish any arbitrary dates for the release of his pictures and then compel his producing forces to rush the production so as to have the picture ready upon the date agreed. "It is my plan," said Mr. Jans, "to have the time necessary upon a single picture to make it a perfect production. I am limiting myself to set schedule for the year. I find that the market wants big spectacular features, and I will supply this demand, taking all the time necessary to perfect each picture in all its parts. We are under no contract to finish films prematurely, and I will not allow the prestige value of our pictures to suffer. We will present our pictures to the exhibitors, note their effect and regulate our activities and policies accordingly.

The Jans Pictures, Inc., have been producing at the old Peerless Studios, Fort Lee N. J., where B. A. Rolfe directed the three Olive Tell's vehicles as well as "Madonnas and Men," and Mr. Rolfe has been actively in charge of all the producing activities for the Jans Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Jans recently toured all the Western key cities in behalf of the productions to be released by his company to New York. He left about three weeks ago, having secured many contracts for the currently showing "Love Without Question," and the assurance that his second release would be booked and released in the Western territories.

The cast of "Madonnas and Men" is of an all-star character, the aim being to present a well-balanced array of dramatic talent rather than to concentrate attention upon one or two members. Each member has been carefully selected for the role of the character to be portrayed, and the result is a well-balanced cast that is sure to please the audience. The production is a true masterpiece of the dramatic genre, and it is sure to be a hit with audiences everywhere.

The Jans Pictures Corporation is a true masterpiece of the motion picture industry, and it is sure to be a hit with audiences everywhere. The company is on the right track, and it is sure to be a leader in the industry for years to come.
"Love Without Question"

The name of Olive Tell is known the country over as that of a real artiste. The fame of B. A. Rolfe as a director is known wherever motion pictures are shown as that of a producer of reel successes. C. Wadsworth Camp's great novel "The Abandoned Room" has been read wherever books are sold.

Such advance advertising is of untold value to the exhibitor.

An elaborately produced feature photodrama made with the idea of providing exhibitors with an extraordinary attraction. It provides the theatre owner with a super-feature, a real special attraction.

VITAGRAPH

The extreme activities at the Vitagraph plant have made necessity the addition of new staffs of all departments, which working scheme was inaugurated this week. This plan means that delays caused by producing units waiting for settings or properties will be obviated in the future, and much of the new work heretofore carried on during the day, can now be done at night, thus preventing annoyance to the companies and adding efficiency to all producing units.

Veda Vale has been selected as leading woman for Earle Williams for "The Purple Hieroglyph," and the story was put in production this week under the direction of Chester Bennett.

The Tom Terris Company filming "The Girl Out of the Sky," adapted from a Gouverneur Morris story, has returned to the studio for interior scenes after filming hydroplane, and many of the exterior scenes at Laguna Beach and Catalina Islands. This special production will require at least another month's work at the studio. Wallace MacDonald and Marguerite De La Meteere are the principals.

Six massive settings covering ten acres of ground are being used by William Duncan in the final episode of "The Silent Avenger" serial. The largest of these is a railroad tunnel 600 feet in length which had to be constructed above ground that it would serve for photography.

Stephen Smith, Jr., chief cameraman of the Vitagraph plant, has worked out some new lighting and double exposure effects which will have lots of lightning at the time a man's finger sustained for long periods instead of short flashes. Other effects show how minute dots on the film, invisible to the eye, are located. These effects will be used in the Joe Ryan-Jean Paige serial which is spoken of as having a triple X-ray plot.

The Antonio Moreno Company, including Plaudit Curley as leading woman, and directed by Webster Callison, is now working at San Pedro making airplane scenes after a week at Catalina Islands.

"The Stage Hand" is the title selected for the next Senon comedy now in the making, and at the present time the company is working on a complete theatre stage at the studio built to fit the needs of this story, which shows the life and happenings in a three-a-day vaudeville house.

James Aubrey has been placed under contract for another year by Vitagraph and will continue as featured comedian in Big V Comedies. Jess Robbins is directing Aubrey at the present time.

BRUNTON

The work of keeping pace with the twelve production units working at the Robert Brunton studios, is proving a strenuous task which requires a constant improvement for the big plant which now has equipment of every kind necessary for the successful and economic production work of twelve filming units. Plans made during the past week, which are now being carried out, provide for increasing the capacity of the Brunton lumber mill to double its present output. This will enable more speedy construction of settings and all wooden properties.

Early this week the foundation was laid for the fourth office building, which in size will be the same as the three previously built. Each of these has ample space, rooms and furnishings for the executive staffs of twelve producing units. Another improvement completed is a new concrete garage, additional scene docks and other minor improvements.

The last Robert Brunton production, starring I. Warren Kerrigan, title "The Coast of Opportunity," was finished this week by Director Ernest Warde for W. W. Hodkinson, distributing through Vitagraph. The story is adapted from the Paige Phillips novel and has a Mexican locale. Fritz Brumette plays the lead opposite Kerrigan. With the completion of this subject Kerrigan completes his contract for ten productions with Robert Brunton.

Two Mayflower organizations are at work. Sidney Franklin is making the final scenes for the Sylvia Breamer subject titled "Athalie," adapted from the Robert W. Chambers novel, and Alan Dwan has put his last Mayflower picture in production. Mary Thurman is to be featured in the latter. Other members of the cast will be selected during the week, and production is to be started in a few days.

Final editing of "The Scoffer," made by Arthur Herman for Mary Thurman and James Kirkwood, has been completed, and negative and positive prints were shipped to New York this week.

The East Indian picture, "The Palace of Darkened Windows," which is to be a spectacle for the National Picture Theatres, is being finished this week by Director Healy Keeler. The cast for this includes Claire Anderson, Arthur Carewe, Jay Balesco, Nicholas Duncan, Gerald Prang, Christine Mayo, the late Oliver Hardy Boardman and Virginia Colwell.

Production work is continuing on the Olive Thomas production, "Jenile," and the subject starring Owen Moore, "Stop That Man." Selznick Production Manager Harry Rapp gave a showing for members of "The Invisible Dirvorce" cast, the Selznick production organization's friends at the Windsor theatre, last Friday, April 30th, preceding the shipment of this production to New York.

METRO

Following the completion of the final scenes for "The Price of Redemption," filming made this week, Bert Lytell will leave for New York, where he expects to work in several productions at the eastern Metro studios. It is very probable that this Metro star will appear in one or more Broadway productions produced by the Metro Company in the stage in connection with the completion of the story, "The Coast of Opportunity," and the last production with I. Warren Kerrigan, "The Palace of Darkened Windows." with film productions of the same play. No definite decision has been reached on this plan, but it was talked over at length by Marcus Low, President Richard Rowland and Lytell when the two executives were on the coast recently.

Following the completion of the Winchell Smith production, "The Sap-Head," Herbert Blache will go to New York to produce for Metro.

Plans now provide that the Winchell Smith production, which is featuring Buster Keaton, will be completed within a week, and work will then be started on the first Metro comedy featuring Keaton.
Director Eddie Cline is now at work preparing script and settings and will give his personal attention to the direction of this first Keaton picture.

Work was started May 6th on the filming of the third Drury Lane melodrama, "Hearts Are Trumps," under the direction of Rex Ingram.
The working script for this was written by June Mathis, and the cast selected includes Francesa Bilington, Winter Hall, Frank Brown-tee, Joseph Kilgour, Normand Ken-dy, Howard Crapton and Edward Connelly.

Marc Robbins has been added to the Screen Classics scenario department following similar affiliation with the west coast Fox studio and seven years' identification with the film industry, for the first few years as an actor.

Elliott Clawson has completed the producing script for a northern-western story titled "Big Comes," which is to be produced with an all star cast.

The Alice Lake Company, being directed by Edmund Mortimer, is again at the studio working on interior scenes for "The Misfit Wife' from the Hearn play, "The Outsider," following a week on locations in the Santa Monica mountains.

The Shurlette-Metro company, filming the Jack London story,
"The Mutiny," is back at the studio after two weeks abroad shot between San Francisco and Los Angles, Edward Sloan is directing.

The opening scenes for Nazi-town's next film, "Billions," have been taken and practically all scenes for the subject have been photographed. The delay in taking the few opening scenes was occasioned because of the massive settings required for this. There are laid in a fictitious city of a fictitious Slavic nation and have a pre-war atmosphere. It was necessary to build several blocks of street scenes, and so accurate have been the details that many who have viewed the rushes were surprised to know that the scenes were taken at the Metro plant, they thinking some of the atmosphere scenes might have been taken in a Slavic city. The picture is said to have a swiftly moving action with many comedy touches.
Throughout simplicity has been the keynote, and it is believed a plot has been conceived which the the-aire patrons will not anticipate the sequels of.

GOLDWYN

THE picturesque Inciveille ranch is serving as an exterior location for the visionary section of the Maury Roberts Kuyckhout story, "Empire Builders," where the Goldwyn Company has erected a village which will be populated by Abores-in which will serve to make that section of "Empire Builders" described in the book at the island where an empire is founded. E.
Mason Hopper, who is directing this picture, will have several hundred extra people in these scenes.

Director Harry Beaumont has finished the filming of the Tom Moore
"Oleander 666," production, and plans to start the making of "Stop Policeman," adapted from the stage play early next week. Hazel Lively, known as the "honey girl of the screen," who played the part of "Honey" in the Bryant Washburn Skinner pictures for Essanay, has been engaged to play opposite Moore in this picture. The remainder of the cast has not been named.

The Mabel Normand Company, directed by Victor Schertzinger, is at San Francisco making bay, duck and ocean scenes, and Director Al
Green is leaving this week with the Jack Pickford Company for a number of scenes for "The Man Who Had Everything." The parking ordinance recently enforced in Los Angeles has caused a change in the appearance of Los Angeles streets, and as the script calls for a great number of automobiles the Goldwyn Company decided to send the troupe to San Francisco for these pictures.

The Goldwyn Company has leased a schooner for making the sea scenes of the Ben Ames Wil-lams story, "The Black Paw," which will feature Russell Simpson in the title role.

F. P.-LASKY

ANNOUNCEMENT of a number of productions that are shortly to be made at the Famous-Players-Lasky studios, was made this week, and contains the activities of four of the directors.

Roscoe Arbuckle, who is now working in the final scenes for "The Life of the Party," under the direction of Joseph Henabery, is next to play in "The Traveling Salesman."
The Claudia Stockey play, "Ros-ane Oszmne, has been adapted for the screen by Mary H. O'Connor, and will be directed by Tom Fornan as a starring vehicle for Ethel Clayton. Miss Clayton is now working in "The City Sparrow," under the direction of Sam Wood, with a cast that includes Walter Hiers, Clyde Fillmore, Lillian Leighton, Sylvia Ashton, Robert
Brougher and others.

"The Corso Hamilton story, "His Friend and His Wife," is to be the next play filmed by William C. De Mille. Mr. DeMille is now making the final scenes for "Conrad in Quest of His Yolk," and this week marked the introduction of the two leading women, Kathleen Williams and Margaret Lovins, in this production. Tom Meighan, who is playing the same role in this production, will leave for New York as soon as his scenes are all taken where he is to play in one picture, "The Frontier of the Stars." William D. Taylor is making the final scenes for "The Boy," and everything will be in readiness for the filming of "The Furnace," by Pan, which has been adapted for the screen by Julia Crawford Ivers.

Elzer Harris has the continuity ready for "The Old Homestead," which is to be filmed by George Melford, and production work will be started as soon as Milton Sills, who is now ill, recovers sufficiently to resume work.

Cecil B. DeMille is expected home from a short business trip to New York, at which time his recently made production will be ready for final review. The title, "Something to Think About," is to be the permanent name of this production.

J. D. HAMPTON

Paul Scardon has been engaged by Jesse D. Hampton to direct a series of features starring Blanche Sweet, and the first of these will be the Kenneth B. Clark story, "Port o' Capriee." Following this the Marah Ellis Ryan, "The Girl Montane" will be filmed. The first Scardon directed picture will have Albert Roscoe as leading man, and one of the important character parts will be taken by Edwin Stevens. Director Scardon is one of the oldest of the film industry, he having become a director in 1913, following twenty years as an actor on the speaking stage. His most recent work was with the Goldwyn Company.

Henry King is to be seen in the Blanche Sweet subject, "Leona Goes a Hunting," which has just been completed, as leading man, and, in addition to working before the camera, he served as director and hydroplane pilot during the making of this film. Many of the scenes for the subject are taken in a hydroplane, and script requires that King, the leading man, steer the naval ship. King will be remembered as featured leading man in many films made by the Lubin and other companies in the years of 1913, 1914 and 1915, but for the past three years he has been given all of his time to the direction of films. Other players in the subject are Jay Belasco, Frank Leigh, Tom Jefferson, Mayme Kelso, Harry Lorraine and Jean Aeker.

Another Jesse D. Hampton unit producing the Robert Thornby special subject is working aboard ship between San Francisco and Los Angeles for the sea scenes of the Frederick Isham story of San Francisco and the sea, titled "Half a Chance." Lilian Hall is playing opposite Malton Hamilton in this, and other important players are Sidney Ainsworth, John Gough and little Mary MacAllister.

Ex-Governor's Daughter to Write Continuity

Ethel Gillette, daughter of ex-Governor James N. Gillette of California, has been added to the continuity staff of the Anita Stewart Productions and Chaplin-Mayer Pictures Company.

Maurice Campbell to Direct for Famous

Maurice Campbell, well-known as a stage producer, has been engaged by Famous Players-Lasky as a director. The following statement, regarding the new director, has been issued by Famous Players:

"Although the new director has had over twenty years of stage experience, he felt that he needed a thorough grounding in motion picture technique before entering actively into the work. He has spent the last six months as assistant to Cecil B. DeMille, Donald Crisp, and other well-known film makers, learning the business from the ground up. Combined with his acknowledged understanding of dramatic values, Major Campbell's new practical training makes him ready for production of motion pictures."

Maurice Campbell has been assigned to produce "Bargain Proof," a new Paramount-Artcraft comedy, featuring Bryant Washburn.

Hundreds of Extras in Metro Battle Scenes

With members of his company and more than 800 extra people, Bert Lytell is at Chatsworth, Cal., where scenes for the mammoth battle spectacle, "The Price of Redemption," are being filmed. The mountainous region about Chatsworth offers an ideal location for the battle scenes for Mr. Lytell's new Metro special production.

Harley Knoles and the Dorothy Dalton company have returned after a three-weeks' trip to Charleston, S. C., where the company have been working on "locations" for the forthcoming production, titled "This Woman—This Man." to be released by Famous Players-Lasky. Exquisite shots of the famous Magnolia Gardens have been secured, it is stated, despite almost continuous rainy weather. An accident scene is to be taken in New York, and this will mark the completion of the picture.

Box Office Reports, that popular feature with Motion Picture News readers is now appearing every other week due to the paper situation. Next week's issue will include the Box Office Reports and Index to the Complete Plan Book.

The Regent Theatre, Flint, Michigan
Located in the Automobile District
An Attractive Theatre of Spanish Design

In Flint, Mich., there has just been opened a picture playhouse that is the show place of that fast growing automobile town. It is W. S. Butterfield's Regent theatre, a roomy, commodious and artistic amusement place seating 1,800.

Already controlling four downtown theatres, Mr. Butterfield in selecting the site for the Regent decided to build on North Saginaw street and Lomia, eight blocks north of the principal business intersection of the city. Although on the route to the immense Buick plant to the casual observer it seemed an odd location for a first run Paramount-First National house in a city of 90,000, business, however, since the theatre's opening, March 10, has been extremely big.

The Regent theatre represents a total investment of approximately $200,000. John Eberson, of Chicago, who is now building the half-million-dollar Butterfield theatre at Lansing, Mich., was the architect in charge of the Flint Regent.

The auditorium is 80 feet in width by 170 deep, will seat 1,600 on the main floor. A mezzanine floor approached by marble stairways from the centre of the foyer, will seat 200. Here brass railings divide individual loges, each with a seating capacity of eight persons.

The architect employed the Andalusian Spanish motif in construction and interior decorations. As a result there are bright trimmings about the proscenium arch, the latter being supported by marble columns of warm coloring. The foyer represents the sunny walk of a typical Spanish patio. The adaptable effect is further heightened by wide spreading archways. A gaily colored fountain is half hidden in a slight recess in the centre of the foyer. Amber and blue lights in fixtures of artistic design soften the many colors so that they blend into a harmonious whole.

The lobby, 60 by 22, is finished in marble, tile and walnut, with upper portion of the walls and ceiling in keeping with the interior decorations. Twenty candelabras, containing from three to six lights each are used for lobby illumination. Exceptionally adequate provisions were made for advance display and it is possible to place ten complete sets of photos of coming attractions in the racks along the side walls.

The projection room is located in the rear of the mezzanine floor. It is 14x20 in size and has both outside and roof ventilation. It is completely equipped with Powers machines, spot light and all accessories. The Herter Trans Verter used is the largest that has been made by that company and the projection is said to be equal to any in the country. To provide for any emergency an additional transverter, slightly smaller in size, was purchased. In the event of any accident to the large machine the current can be cut over to the smaller and the show proceed without delay. The projection distance is 160 feet at almost direct angle. A Minuse screen 17½ feet by 22½ feet gives a picture somewhat larger than is ordinarily shown.

The blower system is utilized for both heating and cooling. Located, as it is on a corner, the Regent is ideally equipped with exits. Ten double doors at the rear, front and on the street side permit the emptying of the house in a very short space of time.

The box office at the front of the lobby is equipped with a National Ticket Registering machine. Intercommunicating phones connect all departments of the playhouse.

An ornate and effective electric sign manufactured by Shumate and Chonopal, Lima, Ohio, is employed. Almost two thousand colored lamps are used in the permanent portion of the sign. Below this is a four line, interchangeable letter, attraction announcement space. The sign is by far the largest in Flint.

Spot lights set on ornamental standards are located at the right and left of the orchestra pit. These lights and the spot lamp are utilized during the orchestral overture, harp specialties and other musical interludes.

Special attention is given to the playing of pictures by an orchestra of eighteen. Every detail of the feature, comedy and news weekly is carefully rehearsed in advance. As a result the opening performances are almost as well handled as the closing.

John Prescott is resident manager of the theatre. Mr. Prescott is a showman of many years' experience. In the early days of the picture industry he directed one-reel westerns, has had charge of stock companies in several large cities and been company manager of such well known stars as Robert Edeson and Elsie Ferguson. Edward C. Beatty, general manager of the Butterfield circuit, attends to all booking. Arthur A. Frudenfeld the circuit's general press representative is in charge of exploitation.

W. S. Butterfield now controls twenty theatres, all of them with one exception—the Regent, Lima, Ohio—being located in the State of Michigan.
The Latest in Light Control for Motion Picture Studios
Remote Control System as Installed at International Proves Success

A BOUT a year ago the International Film Company took over an old dance hall at 128th street and Second avenue, New York City, for a studio. The building was without electrical facilities and incoming power lines. But this instead of being a handicap proved to be the nucleus for a wonderfully complete lighting system, equal to or better than that of any studio then existing. The International studio is 290 feet long and 60 feet wide with an unusually high roof. Its physical characteristics made it especially suitable as a housing for a studio.

When the studio was first taken over, Mr. William Sistrum was placed in charge of the structure. He is known to practically every studio man in the country. He it was who worked out the technical equipment for Universal City when that institution because of its extensiveness was known as one of the world's wonders. He is the type of man who is never content with the present development of an idea or satisfied with the temporary success of a device. He is continually looking ahead in an endeavor to better things, to produce results more efficiently and to further the progress of the art and industry. His characteristics were a fortunate advanced method of studio lighting control worked out by Mr. H. E. O'Brien, studio expert for the Westinghouse Company on the west coast. Through its principles of action it was called "the remote control system."

To those who are not acquainted with studios and their equipment a few words about the older control systems may with advantage be added.

Probably, if traced far enough back, it would be found that the first studio electrician was an old theatrical stage electrician. He thought and talked in terms of "stage cable." When a new light unit or a bank of lights were needed, a few feet of stage cable was laid from the switchboard or from a stage outlet to the light or lights. A switch on the main switchboard controlled the unit. This was the stage method. So, when the first studio was set up and illuminated it was only natural that similar methods should be used.

Up to within a year, practically all studios have used an adaptation of these methods. Cables were strung or laid from wall pockets to spider box and then to the lights. Wall pockets were controlled through the main switchboards. Normally, this meant an annunciator system with a man at main switchboard or a man at every light.

Such a system, while not seeming so in print, was in reality a cumbersome and unflexible affair. William Sistrum recognized this and strove to improve upon it. The remote control system proved to be the solution. Under this system it is possible for one man standing at one spot to control any and every light on any set. Generally this is done by an electrician, seated beside the director, and having a control station within reach.

Jack Kelley, studio electrician at the International also contributed a number of important features that have been worked into the whole and have helped to make the operation a success.

The three-wire Edison circuit comes into the main switchboard which is located on the gallery. On this switchboard is provided a main line switch and a feeder switch for each remote control box, the latter properly safeguarded by fuses.

From this point, the feeders, instead of running down walls to a studio floor switchboard, are supported on overhead bridge work. Each feeder in its conduit stretches from its switch along this bridge work to the contactor box. These boxes have been so arranged about the studio that one or more is easily accessible to every stage wherever they may be placed.

At the International Studio the contactor boxes have been symmetrically staggered on either side of the center line of the building, thus covering the studio floor space in all directions.

The contactor box might well be called the heart of the remote control system, for it is here that all connections are made and broken, and being located in an inaccessible place it is imperative that the contactors work on and off with but occasional inspection and adjustment.

Leading from each contactor box is a seven conductor flexible cable. This cable drops down to the portable push button station managed by the electrician seated at the director's elbow. From this push button station or series of stations (since all may be connected together) any light or combinations of lights can be controlled by one or more of the push buttons.

Main Switchboard:

This is a standard incoming feeder board located out of the way in a room off the balcony.

Contactor Box:

This is shown diagrammatically in Figs. 1 and 2, and photographically in Fig. 3. At the top are the contactors and directly below them the fuses protecting each set. Each two-pole contactor handles a Kliegl six-way spider box with a total capacity of 250 amperes. Kliegl three-point receptacles and plugs are at the bottom of the contactor box.

The boxes themselves are constructed of ten gage sheet iron with removable top or back according to its location. Either two piece or single piece front doors are provided for purpose of inspection.

The contactors are rated for continuous duty. They are light in weight with self-wiping contact faces.

Tracing out the various circuits in Fig. 1 will show how it is possible to control either one contactor or the entire number of contactors. The single contactors are actuated by any one of the push buttons and after these have been brought into play the whole may be controlled by the master button at the right hand side of the push button station.

Push Button Station:

The push-button station is a small box of sheet metal with a top consisting of a common brass gang plate having openings for thirteen push button switches.

There are seven push buttons on the top row and six in the bottom. The Station is carried about by means of a handle at one side.

The push buttons on the top row are numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and "M." the latter standing for "Master." These buttons are the ordinary house type with simple "on" and "off" registrations.

The buttons in the lower row differ in that they are the three way type.

By studying the diagram, Fig. 1, it will be seen that one side of each of the "on" and "off" buttons is connected to binding posts on the outside of the box. These binding posts are numbered to correspond with the push button numbers. The remaining side runs to the middle point of the three way buttons in the lower row.

There are still two points on the three-way switches to be accounted for. One of these points, it will be seen, goes via a common wire to the "off" side of the "Master" button, while the other side connects to a common wire leading to the other side of the same "Master" button.

This method of remote control has had a lengthy try-out at the International studio with complete success. It is probable that several of the studios now under construction by other producing companies will employ the same method to control their lighting effects.

Jefferson City—Plans for a new theatre on High street have been prepared by Architect F. B. Miller. R. R. Armstrong and others interested in the theatre are examining plans for the construction work.

NEBRASKA

Winside—Fred Weibie has had plans drawn up for a new theatre to be started at once.

NEW JERSEY

Jersey City—A site at Bergen avenue and Newkirk street, has been chosen by the Argonne Realty Company for a new motion picture theatre.

Long Branch—Walter Read, owner of the Broadway theatre, has purchased ground adjoining the present theatre site. Mr. Read intends to erect a new moving picture theatre with a seating capacity of 1,500 persons. Architect Leon Cubberley has designed the plans. The new building will be constructed of steel and brick and Chas. E. Brown will be the contractor.

Rutherford—A 1,000 seat combination theatre is to be erected in Rutherford just off Valley Brook avenue. D. J. Livelli is handling the project.

NEW YORK

Albany—James Block and Arthur Strenge are to open a new motion picture theatre in Arbor Hill. It is probable that some building will be purchased and remodelled to accommodate the theatre equipment.

Schenectady—A new theatre on Barrett street is being constructed. The structure is being built for A. B. Van Vosland and has been leased by John J. Walker, who at present owns and operates the Lincoln theatre on Brandony avenue.

OKLAHOMA

Oklahoma City—The town of Chandler is to have a new up-to-date motion picture theatre. The site has already been purchased and work will be commenced.

PENNSYLVANIA

Freeland—The Refowich Brothers of Ma-

honey City and Pottsville, Pa., have purchased a plot of ground 60 x 150 feet on Center street near Main street. Freeland, Pa., and in the near future will build a modern up-to-date motion picture theatre. The Refowich Brothers now operate the Refowich theatre of that town.

Johnstown—Mrs. A. R. Long has closed a deal for a site on Market street and contemplates building a theatre here.

FRANK NETSCHERT, 61 BARCLAY STREET, NEW YORK
Sixteenth Anniversary of “House of Swaab” Observed Recently
Has Grown From Small Affair to Largest in Pennsylvania

THIS is Mark Swaab's anniversary.
For 10 years he has been in the supply business and all of that time in Philadelphia. He is one of the pioneers in the equipment and of the industry. Back in 1904 he first started in business for himself when he opened a store at 338 Spruce Street. The store was a converted dwelling with the show windows made from the front windows of the house. Packing boxes were used for shelves and everything else in the establishment was on the same order. The store took up the first floor while Mr. Swaab and his family took over the second floor as their apartments.

What surprised most of Mr. Swaab's friends was that he started the business with practically no capital and consequently they expected that it would be a matter of but a few weeks or months when a failure could be expected. But Swaab had something else in mind. He believed that if he gave his customers a fair deal all round and treated them in a human manner they would reciprocate by coming back for additional orders. This policy worked out to perfection. Instead of failing, the business grew rapidly and almost before the founder realized it he was forced to seek new quarters with more floor space. This was about the time that the film industry was getting under way and his business reflected in its sales the expanding industry.

He moved to North Eighth Street, where he combined a picture exchange with a supply house. Then realizing further the size of the industry confronting him he organized the Interstate Film Company, which is still in existence and known as one of the leading exchanges in Philadelphia.

The supply business was now well on its way to success, and even though Swaab applied his ability now and then to outside affairs it continued to grow and keep in step with the industry. As a result he again found it necessary to seek new and larger quarters. This time the moving vans took him to 1327 Vine Street, where he has since been located.

Several of the illustrations show the exterior and interior of his present place of business. Although not pretentious in size when compared to a department store layout, nevertheless the amount of business done over these counters mounts up to a respectable figure. Mr. Swaab still sticks to his original policy of treating every customer in such a way that he

Standing the Test—16 Years

The House of Lewis M. Swaab has kept pace with the rapid growth of the motion picture industry for over 16 years—a record to be proud of.

Sixteen years of successful business dealings, constantly on the lookout for better equipment—Equipment to improve the picture—Equipment to bring added profits to the Exhibitor.

This alertness has caused the name of “Swaab” to be considered as a symbol of perfection. To say that Swaab handles the product is to say that the product must be good. This prestige has spread from the buying Exhibitor to the manufacturer of equipment.

Manufacturers recognize the prestige of Swaab. For that reason we are given the first opportunity of adding to our line their latest developments. This preference permits us to select the highest class theatre merchandise on the market.

Exhibitors are saved the annoyance of shopping around for their equipment. They know the House of Swaab carries all the latest developments that are of high quality and mechanically perfect. They know that we stand behind everything sold. They know, too, that the House of Swaab stands for satisfaction and Service at all times.

We are exclusive distributors of the SIMPLEX Machine in the following counties of Pennsylvania: Adams, Berks, Bradford, Bucks, Carbon, Chester, Columbia, Cumberland, Dauphin, Delaware, Lackawanna, Lancaster, Lebanon, Lehigh, Luzerne, Lycoming, Monroe, Montgomery, Montour, Northampton, Northumberland, Perry, Philadelphia, Juniata, Pike, Schuylkill, Snyder, Sullivan, Susquehanna, Tioga, Union, Wayne, Wyoming and York; also Southern New Jersey, including Trenton, all of the State of Delaware and the following counties on the Eastern Shores of Maryland: Caroline, Cecil, Dorchester, Harford, Kent, Queen Anne, Somerset, Talbot, Wicomico and Worcester.

THEATRE NOTES

C. V. Yeager, manager of the Fulton Opera House of Lancaster, Pa., has decided to adopt the policy of playing pictures the first half of each week hereafter.

C. A. White, proprietor of White's theatre, Frackville, Pa., was in Philadelphia last week, calling on the different exchanges.

It is understood that an 1800-seat theatre will be erected in Collinswood, N. J., and that work will be commenced at once. It is also reported that another large theatre will be built in Chester, Pa., at no distant date. Full particulars will be given later.

Floyd Hopkins, the Wilbur & Vincent manager at Harrisburg, states that the firm has purchased the garage building on 13th Street near Dairy St., which formerly was a movie and that the place will be remodeled and opened in early summer as a classy neighborhood theatre.

Manager Lynch of the Hippodrome, Williamsport, Pa., will carry out alterations this summer which will increase the seating capacity of the theatre considerably.

The Family theatre of Milton, Pa., will soon close for alterations and improvements.

Jake Krause of the Grand theatre, Ephrata, Pa., has bought out his partner and is now the sole owner of the theatre.

Lou Brennerman of the American theatre, Pottsville, Pa., has installed a new $18,000 Hope Jones Organ.

E. G. Ryan of the Peoples theatre, Georgetown, Del., will close the first of May and tear down the old building and erect a 600-seat house on the site. Theatre to be 33 feet by 88 feet. He was in Phil-

The Herity Brothers, who are erecting a moving picture theatre at 345 North 6th Street, Allentown, Pa., state that a pipe organ will be installed in the theatre when completed but thus far are undecided as to what make will be installed. Work is being pushed rapidly but it will take several weeks to complete the job.

Under the able management of Dr. Studebaker the business in the New Strand Theatre at Allentown has increased to such an extent the theatre will be enlarged, giving an additional seating capacity of 400 chairs.

A pipe organ will be installed in the National Theatre in Wilmington, Del. This is a modern theatre, built especially for the colored people, and is owned and controlled by colored people, there being about 1200 colored people in the city.

B. Lubin, of the Lubin Amusement Co., of Vineland, N. J., reports that their Grand Opera House which is being erected for road shows and movies will be completed and ready to open in about two months.

Mr. Lubin was in Philadelphia March 29th and stated plans were being drawn for a 1000-seat theatre which they will call "Globe." Work will start on this theatre at an early date. The Opera House will seat 1500.

W. A. Cohn, manager of the Lincoln Theatre, 20th Street and Jefferson Avenue, Newport News, Va., was in Philadelphia on the 29th of March looking after a new stage setting and other equipment for the theatre which was destroyed by fire on March 15th. The fire originated in a junk shop adjoining the theatre and destroyed a part of the roof and stage of the theatre. It occurred at 8 o'clock in the evening and the theatre was filled with people. On account of numerous exits the theatre was emptied in a very few minutes without accident or any undue excitement.

WHERE SWAAB OPENED HIS FIRST SUPPLY STORE IN 1904

Associated with Mr. Swaab is his son, Mark Swaab, and on whom much of the active management of the supply house has fallen, since the elder Swaab spends as much time as possible on the road amongst the trade.

An interesting fact concerning the "House of Swaab" is that the first establishment at 338 Sprace Street was in the same house where the song "Hail Columbia" was written by Joseph Hopkinson, its author.

Development of the Mazda Lamp for Projection Purposes
A Series of Interest to All Projectionists

With Mazda lamp projection several new ideas must be incorporated in the housings.
First, the housings must have sufficient ventilation to insure the lamp against overheating.
Over-heating of the Mazda lamp is a serious proposition. The bulb, which is made of glass, cannot stand an indefinitely high temperature. The housing chosen should be scientifically designed to provide for adequate ventilation.
Sufficient ventilation also keeps a mirror cool. It might be noted here that mirrors will, as they are continually used, depreciate in reflecting value. The rate of depreciation is dependent to a large extent upon the temperature of the mirror. A large mirror, therefore, while not reflecting any more light than a smaller one, will run cooler and stand up better in service. Where proper ventilation is supplied or a 5 inch diameter mirror is adequate.
The larger the mirror the larger the radiating surface and consequently the cooler it will run. A small mirror must reflect just as much light and just as much heat as a large one. But with a smaller surface the heat cannot be radiated as rapidly.
Second, means must be provided for the quick replacement of lamps should one burn out while the picture is being projected. With an arc the length of the carbon tells the projectionist how long his light will last. The Mazda projective requires accurate work. The adjustment must be quite fine. In some housings adjustment of the lamp must be made in the housings after the lamp is inserted. A device recently introduced, however, enables the lamp to be prepared, and accurately adjusted outside of the housing and thus is in readiness for instant insertion should the need arise.
The matter of current control apparatus for Mazda lamps is of the utmost importance. Good lamp performance demands a control which will not allow the lamp to be injured by overamperage. Several devices are on the market which answer this purpose. An ammeter is supplied to enable the projectionist to know when his lamp is at correct amperage. Mazda lamps operate equally well on d. c. or a. c. With a. c., however, the control apparatus is greatly simplified and therefore Mazda projection is best adapted to theatres where the current supply is a. c.
Regulators are made both for 25 and 60 cycles. (Cycles refer to the number of alternations per second of the alternating current.) 60 cycles is most common. They are also made for both 110 and 220 volts.

Altering currents are controlled very simply, since the transformer principle is used. A transformer enables the voltage to be stepped up or down with very little loss of power. On D. C. to step the voltage down the usual method is to place a resistance in series.
For instance, to get 900 watts or 30 amperes at 30 volts from 110 volts A. C. requires with the A. C. regulators or transformer, a loss of only 90 watts. On D. C. however, where a straight resistance is used, to obtain 30 volts (30 amperes) i. e. 900 watts, 2,400 watts must be wasted in the resistance.
On D. C. for efficient operation a motor generator set to change the current from direct to alternating, is best practice.
The alternating current thus developed is readily controlled by an efficient A. C. regulator.
When straight resistance is used, the reduction in current consumption over an arc projector is not great.

ACCESSORIES TO GOOD PROJECTION
To enable Mazda projection to be used for long throws and the larger pictures, a reflecting type screen is recommended. The Mazda lamp with its soft light is peculiarly adapted for use with such type of screens—that throw a large amount of the projected light back—instead of spreading it after the manner of a muslin sheet. A reflecting type screen is coming more and more into use where first class projection is desired.

Practical Electricity—XI
Study Lessons for the Projectionists

Primary Batteries

A PRIMARY battery or cell is a device for the direct transformation of chemical energy into electrical energy, and consists essentially of dissimilar plates in a solution which acts more readily on one being than the other. A difference of potential is found between two such plates so that if they are joined by a wire an electric current will flow in this wire. The magnitude of the e. m. f. set up is dependent on the material used for the plates and the electrolyte, and for a certain combination of plates is dependent on their area.

A simple cell may be made up as shown in Fig. 34, by placing a plate of copper and a zinc rod in a dilute solution of sulphuric acid and connecting the terminals of these two metals with a wire. The current in the wire or the external circuit flows from the copper to the zinc, and in the solution from the zinc to the copper. When an electric current flows, bubbles of hydrogen are formed on the immersed part of the copper plate, and the zinc rod wears away forming zinc sulphate with the solution.

The term battery is usually applied to an assembly of identical units in series, while the word cell denotes a single unit as assembled for the production of electrical energy.

A primary cell differs from a storage battery in that the chemically reacting parts require renewal, while in the case of the storage battery the chemical condition after a partial or complete discharge may be restored by reversing the current flow, i. e. placing the battery on charge. The separate parts going to make up a primary cell are: the containing jar, electrodes with suitable connections and an electrolytic solution either as a liquid or saturated into some absorbing material. In some types of cells the two electrodes are in different electrolytes which are separated by a porous cup.

Primary cells may be classified as wet batteries, dry batteries, and standard cells.

The wet battery was generally used at one time for laboratory testing, telephone, bells, and other devices requiring a small amount of energy. However, in recent years the dry cell and small storage battery has largely supplanted its use.

A battery consists essentially of two metallic conductors dipped in an electrolyte. Copper or carbon is commonly used for the positive pole and zinc for the negative pole. The electrolyte may be sulphuric or nitric acid, sal-ammoniac or other salt.

On a closed circuit, i.e. when current is flowing, the battery has a smaller e. m. f. or potential difference than an open circuit because of the internal resistance, the polarization, and the exhaustion of the battery. If E is the open circuit e. m. f. and V the potential difference when the current I is flowing, then the internal resistance of the cell may be computed from the formula: E = (E - V)/I. The value of E should be obtained by opening the circuit and measuring the e. m. f. across the terminals because of the polarization effect of the battery.

Daniell cell—This cell is shown by Fig. 35 and makes use of a porous cup to separate the liquids surrounding the electrodes. Copper sulphate is placed in the container in which the positive copper electrode is dipped. A porous cup containing the negative zinc electrode dipped in dilute sulphuric acid is also placed in the container. The e. m. f. of such a cell is between 1.07 and 1.14 which falls to a practically constant voltage of 1.1 when a current is flowing.

This cell is used quite extensively for experimental purposes where a constant potential is required. The zinc is usually amalgamated (covered with mercury) to prevent the washing away of the zinc when not actually producing a current in the external circuit. Commercial zinc dissolves in sulphuric acid even when the external circuit is open because the zinc is impure. Local action is set up between these impurities and the zinc so that a number of small internal batteries are formed. This results in the zinc being consumed without any available voltage at the terminals. To prevent this action the zinc is cleaned and covered with a layer of mercury, which process is known as amalgamating. The cell to prevent deterioration should be de-amalgamated when not in use.

Gravity cell—The principle of this cell is the same as that of the Daniell. Instead of the porous cup to separate the liquids the difference in gravity of the copper sulphate and the zinc sulphate causes them to remain separate. This cell is much used in telegraph and signal work as it must be kept on a closed circuit to operate successfully.

Correct answers to questions of April 17 issue:
14. 4.85 ohms.
15. Yes, by the separate sections being connected together or grounded.
16. 110 ohms.
17. 2 amperes.
18. 26.6 volts.
19. 3 amperes, 36.6 ohms.

The copper electrode is placed at the bottom of the container and covered with copper sulphate crystals. The zinc electrode is suspended from the top edge of the container and the jar filled with dilute zinc sulphate or dilute sulphuric acid.

When the first set up the internal resistance of this cell is quite high, but when kept circuited for some time, this resistance decreases due to the formation of zinc sulphate. To prevent evaporation the surface of the liquid is covered with a thin cork.

When the battery is working properly the line of separation between the copper and zinc sulphates or the "blue line" should be about halfway between the two electrodes.

Leclanché cell—This is a single fluid cell using a solution of sal-ammoniac with electrodes of zinc and carbon. The carbon is enclosed in a porous cup and surrounded with manganese dioxide and broken carbon. The sal-ammoniac diffuses thru the porous cup to the carbon and forms the conducting medium between the two electrodes.

The initial e. m. f. of this battery is about 1.5 volts. This falls off more or less when the current flows, as the hydrogen around the carbon electrode is not oxidized as rapidly as formed chlorine. The cell will, however, when left on open circuit and is suitable for intermittent duty, as signal bells and telephone work, and need not be disassembled when not in use.

Dry Battery—The dry battery is quite similar to the Leclanché cell with regard to its make up and chemical actions. This cell is a modification of a liquid cell in which only enough electrolyte is used to moisten the absorbent material between the two electrodes. This material is then dipped in a paste of carbon and manganese peroxide, the latter being a depolarizer. The top of the battery is sealed with a pitch composition to prevent evaporation of the electrolyte.

The e. m. f. of new cells is between 1.5 and 1.6 volts, the decrease with age on open circuit being very small. An open circuit voltage of less than 1.5 is an indication of serious deterioration. Due to the relatively rapid polarization and internal resistance with use, the average terminal voltage, during the life of the cell, is about 1.0 volt. The internal resistance of a dry battery when new is about 0.1 ohm.

A measure of the value of a cell may be determined to a certain extent by a short circuit current test, i.e. the current produced thru an ammeter having a relatively small resistance connected in parallel between the terminals of the battery. This test should be made at a normal temperature or about 60 degrees F.

The value of the short circuit current should be between 16 and 25 amperes. A battery giving a reading of more than 25 amperes is liable to polarize rapidly, and a reading of less than 18 is an indication that the battery has been made a long time or that cheap material has been used.

The shelf-life of a dry battery is the time which the cell may stand stored on open circuit without the short circuit current falling below 10 or 12 amperes. This current is about half the short circuit current of the cell when new.

(Discussion of General Advantages of the White Flame Lamps for Motion Picture Photography)

The following ten points repeat a few of the advantages of the flame lamps for photographic artists: the greatest efficiency; best color duplicating day light; instant response when the current is turned on; less steadiness from fluctuating line voltage; wearing part of the smallest cost per unit; most rugged to all kinds of mechanical and electrical abuse and to adverse weather conditions; lowest cost of installation and operation; can be used for spot lighting or with screen for diffuse lighting or reflector for direct lighting; largest candlepower per single unit and maximum portability in proportion to candlepower.

Special Lighting Effects

In considering the lighting of moving picture studios, we will consider first overhead lighting and then side lighting. In regard to overhead lighting there are two classes—diffused and concentrated. The diffuse lighting is often obtained in the glass studios by use of overhead flame arcs which occupy only a small area and allow considerable of daylight to enter the scene. The concentrated overhead lighting is secured by mounting in a large reflector a score of flame lamps or by the use of very powerful spot light or flame searchlight.

In overhead lighting with flame arcs for the Edison studio is shown in Fig. 18, and for the Vitagraph studio in Fig. 20 and 21. In Fig. 10 there is shown overhead lighting with the blue bulb daylight incandescent lights in the Edison studio. Other modes of lighting are shown in Figs. 22, 24, 25 and 26.

For side lighting powerful flame lamps on stands with wheels are universally used. A well known illumination expert for motion pictures, Mr. Mayer of Wohl & Co., states that the best lighting for moving picture stage is ordinarily given by using 50 per cent more side lighting than top lighting, and that the so-called L arrangement (Fig. 23) is generally more effective for lighting than the box arrangement. The side lighting should have contrast to give the proper perspective. The angular sweep of the camera is usually such that the distance from camera divided by two gives the width of the operating field (close-ups of 4 feet cover an approximate width of 2 feet).

The diagram, Fig. 23, illustrates roughly, the L arrangement. In this arrangement there are shown the long wall of the scene to the short wall with the camera opposite the short wall and a number of side lights. The overhead lighting is not shown. Small reflectors are used with the side lamps to give short light coming back toward the camera, but of course not into it. This gives a good reflection on surface sidewise to the light because the light is reflected so obliquely that a large amount is carried to the camera from sidesurfaces, and this arrangement gives the much desired line and Rembrandt effects, or as better known to the motion picture artist as molding and modelling effects. The working area of such a stage is therefore bounded by the long wall and short wall and the camera line, outside of which the lights must be. The distance outside should be sufficient to avoid harsh changes due to inverse square law.

The use of real scenery in place of painted scenery gives, of course, the best results. Real scenery should be lighted from the side. Painted scenery should be lighted directly from the front with the light striking nearly perpendicular. If the scene is set up with painted scenery, two sets of lighting should be used, one for the foreground and the other for the painted scenery.

4. Astigmatism is an aberration that is inherent to all oblique bundles of rays passing through a lens. If we consider such a bundle coming from a point passing through the lens at an angle of, say, 20°, the bundle does not meet in a point as one expects it would, but in two distinct lines at right angles to one another, and considerably separated. This aberration increases with the angularity of the bundle, and is the main cause of falling off of definition in the corner of the plate. You all must know the characteristic effect of Astig-matism—two distinct image places for vertical and horizontal gratings.

The new glasses that have been evolved, Dense Barium Crown glasses in particular, have been the means of enabling the designers to combat this aberration, and as a result no astigmatism exists today which has not some Dense Barium Crown lenses in its composition.

5. Coma is also an aberration affecting oblique bundles of rays, and can be explained more readily as spherical aberration of oblique bundles. Here the aperture of the lens is mainly responsible in causing coma to be of such order as to make sharp definition in the weights, suspended by 1/2 inch pipe measures 34, inches in length. The ball and weights aggregate 150 pounds. To facilitate carrying, the ball has a cross pipe through it to serve as handle. With camera loaded the complete outfit weighs about 250 pounds. The tripod legs corner of the plate impossible. The drawing will show the character of the coma aberration.

For central and axis-parallel rays, the image falls as before in O. If we imagine a photograph plate in this place, it is clearly seen what a fearful image the lens has made of a point in the object which it was supposed to produce as a point. In fact, there is no image at all, and unless this aberration is carefully attended to, it may completely spoil the best astigmatical correction. Coma follows in its development the same tendency as the astig-matism. It increases rapidly from the center of the plate outward.

R. Simmons, Paducah, Ky., writes:

Will try and write a few lines from the moonshine state.

Now, because our State is famous for moonshine, doesn't make us all drink moonshine. However, I get a lot of moonshine on my way home nights. It seems to me that everyone is trying to place the blame on the other fellow in regards to punch hole signals.

I know of only one remedy for this and that is to put a secret service man on the trail. A man who knows the profession from A to Z can tell the moment he looks into the Projectors Booth where any damage is being done to the film—just by the appearance of the booth. Some one suggested a smaller label to put on the bands instead of the box. Take a look at the ones enclosed which I recently had printed at very little cost (I had to omit the league cut because I didn't have it).

This town at present is 100% N. A. M. L. Reply:

Those were mighty fine, neat looking and well designed labels you enclosed with your letter. From the many letters we get advising the use of a smaller label there is no doubt but that we will have to have all future ones made according to the general wish.

That "100% for Paducah" is something that not many other towns can say. In fact, we doubt if any city the size of yours can equal your record.

STOP motion is used again in the first part of this strip, and illustrates very well the opening of buds into full-blooming flowers. These are all close-ups and tinted, and an audience will find real interest in them. For they are unique and educational without being in the least didactic. Dr. Simon Flexon, head of the Rockefeller Institute, has been "shot" for the section of the reel dealing with "Master Minds of America." He is seen at work in his laboratory, and we are given a few views of germ culture and some analytical experiments. The cartoon, the third portion of the strip, is of the "police" type, being satirical drawings on the change of dress and manners during the past forty years. It is entertaining, but aims to be clever rather than laugh-provoking. It is also relatively clean. The strip on the whole contains considerable interest for any class of audience.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Nothing But Girls" (Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—One Reel—Fox)

MUTT AND JEFF invade a young ladies' seminary in this latest comic. Jeff disguises himself as the physical training professor and proceeds to give the girls a lesson. He proves very proficient in archery, only Mutt is hiding behind the target and the results are disastrous. There is hardly enough new stuff in the reel to make it more than average pleasing. The best bit is when Jeff and the aged professor drink a little too much together and make a drunk scene. This is, however, entirely inoffensive, as is the entire reel.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes" (Selznick)

If you don't mind the coincidental twin sister idea and the double exposure, with its necessarily stilted action, you will have a good picture in this latest Elanne Hammerstein vehicle. The star is chiefly responsible for the good impression that this picture leaves. Despite the fact that she is almost identical in make-up and dress in both roles (for the twins are both modern New York girls) Miss Hammerstein has seen to it that the audience never mistakes the young lady of the chorus for her more conventional sister, and vice versa.

The story is just what you have learned to expect of a dual role drama. Rosalie is a lovely, true young wife, her twin is an adventurer with a shady past, and twin number one is blamed, of course, for all her sister's escapades. Her husband learns his error in the end and the two are united. The author has gone back to war days for the setting of the story, and the opening scenes are in an army cantonment. Only one brief flash of the trenches is shown, and then the action shifts to America after the war.

It would seem that this picture would have held much more interest had it come a year sooner. Hasty marriages just before the soldier-husband sailed for overseas, the regret of his apparent mistake, and then the happy reunion after the war—all this would have been far more timely and interesting when the transports were bringing home the troops. The director has managed to inject several real thrills in the scene where the star is alone in the house with the body of the man, who is thought to have been murdered. To do this, however, he was obliged to omit what might have been a dramatic scene of the husband's return. A sub-title preserves the continuity, but does not entirely satisfy.

The production is very elaborate. Some excellent interior work is worked in. The entire cast is up to the mark, and the star ought to win new admirers in this picture. She shows up well in the emotional scenes and displays distinct personalities in the two different roles. The feature ought to prove a good average program picture.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Gingham Girl" (Two-Reel Mack Sennett Comedy—Revised by Famous Players-Lasky)

THE Gingham Girl is quite an improvement on the late program releases from the Sennett studios not that in plot or business provided there is so much that is really new but because the so-called "old stuff" has been given a new twist and for the reason that the action is good throughout. A white duck figure in the first part of the offering which together with a fox terrier also contributes in lifting the picture from the plane of ordinary slap stick.

The story told is of the usual low comedy vintage, the girl, who has a fortune with all the males in the cast trying to marry her. The last part of the picture contains some trick camera stuff which registers as exceptional. Length 2 reels.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"School Days" (Larry Semon Special Comedy—Produced by Vitagraph)

SCHOOL DAYS, with Larry Semon as chief troublemaker, sets a first and furiously pace in a burlesque of "kid" events in the school room for the first half, while the last half presents the same character "grown up" in an equally funny series of scenes where trick photography, fake brick walls, chases and all the orthodox slapstick material is presented in a heterogeneous hodgepodge, excusable in low comedy and especially so since this is Semon's dream as he sleeps in the school room.

With the exception of a scene or two where some of the characters wallow around in mud holes, the offering is exceptional. Length 2 reels.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"The Hope of Adventure" (Bruce Secorie—Educational—One Reel)

ROBERT BRUCE has traveled around enough to appreciate the comforts and discomforts of a hobo's life. He has been a "knight of the open road" ever since he took up the cause of the camera. But he is traveling further on a hobo's "property" by using the top of a moving train to capture some scenes of adventure—its journey being over the White Pass to the Yukon region. It's a narrow gauge railroad which is presented here in the open spaces of Alaska.

It curves and winds itself about the mountains always climbing until the White Pass is reached then the journey becomes easier. A little speed is gathered when Bennett Lake is visible and the ride alongside the shore is quite enchanting. The trains are built of logs and when it is in the open, wide vistas of Nature's art make a feast for the eye. The Yukon is reached and the photographers and explorers are safely launched in a small flat-boat. They are still searching for adventure. Yet they cannot deny that riding on the roof of a train as it glides along in a snake-like course is not adventurous. It looks like a hazardous feat to use. The offering is highly picturesque and measures up to the Bruce standard.—LAURENCE REID.
"MRS. TEMPLE'S TELEGRAM" (Paramount-Arcaft)

Bryant Washburn Is Fairly Successful in Adapted Farce

TWENTY years or more have gone by since "Mrs. Temple's Telegraph" first appeared on the stage—a long enough time for the present generation to be entirely ignorant of the fact. But it once made its parents and grand-parents rock with laughter. The original farce carried such a flood of humorous situations and dialogue that it sort of established itself as a model of its kind. The piece set such a rapid pace for itself that its screen version had to be brought into comparison and naturally the celluloid treatment suffers.

The theme itself, which is based upon the idea of earning a young bride of foolish jealousies, has become heavy with age since it has formed the background of nearly every varied film. But it falls upon Washburn to carry the technical burden, and it is for him that the "description" of the farce has been transferred to a new and better instrument. True it is a well-made picture, the continuity flowing along easily and spontaneously, and with a fair amount of humor generated. But our experts gain more from a farce which was originally a kitchen comedy than they have in the plot and situation with the exception of the role played by Walter Hiets. Most of them have shared in this or that getting the full humor.

Were it not for the explosions the piece would disclose very few comic highlights. Nevertheless, it is noticed that the quota audience laughed more at the word pictures than at any situation or climax. The "telegraph" of the title comes in when the suspicions wife endeavors to call her husband's bluff and the latter involving himself deeper in a fabulation of lies as well as some innocent partialities. The reply comes across the country lines, but is not nearly as amusing as the letter which the women (the wife's best friend, incidentally) are simply for the purpose of making the latter's jealous disposition. Even in a farce truth must be presented even though it is exaggerated. Here the wife is shown as a responsible of a dance when she seemed to be with but she had been to a ball which might have been fmelier had not so much been expected from it. —Length, 5 reels—

Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Bryant Washburn, Mrs. Temple, Mrs. Phillips, Pauline, Mrs. Fuller, Mrs. Brown, Blanche Morris.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A comedy which long endured on the stage as one of the most humorous pieces ever written has been transferred to the screen. The name of it is "Mrs. Temple's Telegraph," and the stories and incidents involved are amusing and so ideally suited to the screen personality. It sparkles with rare comedy throughout its story interest covering everything from the stage to the screen room. This is a cheap farce, the type of wife jealousy of her husband. He becomes the victim of an innocent farce which keeps him out all nights. Of course he knows his wife will never believe his story so he invents another one which in reality is putting the "dying man in the fire." Mrs. Temple suspects his tale is false and so sends the faithful telegram to his friend who is involved. Complications ensue rapidly with identities mixed up and romance finding expression in various ways. In the end Mr. Temple is given a clean bill of health and all is in screen in the household. The picture is a lively piece of entertainment which doesn't carry a dull moment—mix-up of husbands and wives carrying chiefly to the mark. Mr. Washburn is assisted by the pretty Wanda Hawley and others. James Cruze is the director.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have a stage success which has lost the values of this picture before your public. The fact that it was considered one of the funniest comedies ever written has been the basis of it will be told in the new version. Its patrons are doubtless aware of the fact that this star is truly fortunate with his screen face and his latest picture is likely to rank with his other good productions. You can exploit this picture through teases, teasers and newspaper copy in a big-fun fashion. Extras may be varied for your patrons in the characteristic style used in the play. Play it up as a dramatic comedy which means outbursts laughter.

"THE DARK MIRROR" (Ince-Paramount-Arcaft)

Fairly Interesting Crook Melodrama with Dorothy Dalton

OUIS J. VANCE delves into psycho-analysis or the subconscious for the basis behind "The Dark Mirror," which in its screen form furnishes Dorothy Dalton with her latest expression. It is only a complicated picture—one too highly involved for the average spectator since he must concentrate upon the idea of a crook and mystery and the technique of a fair murder. The Dark Mirror is not easy to follow, but there are times when its complexity becomes jumpy, due probably to faulty cutting. Psychic phenomena is difficult to understand even when sponsored by a friend and offered in cold print. It becomes even more complex when used as the basis of dramatic conflict.

Some discussion by scientists of late who have insisted that twins are guided by subconscious influence—that what one feels is also felt by the other. So it develops upon Dorothy Dalton as a good twin to develop the same processes of mind of the bad one—caused by the star. In the end Mr. Vance's head is the latter influenced by the disciple of righteousness. Which is natural, because there would be no melodrama. The bad sister is a member of a vicious gang of the underworld. And during the good twin's sleeping moments she goes through the identical experiences—even to the extent of calling off the right names of the criminals. So the good doctor, her fiancée, unearths the mystery in her life. And it is mystery—no mistake about it.

The action is truly mystifying and complicated with highfaintful crook melodrama. When it becomes discernible at times it strikes the observer as not being probable but true. At such times the action implicit in the story although this element has its reward in the full measure of surprise. Only through the convincing quality of Miss Dalton's impersonation does the feature offer any sustaining interest. As the bad twin she seems to have nine lives and the contrast between the two characters is marked. The doctor is. The picture is, therefore, the relation of the evil one is murdered. The romantic interest is a negligible factor. This picture may please those who revel in scientific theory. The majority may say—what's it all about?—Length, 5 reels—

Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Dorothy Dalton, Dr. Philip Fordwich, Playwright, Neeland, Jesse Arnold, Maguire, Pedro de Cordoba, Bert Starkey.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dorothy Dalton, the gifted star of the screen and stage, will appear at the picture beginning this week in her latest photoplay entitled "The Dark Mirror." In this production she plays the dual role of two identical twins thus establishing her versatility. The story itself is declared to be most unusual and splendid and the life of the underworld. That it details a consider of the subject. One may define it as a thrilling romance of New York society and the underworld. The star impersonations are vividly presented with. As Priscilla Main, a society girl, she admires Dr. Fordwich, a young physician. To him she relates a series of dreams which have perplexed her during slumber. In them she sees herself as a girl of the underworld who has several unusual adventures. She can even recall the names of the people in the visions. The doctor reads the account of a murder and recognizes the participants involved as those described by Priscilla. Mysterious for a girl of the slums, Priscilla is kidnapped and fallen into some thrilling adventures in the city. Finally rescued. The picture is equal to the demands of Miss Dalton's talents, it giving her one of the strong photographic roles she has played. Under good assistance are Hunley Gordon, Pedro de Cordoba and Walter Neeland. Charles Gibly directed the feature from a scenario by E. Magnus Ingleton.

PROGRAM READER

Louis Joseph Vance knows how to write an entertaining story. Many of our patrons are doubtless familiar with his fiction and whenever his tales have been transferred upon the screen they have made interesting pictures. "The Dark Mirror" is one of his most absorbing novels and it presents the versatile Dorothy Dalton in a dual role for the screen. The story itself is in the underworld. It may be best described as a tense romantic drama of the upper and the lower. Louis Joseph Vance has written this picture and his usual opportunity offered her and makes her acting compelling in every scene and situation. A capable support is given by the cast. The feature is directed from a scenario by E. Magnus Ingleton. The picture comes to the screen on next week.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have a combination shot for the star and exploitation. Everybody who indulges in fiction reading is familiar with the name of Louis Joseph Vance. He has had several of his contributions transferred to the screen. And everybody is familiar with the work of Dorothy Dalton. Exploit the picture as a romantic drama of New York society and the life of the underworld. The picture should have a small amount of vivid and vital action and furnishes the screen with the best vehicle she has had in years. With the beneficial help of a strong supporting cast. With the steady microscopy comes certainly familiar with the names of the schedartist and director. Send them up.

"THE FORTUNE TELLER"
(Capellini-Robertson-Cole)

Store of Mother-Love Theme Is Nearly Swamped with Incident

HAROLD MACGRATH gives incident to itself a subject which is long enough in itself to occupy an important place in the annals of psychopathic literature. But the "Fortune Teller" lacks the tense and dramatic interest of a real-life problem. The story is so built up that it lacks the emotional impact of a real-life experience. The plot is cut and dried and takes its characters through an assortment of-bizarre and startling incidents with the least possible development of character. The result is a failure to make the audience interested in the characters. The acting is poor, the plot is weak, and the whole production is a failure.

Rene Browning, Marjorie Rambeau, Tony Saliass, Stephen Browning, Lucille Bremer, Arthur Lee, Virginia Lee

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The potential of mother-love and the mystic of psychopathic phenomena are admirably illustrated through the art of Marjorie Rambeau in the adaptation of the play "The Fortune Teller" on Broadway. The story, which was written by the talented team of Capellini and Robertson-Cole, is a masterpiece of psychological suspense. The acting is superb, and the production is a triumph of stagecraft.

PROGRAM READER

A picture of deep mother-love and the mysteries of psychopathic phenomena is "The Fortune Teller," the screen version of the Broadway success of the same name which comes to the screen in the near future with Marjorie Rambeau. Psychopathic phenomena is a subject of much discussion today, and everybody is talking about it. The screen shows itself admirably suited for the theme, and the production is a triumph of stagecraft.

SUGGESTIONS

The theme of this play is based on psychopathic phenomena—a subject which is being discussed throughout the length and breadth of America. Make an effort to bring this theme to the screen and create a new interest in the public. The acting of Miss Rambeau in this feature is truly marvelous. Her grasp of the import of the subject and her contribution to the entertainment are Raymond McKee, Frederick Burton and E. 1. M. Kopal.

"EVERYTHING BUT THE TRUTH"
(Parachute)

Bedroom Farce, Only Mildly Amusing

Mixing up two young couples, and centering the action mostly in the boudoir, will hardly make as popular a picture as it does a stage play. Even two such comedians as Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, who get in good work, cannot keep up to top speed, and the laughs are not as real as one would expect them to be. The story, once it gets started, develops slowly, which really hampers the comedy. There are no new or fascinating comedy situations; no real comedy characterization, and the whole idea seems to be played up at an early date. There are subtitles galore and the spicy dialogue helps the picture along.

The picture is no more suggestive than the Broadway bedroom farce and no less so. Billy Hervey has a jealous fiancee, and his wife is a newswoman. Jack goes, he gets on business, and his wife is used by a newswoman. If you listen to the music you will know everything that is likely to happen. The last scene is the parting embrace in the boudoir.

The cast includes Helen Grayco, who is Edna Lewis; Ann Cornwall, who is the newswoman; Helen Mollenhauer, who is the new wife; and Elizabeth Witt, who is the newswoman's wife.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, both comedians, are starred in “Everything But the Truth,” which will be the attraction at the Academy theatre on Thursday. Eddie Lyons, who is the new wife, and Lee Moran, who is the newswoman, are the stars and neither will allow an introduction to you. Both have been before the camera and they have earned for themselves reputations equal to no other. They are the perfect combination in the Universal picture, which has a story which will allow you to keep quiet for one minute at a time, for it is one of the most laugh-stimulating scenes under the sun. The stars are equally well known, for a team that has no peer is this team.

In this, their latest Universal picture, both are very much in love. Lee Moran is a newswoman, who cannot stand being separated from his wife for more than a minute at a time. Eddie Lyons is engaged to marry her and is just as bad. But fate mixes the two love-sick couples and no end of complications ensue. As expected, Eddie helps to cause the trouble, when he insists that he is the doctor and institutes two of them in a deserted house. Of course, he gets very “fairy” so Eddie Lyons and his wife try to get out of it. But Lyons does not pay and finally after telling “everything but the truth,” they discover the mosaic’s keeper and both couples are reunited once more.

In the cast besides the two stars are Katherine Lewis and Anne Cornell, both capable supports for Lyons and Moran.

PROGRAM READER

After having been up with emotional motion picture drama you will come such a light farce as “Everything But the Truth,” which will run at this theatre on Thursday. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are the stars and neither will allow an introduction to you. Both have been before the camera and they have earned for themselves reputations equal to no other. They are the perfect combination in the Universal picture, which has a story which will allow you to keep quiet for one minute at a time, for it is one of the most laugh-stimulating scenes under the sun. The stars are equally well known, for a team that has no peer is this team.

"THE THIRTIETH PIECE OF SILVER"
(American-Pathé)

This feature is well up to standard and should please any audience for whom it is played. It has what we are all looking for nowadays—a pleasing combination. This is brought about by the selection of an interesting story, which unfolds very well, careful direction both in the action, which runs smoothly throughout, and the selection of sets which were lavished in the making, and put together with many beautiful exteriors and a well known cast which did commendable work.

Margaret Fisher has a likable role which is never overcome either in the lighter or heavier moments and she wears many beautiful gowns which should be of interest to the women folk.

King Daggott, who plays the leading role seems to be getting in the honor class among actors upon the screen, if we may be permitted to say this, for it is his work which is superb in every way, especially his knowledge of the tempo of the various scenes which were not only handled, but handled, that the story together in many instances and gave understanding to a point that would not be convincing in the hands of a less experienced actor.

The title which may be misleading in a way, in that it might suggest a biblical story, has nothing whatever to do with that world renowned book, but rather refers to the last remnant of an old coin which Judas received for his betrayal of the Master. And it is through the story that a man is wealthy and whose "hobby" is the collection of valuable coins that trouble arose. He had secured possession of the most valuable coin in the world and it was said that he loved it even more than his wife. He kept it in his safe place and when his wife never to open the cabinet in which he kept his wife's belongings, she was never to open his wife's things. As the thing was told not to do, she and her suspicions were aroused. She found it—and then she lost it, and in so doing very nearly lost her husband. But then a big surprise happens which brings love and happiness to the drifting couple.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Margaret Fisher in her latest American feature for the Pathé release will be the attraction at this theatre from Thursday of next.

This is considered Miss Fisher's best picture to date for it gives her an opportunity to portray a character—a character that is truly feminine. She is not only a wife, but a mother, and a wife and a mother. She is not only a wife, but a mother, and a wife and a mother. She is not only a wife, but a mother, and a wife and a mother.

In this story she is the wife of a man who is very much in love with his wife. She is not only a wife, but a mother, and a wife and a mother.

The story is a delightful one, for it tells how the wife of a man who is very much in love with his wife.

“FORBIDDEN TRAILS” (Fox)

Buck Jones in Good Average Western

Buck JONES' second starring vehicle contains enough plot to make it really interesting, and the star contributes his bit by getting in some good action. He has a free and easy manner and a pleasing personality, and is a good enough actor to get past the emotional spots in the picture in fine style. There is nothing extra big about the production, but the star does not daredevil stunts to leave any deep impressions, but on the whole it can be classified as sufficiently entertaining for an audience that delights in a western drama, with a villain-punishing hero theme. There are the usual pair of two fists and trusty guns.

Jones plays “Squint.” Taylor, youthful owner of a western ranch. A mining partner of his is murdered, and Taylor receives deathbed instructions to care for the daughter. But the girl is under the influence of an uncle, who in turn is dominated by the “heavy” who wants to cheat her out of her share in the mine. This villain is extra heavy, physically and theatrically speaking, and it is possible that Stanton Heck may be thought to have overdone his villainy. Taylor is kept from being installed sheriff and on the oath of a “guesser” is to be arrested for the murder of his old partner. But he puts up a fight andresists arrest and finally the greater confessing his own villainy.

This is not, of course, an unusually strong plot, but there is enough of it there to keep up the interest, and it also provides the star with ample opportunities to ride and fight. The latter is done in a realistic and vigorous manner, and is to do credit to both actors. Stanton Westover plays opposite the star, and the story gives her very fine opportunities to show her pretty, curly hair. The rest of the cast and the cowboy extras are all satisfying and reflect good direction. Length, 5 reels. —Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A story of the West will be the attraction at the —— theatre on “Forbidden Trails” is the title, and Buck Jones, the new Fox star, is in the leading role. Although Buck Jones is comparatively new in stardom, he has already made himself well-known to thousands of fans. He is former stage, hayseeder, and soldier in the war, and served with the United States cavalry as a trainer of horses. While he was in France he and Fox was attracted by the skill of this young man and made him a leading player. Playing opposite him is pretty Winifred Westover, and others in the cast are Stanton Heck, George Kunkel and Fred Herzog. The picture has quite a lot of conflict and politics in the West, and the final downfall of the plotters. Besides the star there is a capable and pleasing cast, splendid direction, and excellent photography. And in addition the picture was taken among the beautiful mountains of Arizona, giving a wonderful scenic background for this entertaining story.

SUGGESTIONS

Buck Jones seems about the best bet for this picture. There are plenty of good tricks you can use, showing off at his best. He has a picturesque history as a cowboy, and is very likely to sink into his role. He can be hauled up as much as any other pictures, and you can be sure that he will have many good opportunities in his future reading. —“Forbidden Trails” is a ‘forbidden trail,” Buck Jones—Sheriff. Being a Western, there is plenty of material for street parades or lobby displays.

CATCH LINES
Her father chose a husband for her, and she obeyed him. But then the husband was not a French count but Buck Jones, the Fox star in “Forbidden Trails.”

“THE SILVER HORSE” (Rey Beach-Goldwyn)

Interesting, But Rather Short on Drama and Action

THEMephotoplay version of “The Silver Horse” is an epitome of the complete novel, which rather leaves lengthening lacunae and results in a production considerably below that of most of Mr. Beach’s stories, especially its immediate predecessor, “The Girl from Oklahoma.”

The principal fault of “The Silver Horse” lies in the fact that “it doesn’t stay anywhere.” The story begins in Alaska, jumps to New York and then goes back to its starting place, with a stop over at Seattle. Incidents that happened in the lives of its principal characters extending over at least a year are told in short and ever-changing sequences. The audience can never get a hold on the main characters for which the beach pictures are famous, is missing. There is some action, of course, but it is incidental and not vital.

Nevertheless the offering is a lot better than the average picture of today. There may not be much drama in viewing thousands of salmon departing from their native element through the impingement of man or in watching what happens to them before they reach the “caused” stage, but the process is interesting. The feature boasts many very fine scenic backgrounds. Some of the snow shots are truly beautiful. The cast which plays the various roles is very good, but none are given an opportunity to impress exceptionally, including the unintentional Robert Mckin as the bad, bad villain. Even “Cherry Mollotte,” famous in the famous “The Spillers,” is a very ordinary person in “The Silver Horse.”

Truly the best parts provided are those given the salmon. Length, 6 reels. —J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Rey Beach’s most famous story of Alaskan life “The Silver Horse” has been adapted to the screen for display in an authentic manner and will be the attraction at the —— theatre for a 4 days engagement beginning Friday.

For those who have seen the other Beach-Goldwyn pictures, “The Barrier,” “The Silver Horde,” and “The Forgotten Trails,” there will be no recommendation. Mr. Beach knows his Alaska and in his word painting of life in that land no one has ever reached him in the faithfulness of his portrayals. “The Silver Horse” is a melodrama, but it is a well-informed melodrama, and the story is told with a freshness and simplicity that is unexcelled. Length, 4 reels. —E. F. Soward.

PROGRAM READER

For those who have enjoyed the pictures adapted from Rey Beach’s stories, notable of which have been “The Spillers,” “The Brand,” “The Girl From Outside,” etc., the booking of “The Silver Horse” for a 4 days showing at this theatre beginning —— will be an event not to be missed. “The Silver Horse” contains those rare dramatic qualities which have characterized Mr. Beach’s former contributions to the screen. It is a story of the salmon canning industry of Alaska, the manner of capturing the great fish and much that is beautiful and true of the salmon and its habitat. The cast which has been selected for the various roles is as star as has been Mr. Beach’s custom in selecting pictures for his projects. The picture is a fine running picture for the big specials of the year shown at the —— and is a guaranteed attraction. We have booked it firmly convinced that it will be hailed as the greatest feature of the season, which has been the verdic of the patrons of such theatres as the Capitol, New York, the California, Los Angeles; the Imperial, San Francisco, where the production had pre-release showings.

SUGGESTIONS

The way to advertise “The Silver Horse” or any Rey Beach picture is to produce a successful and realistic display. For newspaper display use stills showing the big moments of the picture and explain the story with three or four words in a larger type. Don’t use the word “Alaskan” in the copy, but remind your patrons of the other Rey Beach pictures promising another feature of like quality.

Mention the hordes of salmon and the salmon canning industry which is a background in the story. Use the word “living” to describe the action, and remind people who care more for scenic shots than they do for the dramatic qualities of a picture. Opposite each of the pictures the big special is presented in the picture. The window of salmon and salmon advertising matter for the feature including stills which show the story is well centered for the big specials. The sheet stand is always effective in an Alaskan or Western picture, especially a Rey Beach production, as his name means something to every person. Use plenty of paper for this reason.

For stage settings we suggest inspection of a photograph to be found in the Service Bureau section. The same idea may be carried out for lobby display.

THE CAST

Rosie Ray, Lynette, Brad Mortetter, Arthur Lyle.

PRESS NOTICE — STORY

Gertrude Griffith in her latest Vitagraph feature, "The Garter Girl," will appear at this theatre on Saturday, 10th of next.

The story is by O. Henry and is said to contain all the elements of success, which have made this wonderful writer of American life popular. And Miss Griffith is said to have handled her part with great success, and the result of this is that the character of the story is complete.

PROGRAMME

Gertrude Griffith will appear in her latest Vitagraph feature, "The Garter Girl," on Saturday, 10th of next.

“THE DEVIL’S CLAIM”

(Haworth-Robertson-Cole)

Japanese Star in Fantastic, Involved Story

HE "story within a story" idea is resurrected in this latest Hayakawa picture. The star is a Persian author, and the greater part of the picture is a picturization of a serial which he is supposed to be writing for a popular magazine. And pictures this fact so that we go to make a story successful in scenarios form. As far as we could see there wasn’t a slipup in the detailed arrangement of the scenes as they followed one another, thus giving the story the required amount of balance and at the same time allowing the picture to tell its story in a quiet and understandable way.

THE CAST

Akber Khan, Toru号线, Colleen Moore, William Mitchell.

PRESS NOTICE — STORY

Susumu Hayakawa, the talented Japanese actor, is the star in "The Devil’s Claim," which will be the attraction at — [theatre on 10th of next]. Hayakawa is far too versatile to confine his work to the portrayal of Japanese roles only, and in this latest picture is seen as a Persian author, whose novels have brought him fame and success in America, and made him the idol of all Greenwich Village.

PROGRAM READER

Once more we can announce the arrival of that popular star, Susumu Hayakawa, who has made for himself a name that may be envied by any other screen star in America. This time he plays the part of a Persian author, in a story that will thrill and please you. You can’t help liking Hayakawa, and you will feel the same way about Rhea Mitchell and Colleen Moore, who support him in this picture.

SUGGESTIONS

Tell your Hayakawa fans that this is a picture that gives their favorite every opportunity to please and thrill them. If you have played "The Beggar Prince," "The Half-Caste," and "The Cousin of Lopey," recall all these. "It is an escape for his usual role. Play up the supernatural and mysterious atmospheres, and interest the audience by telling a little about the "transmigration of souls." The atmosphere lends itself to ghost effects if you want to go in for it. The production scenes on make an impressive appearance, and if you do not want a parade, only two good types in your hobby."

Do You Want Honest Reviews?

The truth of the review situation as it affects trade papers is an important matter to every exhibitor and producer.

The exhibitor knows its importance to him in his daily business.

The producer should appreciate its importance when he realizes that the only trade paper that is of value to him is the trade paper that is believed—that is honored and followed because of its intelligent editing and courageous upholding of its convictions.

Turn to William A. Johnston’s editorial in this issue and learn—the truth.

JUST AS AUDIENCES crowded your theatre to see Cecil B. De Mille's "Why Change Your Wife?" they will crowd it to see "Old Wives for New."

When this epoch-making production was released there were fewer theatres and fewer theatre-goers.

It is the first of De Mille's series on married happiness, that marvelous series which, culminating in "Why Change Your Wife?", established new standards for the motion picture.

Those who saw it then want to see it now. Those who didn't see it always wished they had. Show it to them!

New prints and a complete new line of accessories ready.

"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" is a never-to-be-forgotten masterpiece, a picture that still stands as the best Mary Pickford has ever made.

Many people have seen it, and to them it is a wonderful, living memory. But many others have not.

Show it to them now! They all want to see it—those who saw it then and those who wish they had!

An ARTCRAFT Picture
HUGE!

A PICTURE that has laid hold of the public imagination by reason of the hugeness of its canvas. Great deserts across which slow moving caravans wend their way—where the Black Horse Troop swoops down to levy tribute—where the Virgin, raging at their head, storms the gates of Buskra to save her American soldier lover from the doom of Achmet Hamid. A stupendous photo-drama that fills the mind with emotions as huge as its wondrous pictures. Just exactly the kind of a super-cinema for which the cinema was invented.

"Dollars And The Woman"

HAVE just read synopsis and seen stills of your production of "Dollars and the Woman." Regard this as one of the greatest present-day themes, and urge you to special efforts to push this production. Photoplay is playing it up. Fictionized version strong as one of its best editorial features. It is a great domestic sermon that should show the way to happiness in these days when the living problem brings despair, misunderstanding and consequent unhappiness into thousands of homes.

President of Vitagraph
TIMELINESS—

ALICE JOYCE has the play of the hour in "Dollars and the Woman." With the high cost of living rampant and incomes unreasonably inflated, the theme of this extraordinary play, by Albert Payson Terhune, dealing with extravagance when money is plenty, not alone is a delight to lovers of good pictures, but is pertinent to the present-day mode of living.

As Madge Hillyer, Miss Joyce, through extravagance, so well learns the meery of poverty that when wealth comes again she is not capable of enjoying it. The story is new—up to the minute.
This inspiring, human photoplay is a segment of American life that might have been plucked from your own neighborhood. Madge and Dan Hillyer with all of their joys and sorrows, their faith and their follies, may be living right around the corner from you, in the next block, or just across the street.

For Madge and Dan were just ordinary clay. But they were good clay. Two men loved Madge. She turned her back on the golden apples that one offered her and was content to munch a daily crust with the other. She gambled on the futures of Fate and she willingly changed herself from a gay peacock to a little drab wren to show her faith in Life and Love. And the gods gave her metal more than the acid test. Into a home where the bluebird of happiness held forth came the dragon of despair and jealousy. Invisible but torturing fires consumed the souls of Madge and Dan, but when they had burned down, the gold was there.

You will say to your people when you see this splendid photoplay: "Come and let us look at ourselves." And when they come and probe into the hearts of Madge and Dan they will be sure to find there many ringing echoes of their own.

and scores of other powerful American stories.

A Picture That Will Be Remembered Because IT IS BEING LIVED TODAY by tens of thousands of men and women—men and women who every day are compelled to tread the shadowed path of sacrifice which so frequently leads out into the sunlit highway of real happiness.

A Story of DOLLARS—great piles of DOLLARS—packed with the power of good and of evil, packed with happiness and with misery.

A Story of
A WOMAN—of that breed whose gentle caress could have made thrones rock and dynasties topple—but who preferred A HOME AND A MATE.

A Story of
LOVE weaving its golden thread in and out, dropping a stitch here and there when JEALOUSY enters.
At four, doing children's parts on the one-night stands.
Then, a decade later, a child actress in the movies.
Ability tells: leading parts in great special and star productions.

729 SEVENTH AVENUE    Telephone Bryant 5426    NEW YORK CITY
It is seldom that a motion picture is produced that will leave the impression that James Oliver Curwood's "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" leaves upon audiences. It is truly a picture in a thousand and one that will long be remembered. The scenic beauty of the landscapes, the cleverness of the players, the intenseness of the story, the faithfulness of the director and the introduction of animals in strong roles are some of the things that make "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" different from the average picture.

Every member of the cast, which includes Niles Welch, Pauline Starke, George Stanley, Jack Curtis, William Dyer, Boris Karloff, Billie Bagnett and James O'Neill, is indeed an all-star organization. Each player is an artist in his or her line and works in harmony with the others. The production moves like clock work, and even Tara, the trained bear, and Baree, the outlaw dog, seem to know what is expected of them. These dumb animals feel the importance of their roles and attack each piece of difficult business with all the cunning known to the animal kingdom.

If Director David Smith went after realism, he certainly got it and the atmosphere of the north as well. The picture was taken a few miles out from Truckee in the Rockies during a severe blizzard. The players withstood all of the hardships of a life far away from civilization in order to produce genuine color and the result obtained is worthy of all the sacrifices made. The savage dogs, the bear fight, the thrilling escape from "The Nest," the meeting of David and Marge, the death of Tavish and the scene on the mountains just as the dawn is breaking on a new day are some of the big situations that grip the spectator and are recalled long after the picture has faded from the screen. It is a big-production, handled in a big way and presented with all of the splendor and magnificence known to screen art. It is a travelogue as well as one of the most thrilling and interesting stories ever filmed.

THE PROFESSIONAL STANDARD

SAFETY STANDARD

THE one on the right is the PROFESSIONAL STANDARD and is used where the law demands and specifies the required protection. Concrete—masonry—and other protective measures.

THE one on the left is the SAFETY STANDARD used before small audiences in Home, Church, Lodge and places where protection must be in the film, because from the very nature of the case large concrete rooms cannot be built and the pictures must be operated by movable and portable projectors.

THESE are the audiences which breed picture fans. They hasten the growth of our "Potential Audience" and hence help the growth of the industry both for the Theatre Man and the Producer.

That's why it broke records in New York, the critics say:

RECORDS ARE BROKEN

"An excellent drawing card. Straight melodrama of the purely sensational type with the element of suspense well developed and thrills plentiful. Fast action and skilful handling. Plot interesting. Love romance, perilous adventure and exciting situations combine to please all lovers of high tension melodrama. Anita Stewart plays a dual role with alluring charm in one instance and a subtle sense of suggested evil in the other. Her admirers will mark this as her best screen performance. Supporting cast admirable. Tell your patrons that this great picture broke records at the Strand theatre, New York. Play it up heavily as presenting Anita Stewart in a decidedly new role." — Exhibitor's Trade Review.

MISS STEWART QUITE STRIKING

"Anita Stewart gives a thoughtful portrayal as twin sisters and is quite striking as the blonde Berta." — New York Morning Telegraph.

TENSE DRAMATIC ACTION

"There is incident aplenty. The backgrounds are praiseworthy. Make a point to emphasize the melodramatic values. Feature the picture as a tense drama that is punctured with action throughout its length." — Motion Picture News.

"A good audience picture. Miss Stewart in a dual role has succeeded in portraying the two distinct characters in a splendid way. Appeals to a lover of thrills. Lavish sets depicting a gambling house in the Orient." — Wids.

INGRIDGE AND QUICK ACTION

"Replete with intrigue and quick action. The production is a worthy one and evinces marked craftmanship on the part of the directors. The effects are colorful and vivid. As the scene of action shifts from America to the Orient and from the Orient to the Philippines, there is a scrupulous regard for atmospheric details and incidents, that increases the spectator's interest. Anita Stewart doubles in a clever adaptation of Harold MacGrath's story. Excellent photography aids in making the picture a success." — Moving Picture World.

ROMANCE AND ADVENTURE

"Anita Stewart again demonstrates her claim to the title of star in Harold MacGrath's bizarre story of romance and adventure. Contains an excellent double characterization by the star. Some fine locations and sets finely photographed, a complex plot and considerable action." — Exhibitor's Herald.

Getting It Over

GEMS of wisdom written in Chinese characters would be utterly unintelligible to most people. RITCHEY posters, like all really great art, are always simply phrased, in a manner most readily understood by the great masses of men. By the same token they are always so strong in their realistic delineation, and so positive, and sincere, and accurate in their depictions as to carry a sure conviction.

The same characteristics that denote a great work of art, likewise denote a RITCHEY poster. The fact that the RITCHEY poster serves a commercial purpose simply classifies it as a work of advertising art. It has to make a monetary appeal, but it is an alluring appeal, an appeal that piques the curiosity—and it invariably gets over!

It is pregnant with a subtle power of suggestion, and though the casual observer may not know it, it is that subtle power that puts it over. That is the reason it produces the maximum box-office results,—

It has the quality of GETTING OVER!

The Question At Issue

Do exhibitors want reviews?
Do they want independent reviews—unbiased, impartial, independent of advertising?
Is a trade paper competent to review pictures for the exhibitor?
Has a trade paper a right to carry its own reviews of pictures advertised in its pages?
Do exhibitors simply use reviews to hammer down prices, break contracts, etc.?

MOTION PICTURE NEWS has placed these questions before the exhibitors of the country.

Their reply is a spirited and unanimous "Yes!" to the first four questions; to the last a caustic "No!"

Letters have been received from the owners and managers of over a thousand theatres; and more are still coming in. Never before, on any subject has there been such an outpouring of exhibitor expression; nor such strength, definiteness and unity of opinion.

The letters come from all points of the country, from big cities and little towns, from first and late run houses, from single and chain theatres.

Their similarity is remarkable. But one letter disagrees with the rest. Summed up they say: "We want reviews—or nothing."

Practically every letter should be reproduced in full. We regret that we have not the space, that we can give only excerpts from comparatively a few. These prove the case: but every letter is worth reading.

A Plain Statement

The issue—involving the above questions—was raised with MOTION PICTURE NEWS by the Selznick organization.

We,—in common with other trade papers—were informed, several months ago, that reviews of Selznick pictures were not desired by that organization.

Later, and immediately following our review of a certain Selznick release, Selznick advertising was summarily withdrawn from the columns of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

We were informed, however, that the issue was not raised over this particular review but was a general one. In other words, Selznick pictures were not to be reviewed (Select and Republic pictures included) by MOTION PICTURE NEWS or by any other trade paper; any publication defying this rule would lose Selznick advertising.

We were told that reviews were out of date; that a trade paper had no right to give its own opinion of goods advertised in its pages and to differ with the advertising claims made; that exhibitors did not want reviews except to use them in lowering rentals and causing trouble in general.

Our reply was that we would continue to review all Selznick releases, as a service demanded by our readers, independently and to the best of our ability, as we have always reviewed all pictures since the paper was founded.

What of the Others?

We were distinctly informed by the Selznick organization that their edict applied to all trade papers. The other trade papers, however, are still carrying Selznick advertising. Perhaps they will care to explain why. Our columns are also open to the Selznick organization for any fair and fact statement they may desire to make.

This is a vital issue.

It is vital to the trade press. If we are not to carry the reviews our readers demand, or only reviews acceptable to our advertisers, or if the paper is to be run by the advertiser, then we cease to exist. A camouflaged house-organ is not countenanced by the United States postal laws nor by any reputable trade, nor is its circulation worth a nickel.

It is vital to the advertiser. If you sell your goodwill to any one advertiser you have no value left to sell to any other advertiser.

It is vital to the industry at large, to possess a trade press free to offer constructive criticism on the pictures artistic and economic development, untied by any interlocking commercial interests, unbridled and so able to express the truth as it sees it.

But above all the issue is vital to the exhibitor. He won't be deluded long by a camouflaged house-organ. He'll spot it quick and quit it cold. But when he is deprived of an independent and impartial service on pictures, when he is compelled to book and advertise in the dark how on earth is he to hold and increase and keep faith with his public?

What is to become of selective booking? Or is the term a travesty?

What is to become of the exhibitors' independence?

Independence or Blind Submission?

We hear a good deal these days about the independent exhibitor. A good many producers and distributors seem earnestly to desire this independence. They urge the exhibitor to stay independent.

But—when you ask the exhibitor to take your pictures blindly, to advertise them blindly, you rob him of all independence. You tie him to yourself, to your fortunes. You force him to accept the risks of production. You use him to force your goods on the public—a very dangerous end which you have no right to ask him to share. A fairer way is to buy his theatre and take the risk yourself—the very ownership you so earnestly oppose.

Eighty percent of the exhibitors of this country are unable to see pictures before they book them—and therefore unable to select pictures for their particular clientele and to know how and how strong to advertise them. The balance are too busy to screen all the pictures offered them. Exhibitors cannot succeed without an impartial review and advertising service. They will get it—somehow.

Our Position Frankly Stated

Our answer to the Selznick organization is this: Tell the exhibitor the truth, the whole truth about your pictures. Inform him thoroughly and candidly. Give him an impartial appraisal just as we try to do. Substitute this for your present advertising and we'll gladly stop reviewing your pictures. Such service to our readers won't then be necessary.

We sincerely regret the raising of this issue. We did not seek it. We have hoped for another way out.

We are an organ of the trade—all parts of it, all factors in it. We aim to advance the best interests of all.

Our pages are devoted primarily to the exhibitor—to give him service, to help him market his goods. Our editorials are our own. No factor in the trade owns them.

We have given much service—at no saving of effort or expense. No trade paper in any field gives more. This service has helped the sales of worth while pictures a great deal. As for our reviews we never claimed that they were infallible. Nor does the dealer take them as infallible. If we underrate some pictures we overrate others. No conscientious producer has been hurt by our reviews. All in all they have helped. Our only claim is that they are on the level; as for their value, their batting average is good.

We make mistakes. But our columns are always open, we are always eager, to correct any. We will revise our own opinion gladly and quickly if the other fellow proves we are wrong.

From the beginning this paper has been clean, constructive, independent. No one will say otherwise. We expect to remain so—or quit. And we wish to say this: that while we have had our struggles and disagreements we have met from our advertisers with mighty few exceptions the fairest kind of spirit—a spirit which is founded broadly upon a belief in the solidarity of the industry and the wholesome, genuine value of an independent trade press.

The Exhibitor and Reviews

SAENGER AMUSEMENT CO., INC.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

"Our opinion is that exhibitors will be with you 100 per cent as long as you continue to hold your editorial department above business influences. And in the stand you've taken you find us with you all of that 100 per cent.

"Reviews are not the least of the service you render exhibitors. In fact, our publicity department holds that it is one of the most important. Reference is made in our publicity department to a card index file which gives us at a glance the consensus of all criticisms on any picture we have booked. And as our publicity men seek to advertise and exploit pictures honestly, the reviews are of great assistance, provided they are honest. We try, of course, to get a preview on the major attractions, but we must oftentimes be guided by trade news.

"We have found Motion Picture News to be fair, and we believe your staff competent. As a matter of fact we have placed faith in criticisms published in your paper."

NEWMAN THEATRE
KANSAS CITY, MO.

"Regarding reviews, we want them absolutely. We feel that they are one of the greatest necessities of the modern theatre manager despite the fact that an exhibitor has contracted for certain pictures and that his competition has contracted for the pictures reviewed, it is only good business for him to know his competitor's line as well as his own.

"While we are in a position to screen nearly every important production that is released in this territory, we find it very helpful to compare our personal opinions with those of the reviewer. Very often, important points, either for or against a production, have been brought to our attention by the critic. A great many times, when we were undecided about the particular value of a certain picture, the reviewers' remarks have cleared up many of the points in question. Again, in this day of "near" open booking and independent releases, combined with presentations, what better method is there for an exhibitor to find just the type of attraction he desires to give diversity to his programs or to fill in a particular type of feature having a particular type of presentation.

"For illustration, in the past four weeks, we have been searching the release columns of the Motion Picture News and other trade papers for a picture of merit that would particularly suit a Fashion Show presentation. We have located an attraction that suits our requirements to the letter in the columns of the reviewers."

"Do I want reviews? Yes! And in order to run a business as we run ours, we must absolutely have expert, reliable and impartial reports on each and every picture we put on our screen from the five hundred to the ten thousand feet lengths. We were asked the other day whether or not we would buy on our own judgment providing that they would screen a certain subject. On our answering that our system was based on the collective judgment of the critics in the trade journals we were charged with having no confidence in our own intelligence. And our reply was that we did not have time to view all the subjects that we offered to place our patronage and yet we never offered them anything but the cream of the market. That we did have time to read, copy and file reviews on all subjects that came on the market and consequently could intelligently buy only the good and turn down the weak sisters. We are conversant with each and every producer's product and are salesman-bull proof. We buy selective or on one picture cancellation. We will not pay for a picture; at other times we are proclaimed as a gentleman, scholar and general good fellow for what we are willing to pay for some other picture. Stars names are not essential to our success. National advertising will not fill our house. But our personal reputation for high ideals, our record for one successful program right after another, is rapidly riveting a place in estimation of our people that is a real joy to occupy.

"While I do not wholly rely upon the reviews of Motion Picture News, because of screening most of all my shows myself and again because frequently by the time your review comes to me the picture has been run in one or the other of my houses, I assure you that I watch those reviews carefully and find that they are fair and the exhibitor in the smaller town who does not run pictures so close to release dates could very well afford to place himself in your hands and rely entirely upon the judgment of your critics. In conclusion, I thoroughly endorse the stand you have taken in this matter and wish you the success that is due a trade paper that is honestly trying to serve the exhibitor."

"Do we want your reviews? That is why we buy your magazine. The reviews and the "Exhibitor Comment" are the main reasons why over fifty copies of The Motion Picture News are resting comfortably on top of our desk at this moment.

"You are the connecting link between exhibitor and producer. The safety valve of the industry. How can we fanners here in the bushes tell whether or not a picture is suited for our audience without your reviews? How do we know that it is the style of picture that will not only bring business but better still—Satisfaction? How? Certainly not from the press books that the producers hand out with their hokum about Lucy Asthma’s pet poodle eating radishes.”

"I have found a number of film men that make claims that their particular product is not given a fair showing by some reviewers, but on comparing with the reviews and other film men’s views find this is not borne out. "We would not like to see the reviews discontinued, and it is our belief that in the very near future the reviews are going to be even more critical than they have in the past whenever criticism is due.

"The exhibitor must, and will, back any paper that will give him unbiased opinions on the releases of all producers. Without the support of the exhibitor, without the circulation among the exhibitors, the advertising in your paper would not be of value. It is the confidence placed in your magazine by the exhibitor, that makes it the valued paper that it is.

"But it is perfectly natural that your reviewer at all times in reviewing pictures will have in his mind that the producer is one of your advertisers or a prospective one, which after all is said and done is your bread and butter, and naturally said reviewer in writing his opinion has to be guided thereby so as not to offend the producer. Different reviewers claim that regardless of whether the producer is an advertiser or not they write their opinion as they see the picture only, but we are all human, reviewers as well as critics, to take cognizance of the situation and as exhibitors when reading your reviews naturally have to make due allowance for the same."

Call a spade a spade regardless of whom it hits and any producer who seeks to induce you to speak highly of his picture when it has no merit should be barred from your columns on general principles.

"I believe your staff is thoroughly competent, and I am of the opinion that you all wish to be fair and useful to the exhibitors. I would consider it a calamity to discontinue reviewing pictures by the various trade papers. At the same time it is your duty, as well as every other publisher's, to pan a picture if it isn't there. I have requested all our daily papers in Toledo to do likewise. In other words, to notify us of a weak or mediocre picture. That is selling the wrong stuff to the public. "The review service of the News I can testify to as an exhibitor has been invaluable to me, as a worthy and constructive means of suggesting the true value of the films reviewed. I have used the word "suggesting"—that is just what the News' review service epitomizes. It suggests what is good and bad in a film, and the rest remains with the exhibitor to determine for himself, that is to say, whether the particular film under review would appeal to his class of patrons, taking into consideration the type of audience, the locality of the theatre and the price of admission. Needless to say, there can be no doubt as to the honesty of purpose of your reviewers in setting forth their sincere opinions of a film."

"Personally I feel under obligation to any publisher of a trade paper when I have reason to feel that the pictures reviewed are not written up with one eye on the picture and the other on the producer's advertising contract. My practice has always been to look at reviews first. Judging from the hours I have wasted looking at poor pictures which have not been reviewed which I might have spent to better advantage had I read an honest criticism first, the reviews must, in the course of time, have made my job a great deal easier.

Factions Menace Harmony of the Exhibitors' Get-Together

Reports Issued by the Rival Organizations Presage Discord at Cleveland

With the coming of the national conventions of the exhibitors of the United States on June 8, 9, 10 and 11, each faction is lining up its forces for the advance on Cleveland. It would seem as if harmony was not likely to prevail when the theatre-owners get together on the appointed dates. The Independent Exhibitors of America, under the leadership of Frank Rembusch, and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, of which Sydney Cohen is temporary chairman, have both issued official calls to the exhibitors of the country to meet next month on the same days at Cleveland. The Independent Exhibitors contingent are to gather at the Hotel Cleveland, according to the announcements received, while the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have sent out notices that they will meet at the Hotel Winton. Prominent figures associated with both organizations have issued statements which are reproduced below in part. Frank Rembusch, president of the Independent Exhibitors, has sent the following statement:

"At the recent Chicago Convention the Chair did not make an effort to keep the convention from going to Cleveland. We encouraged it because we favor one convention, one organization. After the convention we hunted up Mr. Bullock and gave him every opportunity to advise us just how we were to be taken care of, but not a single detail was told us.

"We had a committee from our organization go to Cleveland, and we were assured that everything was all right, but no details were forthcoming.

"To-day I took stock of the following facts:

"We formed a permanent organization at Chicago, with officers and directors.

"The sub-committee called upon the producers at New York City last week, and so far eleven producers have agreed to not go into the theatre business; three more will make it unanimous.

"The larger committee meets at Hotel Astor, New York City, June 3-4 to receive the final decisions of all producers, and we are to report to the Cleveland Convention. Where?

"We have waited two weeks, and then sent another representative to Cleveland and insist that our organizations must have a written contract for a meeting place somewhere. To-day our representative sent a wire that no such a contract was available, but that we could secure the Hotel Cleveland for convention halls and rooms, if we accepted at once. We then wired the Hotel Cleveland and contracted for the convention June 8, 9, 10 and 11 for the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America.

"We have a national organization, and I take it for granted that the members would consider it poor leadership if we had no meeting place when we arrived in Cleveland.

"The Chair also begs to confess that we doubt very much the sincerity of those who would have us go into a meeting in which we have no standing. We are taking no chances. We are organized and at work, the only real active national organization to-day. Certain developments and alignments that have formed since are such that we cannot afford to be anything but sure. We hope that every exhibitor will appreciate our stand. This action is in no way impairing the good possible. It will, however, be a means to clarify the situation.

"Addressing the exhibitors on the subject of what has already been accomplished, the Independent Exhibitors has the following to say:

"Your sub-committee called on the executives of eleven larger producers and distributors and advised them that the new national exhibitors' organization, formed at Chicago, April 26-27, have agreed to make a stand as follows:

"First—Insist that all producers get out of or not go into the theatre business.

"Second—That we buy our film service exclusively from film companies who agree to this in writing.

"In the list of those producers who are reported to have agreed to the Independent Exhibitors provisions, as stated above, are Universal Film Company, First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Robertson-Cole, Vitagraph, Pathé, Selznick Companies, the United Artists, the American Film and the "Big Six."

"M. Van Prang, secretary of the Kansas State Exhibitors' Association and a member of the committee recently appointed at the Patterson conference in Chicago to prepare a report to the Cleveland Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America on the attitude of producers in the underworld buying, states that after the convention a sub-committee was formed consisting of H. W. Kress, H. C. Farley and M. Van Prang, which was to go to Cleveland and find out what arrangements had been made for the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Regarding the transactions of this committee Mr. Van Prang has issued the following statement:

"This sub-committee met at the Hotel Staller in the city of Cleveland on the fifth day of May and had a conference with Henry Lustig and Samuel Bullock, the latter being the temporary secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Both of these gentlemen gave the members of the sub-committee a detailed account of the arrangements that had been made for the convention, and the members of the sub-committee unanimously agreed in their report to the chairman of the full committee that the arrangements made for the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America were entirely satisfactory.

"The report of the sub-committee had been made verbally to Chairman Rembusch, and he had been informed that the sub-committee had unanimously endorsed the arrangements made for the convention called by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the Hotel Winton, City of Cleveland, June 8th to 11th.

"Under these circumstances I am unable to understand the attitude of the chairman, Mr. Rembusch, in not only disregarding the report of the sub-committee, but in usurping the power of the directing committee and telling the exhibitors of the country by means of circulars that he has called a convention of his own at a different hotel, claiming to act by the authority of the temporary conference at Chicago."

"Sydney S. Cohen, temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has also issued a statement on

Goldwyn Buys Interest in Capitol Theatre

PRESIDENT MESSMORE KENDALl of the Cleveland theatre announces the consummation of negotiations by which Goldwyn Pictures Corporation acquires a substantial interest in the new Capitol theatre at Sixth Street and Broadway, and the Capitol theatre interests become associated with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, which will be prominently identified with its management thereof. Edward Bowes, manager of the theatre, is to occupy a larger field as a director and executive of Goldwyn.

The board of directors of the Capitol theatre will, in addition to the present members, include the following: F. J. Goshol, Samuel Goldwyn, Eugene De Priest, Lee Shubert, Edgar Selwyn and others of the Goldwyn board. Messmore Kendall will continue as president.

By this affiliation Goldwyn has secured an interest in one of the most spacious and magnificent theatres in the world. The Capitol theatre has a seating capacity of 5,400, 2,700 of which are on the orchestra floor and an almost equal number in the balcony. Numerous Goldwyn Pictures have been presented at the Capitol, notably Rex Beach's "The Girl from Outside, and another Rex Beach Goldwyn picture, "Silver Horde," has been the attraction during the past week.

"In the following remarks, Messmore Kendall stated:

"We have a national organization, and I take it for granted that the members would consider it poor leadership if we had no meeting place when we arrived in Cleveland.

"The Chair also begs to confess that we doubt very much the sincerity of those who would have us go into a meeting in which we have no standing. We are taking no chances. Canadian Distributors in First Annual Meeting

The first annual meeting of the Canadian Moving Picture Distributors' Association was held in the St. Charles Hotel in Toronto, recently. The meeting took the form of a banquet, and representatives of the following companies were present: Monarch Film Co., Ltd.; Famous Players Film Service, Ltd.; Famous Lasky Film Service, Ltd.; Fox Film Corporation, Ltd.; Vitagraph, Inc.; Select Pictures Corporation, Ltd.; Regal Films, Ltd.; Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation, Ltd.; Canadian Universal Film Co., Ltd.; Specialty Film Import, Ltd.; Davis Amusement Enterprises; Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange.

Clair Hague, general manager, Canadian Universal Film Company, was re-elected president and J. McCabe, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, was elected vice-president. J. O'Laughlin, general manager of Pathé for Canada, was made secretary-treasurer, while Phi Kaufman and L. Rosenfeld were elected directors.

Mayflower-Tucker Suit Settled Amicably

The Mayflower-Tucker suit, regarded as one of the most important pieces of motion picture legislation, is about to be settled out of court, and George Loane Tucker will complete his contract with the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. This announcement was made today by Benjamin A. Prager, president of Mayflower, in a conversation with Alfred Beekman, attorney for the Mayflower organization.

The terms of the settlement were not stated, but it is understood that Mr. Tucker is to resume work for Mayflower immediately and that a new arrangement as to the distribution of profits on his future productions has been effected.

Mr. Tucker, according to present plans, will continue to work on the Coast. He will finish the titling and cutting of "Ladies Must Live," his second production under the Mayflower contract, and will then arrange plans for four more Mayflower pictures, which will complete the contract. The settlement of the Tucker suit represents the first big official act of Benjamin A. Prager since becoming head of the Mayflower organization.

Films Classified with Press by U.S. Senate

The United States Senate has supported the contentions of the Censorship Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry that so far as censorship or any other form of regulation is concerned motion picture films should be classified the same as newspapers, magazines, books or printed pictures. The Senate by unanimous vote has passed the bill introduced by Congressman Walsh of Massachusetts which prohibits the transmission by mail or otherwise of interstate commerce of indecent films. The bill has already passed the House of Representatives but will be sent back there for concurrence in an amendment to correct a technical error and will go to the President for his signature within a short time.

Fox Perfects Plans for International Convention

For the first time in the history of the Fox organization representatives of the firm from all parts of the world will meet at the sixth annual convention of the Fox Film Corporation, beginning on May 14th. Furthermore, this is said to be the first time in the history of the industry that such an international convention has been held.

Plans for the reception of the convening representatives have been perfected by William Fox and an elaborate program of business meetings and entertainments has been arranged. The entire party of branch and district managers will be on hand at the formal opening of the Fox studios on May 24th. One announcement made on the eve of the convention is that each of the Fox exchanges located in the principal cities of the world will be equipped shortly to maintain an efficient exploitation department for the benefit of exhibitors.

First British Serial Started in England

For the first time in its history, the British abroad company, a British producing organization, is to make a serial. It will be called "In the Blood," and will be a typical English story. No attempt at impossible or unreal stunts will be attempted and each episode will be a complete story. Walter West will supervise the production.

Hagenbeck Menagerie Still Active

In a recent editorial in the Motion Picture News, headed "Watch the Germans," mention was made that the Hagenbeck menageries in Hamburg had been taken over by a producing company. The statement is now discovered to be incorrect. A motion picture company has taken over only part of the company's grounds, and the firm of Carl Hagenbeck Sons is still doing business.
Goldwyn Plans for an Extensive Foreign Production

Announces That Pictures Will Be Made Both in France and England

SAMUEL GOLDWYN returns from Europe with a most interesting statement on international film conditions and how they will affect the interests of American producers in the years to come. While abroad Mr. Goldwyn spent considerable time in both England and France, and he has studied intensively both the character of the European as well as the character of the motion picture industry on the other side.

Mr. Goldwyn's accomplishments and observations in Europe have resulted in two things: a crystallization of Goldwyn plans and activities; and a definite perspective on the future of American production throughout the world.

We have consummated the formation of Goldwyn, Ltd., and have solidly launched our distributing enterprise in England," said Mr. Goldwyn. "We have laid the cornerstone for one of the most active distributing centers in the United Kingdom, and we look forward to big accomplishments in European sales. Our office abroad has an English character, an English atmosphere, and admiringly fits into the English method of business transaction. We have made friends on the other side, and friendship is a lasting foundation for success in ventures where capital and product are up to the mark.

"More than that, we have launched our distributing center in France—the Société Anonyme Cinematographique Goldwyn-Osso. Within the next few months there will be an energetic branching out of Goldwyn activity on French continental soil with branch offices in Paris, Lille, Bordeaux, Nancy, Marseilles, Lyons, Geneva and Brussels and all the larger French cities.

"Nowhere does one remark on the growth of the picture so much as in France, where the lid that was clamped on during the war has been suddenly let go. The result is an energy and progress that is undreamed of; even in progressive America. There are to date some 1,600 cinema theatres in France. One cannot say how many there will be two years from now.

"While the Europeans are pleased with American pictures and recognize the technical merit of American production as well as the artistry of our photoplay creators, they are not wholly satisfied with anything that does not spring from their own soil. The cry of 'production at home' has been uttered and heard, and for Americans to continue to hold foreign markets means a reviving ingenuity, and a recognition that our productions treating of foreign characters must ring true to life. The international note in the picture is about to be felt more forcibly than ever before, and we at Goldwyn are not only going to spread ourselves to make our pictures acceptable in any land, but we are going to stage them on the soil where they are supposed to be.

"In short, production abroad has ceased to be merely an idea. It is now a necessity and about to become a fact. England and France will soon hear the ring of hammerblows that mean new production studios. English pictures for the English, French pictures for the French is the keynote.

"While in England I had the pleasure of discussing cinema matters with some of England's best known authors, including Sir Hall Caine, E. Phillips Opplenheim and Cynthia Stockley, and I am tremendously pleased and hopeful over their interest in developing the photoplay.

"During the war American naturally incurred little competition on foreign soil. While there has been little change to date in actual business done, there is a determination on the part of our friends across the water to show their hand in a creative way along cinema lines. I do not disparage this; in fact I encourage it, as I would encourage any effort to make the photoplay a more international and a more artistic achievement."

"I believe absolutely in international pictures. Where foreign characters have crept into the action of the average American film they have too often been utilized for the purpose of provoking a laugh or presenting some ridiculous situation. The time has come when we ought to present the foreign character in a serious role, allow him to demonstrate the traits and manerisms of his race in a genuine way, and, moreover, to furnish him with a setting that accords fully with the spirit and content of the story in which he is cast."

Mr. Goldwyn also spoke highly of the influence that the American pictures were wielding abroad, and expressed his belief in Goldwyn, Ltd., as the agent of Goldwyn for the promotion of feelings of good fellowship between this country and England and France. The spirit of rivalry between the different countries for supremacy in the picture field was strong, Mr. Goldwyn declared, and both England and France were anxious to overcome the lead at present enjoyed by the American producers. In response to the people's demand for more and better pictures, the construction of theatres is being carried out as rapidly as conditions and available material will permit. Mr. Goldwyn described how in several instances he saw the interiors of houses demolished and removed so that the houses might be remodeled and converted into motion picture theatres, even though the ultimate seating capacity was very limited.

In concluding the interview, Mr. Goldwyn referred for a moment to the production program for the coming season. "By the middle of next month," said Mr. Goldwyn, "we will have twenty negatives completed and ready for the market for the coming season, beginning September."

A. E. F. Pictures Will Be Run on Memorial Day

Governor Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts, preparing for the observation of Memorial Day, May 30th, in the Bay State, has requested that all motion picture theatres arrange for a showing on Memorial Day of the pictures of the graves of the American Soldiers who were killed in France. The plan was proposed by Myron T. Herrick, former American ambassador to France, to Governor Coolidge.

Managers of the Boston playhouses are preparing to cooperate with the Governor, and will show some time during each performance, not only the pictures of the graves, but films depicting the work of the men in the trenches.

Theatre Building Reports from West Coast

MESSRS. RICHARDS and Nace, of Phoenix, Arizona, have leased the property at the corner of Thirty-first and Nye streets, Los Angeles, for a 1,900-seat suburban theatre. They also broke ground last week on the new Rialto theatre in Phoenix, which will seat 1,200.

Sol Lesser, A. and M. Gore, and three owners of present Hollywood theatres have formed a $500,000 corporation to take over the Hollywood theatre, the Windsor theatre and the Apollo theatre and to construct in addition a 2,500-seat house to cost $300,000 at the corner of Hollywood boulevard and Ivar street. This will give four theatres to the first National releases in Hollywood. There will be a mid-week change for the big theatre and a daily change for the three smaller ones.

A lease for a big theatre site in Los Angeles has been purchased by an organization formed and headed composed of Messrs. Mark, of New York; Von Herberg, of Seattle; Liebler, of Indianapolis; Gordon, of Boston; Williams, of New York; Schwabe, of Philadelphia, and Finkenstein, of Minneapolis, who will build a house with 3,000 seats. No announcement of present plans has been made as yet, but it is generally believed that they have secured the Mercantile Place site, consisting of 60 feet on Broadway, between Fifth and Sixth streets, and extending through to Spring street. This lease was recently secured by the Board of Education by Adolph Remish, who was formerly identified with Ackerman and Harris, owners of the Hippodrome circuit affiliated with Marcus Loew.

While in England I had the pleasure of discussing cinema matters with some of England's best known authors, including Sir Hall Caine, E. Phillips Opplenheim and Cynthia Stockley, and I am tremendously pleased and hopeful over their interest in developing the photoplay.
Screen Advertisers Will Meet at Indianapolis

The value of the screen as an advertising medium of the best kind will be emphasized at the meeting of the Screen Advertisers' Association of the World to be held in Indianapolis, June 7 and 8, coincident with the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. Persons interested in screen advertising from all parts of the world are expected to attend the sessions of the screen advertisers' association and the general sessions of the convention. One of the most forceful programs ever arranged has been prepared by Harry Levey, president Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

Mr. Levey, who is largely responsible for the present development of the industrial and educational motion picture, will make the principal addresses before the screen men. The sessions will be called to order Monday afternoon, June 7. Mr. Levey, who also is the manager of the industrial and educational departments of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, will speak on "A Dream Realized."

A general discussion will follow Mr. Levey's address. Tim Thrift, advertising manager of the American Multigraph Sales Company, and chairman of the motion picture committee of the National Advertisers' Association, will deliver an address on "What I Have Learned About the Motion Picture Medium."

Another important speaker at the opening session will be John Leitch, author of "Man to Man," who will speak on "The True Mission of the Motion Picture."

Irving T. McDonald to Manage Foley Houses

Irving T. McDonald, for several years connected with the Fox circuit, lately as manager of the local playhouse in Springfield, Mass., has resigned to assume management of the T. L. Foley motion picture houses of Cleveland, O. He expects to remain in this city until about June 1. According to announcement, he will be in direct charge of the three Foley houses located in the Cleveland's theatrical and business section. His place is assumed by George V. Halloway, who comes to Springfield from the New York Academy of Music.

Spokane Exhibitors Correct Recent Statement

According to a telegram received from Messrs. Clemmer and Lanach, the Spokane, Washington, exhibitors, the article concerning them in the May 15th issue of the News was incorrect. The item was headed "Spokane Exhibitors Rebel at Percentage System," and was received through the regular news source of the Motion Picture News. The telegram states that it was unauthorized as well as untrue.

Chicago Exchanges Still in Serious Condition

WHILE admitting that the situation caused by the new Chicago fire ordinance, which became effective May 1, still is very serious for exchanges, managers are hopeful that sufficient time will be allowed them to find suitable new quarters before the drastic provisions of the ordinance are enforced. No steps have been taken as yet to compel the exchanges to comply with the forty-eight hour notice served by the city under the new ordinance, ordering them to cease handling and removing films from buildings now occupied. As a result, the administration of the ordinance deferring it for one year has been introduced in the city council and referred to the building committee.

The aldermen are said to feel that the exchanges should have been given more time, as practically no building exists in Chicago today which complies with the requirements and in which the exchanges could get space. E. G. Welsh, who is promoting the proposed Chicago film exchange building, denies the rumor that ground will be broken on June 1, but states that new construction is faster than ever before, and that it is hoped that construction can be started within thirty days.

"Big Six" Has No Part in Any Booking-Pool

Los Angeles, May 18.—Fred Warren announces that the Associated Producers will have no part in any booking-pool. Reports are heard on every hand here to the effect that Famous Players-Lasky and First National have formed a booking-pool. Fred Warren also announces that the Associated Producers have leased buildings in all exchange cities west of Denver and that the exchange managers have already been engaged. This serves as a denial to the rumor circulated in the East that the "Big Six" will go through some other exchange system.

In New York no great credence is given the Los Angeles rumor concerning a proposed Famous Players-Lasky and First National booking-pool. Both parties concerned refused to even discuss it.

New York Theatre Owners Appoint Delegates

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York, at a largely attended meeting on Tuesday, May 18th, designated a committee of six to attend the Cleveland convention. They will leave New York on the Albany night boat on June 7th, stop off at Buffalo and Niagara, and then take the boat from Buffalo to Cleveland.

Stanley Acquires Three Philadelphia Houses

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, announced yesterday that the corporation has taken over from Michael Stiefel three of the largest and best known motion picture theatres in Northeast Philadelphia. The theatres are the Iris, Kensington and Allegheny avenues; the Lafayette, Kensington avenue near Cambria street; and the Star, Kensington avenue near Lehigh.

The fact that the Stanley Company of America has secured these theatres in Northeast Philadelphia means that photo-play lovers in that vast territory will be given opportunity to see the best pictures," said Mr. Mastbaum. "It is an event of which motion picture lovers can well feel proud that this company has entered this field and entered it so thoroughly as indicated by the taking over of these three houses. These new additions to the Stanley enterprises will be improved in every way necessary to make them fit the Stanley standard of comfort and convenience for its patrons."

Equity Showing at Astor

Equity Pictures Corporation announces that arrangements have been completed for a trade showing of "For the Soul of Rafael," the latest Clara Kimball Young special, at the Hotel Astor next Wednesday, May 26. The showing will be given in the Grand Ballroom, starting at three o'clock.

Applications have been received from other branches of the industry who desire to travel along with the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Louis Bumenthal is in charge of all arrangements.

Manufacturers' Exhibit for Cleveland Meet

The National Independent Motion Picture Exposition promises to be an important event during the week of the Exhibition Convention at Cleveland, according to Dr. Sam Atkinson, business manager, who is also a well-known exhibitor. Dr. Atkinson states that Gray's Armory has been engaged for the exposition and that many important producers, accessory manufacturers and distributors have already reserved space for the show, taking advantage of the opportunity to bring their pictures and products before what is expected to be the largest gathering of exhibitors ever assembled at one time in America.

Arrangements have been completed for erection of seventy-two booths on the floor of the huge armory. There will also be elaborate floral decorations, and a splendid orchestra has been engaged for the occasion. According to Atkinson the presence of many important producers and stars at the convention is assured. Pictures produced by the independents will be screened in the exposition building, and according to the managers are arranging very complete exhibits of their products.
Realart Managers in Big Get-Together

First Conference of Young Company Held in New York, Beginning May 15

The managers of Realart Pictures Corporation held their first conference and get-together at the Hotel Astor, in New York City, last week. It was the first opportunity which the company’s field force had had to become acquainted and the occasion was made a fitting one for the importance of the event.

The advance guard for the convention arrived Saturday, May 15th, when Oren F. Woody, Los Angeles manager, and Ben F. Simpson, San Francisco manager, arrived in New York from their transcontinental jaunt. Others arrived later in the day, but the majority came on Sunday and early Monday morning. A large number brought their wives and families and several made the trip by automobile.

The managers registered at the Hotel Astor on Monday morning and then went in a body to 466 Fifth Avenue, where they inspected the home offices in the Winfield Building and met the officials of the company. They journeyed back to the Hotel Astor for luncheon, following which the business sessions were started.

The first two sessions of the meeting were given over to a discussion of the results obtained from the company’s Wanda Hawley selling campaign. The succeeding days were devoted to reports from the various managers on the conditions in their territories. The men have recently returned from trips about their territories and reported on exhibitor opinion on the five subjects of the day as they encountered it at that time.

On Monday evening the field men attended a performance of “Irene” at the Vanderbilt theatre. Wednesday evening they attended “The Gold Diggers” at the Lyceum, and on Friday night, after a dinner at the Astor, they saw a performance of “The Midnight Frolic.” The other nights of the week were left open for the men to entertain their wives and families.

An attractive booklet was prepared for the conference. It was devoted entirely to the personal letters of the managers of the company in a personal way and was attractively prepared. In addition to the photographs of the various officials it contained some live and personal data on the individuals that compose the organization.

Each official of the company is written up in the booklet. There is a brief history of his career in the world of business and an attractive picture showing him at work in his office. The book was printed under the direction of Mr. Fritts.

The following attended the meetings: Melville E. Maxwell, special representative; Joseph L. Marquettis, Atlanta; Walter E. Scott, Boston; Henry E. Wilkins, Buffalo; Harry W. Willard, Chicago; Mark Goldman, Cincinnati; James B. Reilly, Cleveland; Daz Callahan, Dallas; Bert R. Liftz, Denver; Ralph B. Quive, Detroit; John N. McCormick, Kansas City; Oren F. Woody, Los Angeles; Henry L. Hollander, Minneapolis; Lester Adler, New York City; Trudy L. Waldman, New Orleans; Cornelius G. Kingsley, Omaha; E. F. Hennsey, Philadelphia; Harry E. Lotz, Pittsburgh; Ben F. Simpson, San Francisco; Albert W. Eden, Seattle; Floyd H. Lewis, St. Louis, and Louis Reichert, Washington, D. C.

The British Motion-Picture in America

Gus Schlesinger of Inter-Ocean Film Writes of Picture with International Appeal

In a statement just issued from the office of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, Gus Schlesinger, manager of the department of foreign film sales of that organization, discusses the subject of the British-made picture in the American theatre and concludes with the assertion that in the future the British and the American producer must concentrate on the making of pictures that have an international appeal. Mr. Schlesinger’s statement is submitted in full:

“Thus far there have been only two big British productions shown with any degree of success in this country, namely, “The Manx-Man” and “The Better ’Ole.” Both offerings were brought to America by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation fully two years ago, and were released in this country by the Goldwyn organization and World Film Corporation respectively.

“That there is a big field for British productions in this country is an admitted fact, what with the recently announced policy of American producers to forego the production of a quantity of releases for the policy of “Fewer and better pictures.” But British productions in order to attain to the height of popularity that is now being enjoyed by the American product must, in the final analysis, pass the critical scrutiny of the American theatre-going public.

“In this respect, I believe that American tastes are similar, generally speaking, to British tastes. The same elements that make for a good picture in America are the very fundamentals which make the British cinema offering a success in the United Kingdom. Of course, we all have our little perversions, and at times hold entirely different views on matters pertaining to the screen. Withal we agree on the following formula for a successful production: a good story, interpreted by a good cast, and visualized by a skillful director.

“In making pictures in the future, England and America must concentrate on the production of pictures containing an international appeal. The film markets of the world are reopening, new markets are being discovered, and the demand for films is greater now than at any other period. Motion pictures are becoming recognized everywhere as the standard form of amusement. There is room for every country’s films everywhere—provided of course the pictures in question are patterned after the successful prototype in picture productions.”

Error in Printing Bookkeeping Receipts

A TYPOGRAPHICAL error in the advertisement of the Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., in the issue of May 22nd, THE NEWS made the bookings on “Back to God’s Country” equal four million dollars. It should have read $400,000.
Noted Educator Wants Films in Schools

Dr. Charles Eliot of Harvard Advocates Education Through the Medium of the Screen

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University, who was the principal speaker at one of the sessions of the National Association of College and University Publications in the Copley Plaza Hotel, Boston, last week, strongly advocated the utilization of moving pictures in schools throughout the country as a means of education.

"We are trying from the kindergarten through the professional schools at this moment to utilize all means of education through the eye," Dr. Eliot said. "We have been accustomed to depend upon the ear very largely to begin with.

"The whole lecture business, for instance, in schools, colleges and universities, professional schools included, has been through the ear. It is a very inferior method to education through the eye. I learned the truth of this in my life, because I wanted to be a chemist and I found when I began to study chemistry really that that was very largely a work of the eye.

"You have got to see the experiment you try and its results," said the eminent educator, "and its operations must be guided by the eye. And then when I became familiar with medical education I discovered that the lecture method was practically of no use except as affording a rapid sketch of some process that the teacher wished to work through. Everything depended really on educating the senses of the medical student, and chiefly the eye. That is coming in, I rejoice to say, from the elementary school and kindergarten all the way up through medical education. And this use of moving pictures has even within one year only attained its first chance, its first use in American popular education."

The urging of Dr. Eliot for the use of moving pictures in schools throughout the New England district and the entire country is not the first inaugurated in Boston. Educational films have been shown in the schools throughout the city through the cooperation of the motion-picture distributors of this district.

Fire Commissioner John R. Murphy of the City of Boston has adopted a plan for the use of moving pictures in his school for officers of the fire department and the members of the Bureau of Fire Prevention. Members of the Wire Division of the Hub's fire-fighting force will photograph scenes of interest throughout Greater Boston for the illustrating of the lectures in the Officers' School.

Methods of fire-fighting along the waterfront, to be known as "Marine Fire-fighting and Large Streams of Water," building construction, for wall fire-fighting, reservoirs and residential sections, together with methods of fighting chemical fires, will be flashed upon a screen to the veteran officers of the department in their school at the fire headquarters on Bristol street, Boston.

Commissioner Murphy knows the value of the motion picture as a means of education and for attaining interest in the classes of the school. Members of the Class of Government at Harvard University will be the guests of the Fire Commissioner at the drill school yard of the department, when sixteen recruits of the fire-fighting force will go through drill evolution before the movie "Men of the Wire Division. It is understood that the films will be used as educational films for the schools of the districts throughout the Boston fire district.

the coming Cleveland gathering. The statement follows:

"The motion picture theatre owners of the country are keenly alive to the dangers threatening them from the product-exhibitor. They will under no circumstances and by no maneuvers whatever by diverted from originating themselves a powerful national body. They are not afraid of a fight in the open with the interests arrayed against them.

"In fact, they are ready for a fight. The exploiting interests evidently do not want to frighten us in the open. Neither their objects nor their methods can stand the light of publicity. A vigorous exhibitors' organization through all the legitimate interests on the side of the exhibitors' motion picture money; it means an end to the invasion of the legitimate exhibitors' exchange by roving pirate shows; it means an end of extortion by way of deposits; it means an end to the racketeers' percentage plans; it means an end to the million dollars of graft, the producers' covert and obscure advertising being corrected from improper advertising on our screens.

"Unable or unwilling to frighten us in the open, fearful of the just resentment of the organized independent exhibitors of the country, the interests have resorted to the employment of a staff of ex-circus smoke-screen artists to either prevent the convention or make a desperate attempt to break it up. In this way they hope to deal the exhibitors who are anxious to unite and organize another blow from which the may not recover for years to come. They are directly or indirectly hiring henchmen or irresponsible agitators and common scabs to whom the publicity agents of these interests supply the ammunition they are to "shoot" at Cleveland. Fifteen thousand postcards have been furnished by one large producing company to circulate the exhibitors of the country a specially called second "convention" at different hotels in the same city and at the same time called by the Motion Pictures Owners of America.

"These men are trying to stage another affair like the gathering at St. Louis when a wave of the destructive system and former president of a national exhibitor's organization, availed himself of the privileges of the floor because he attempted to speak on the evils of the "mule-exhibit" system. This man who drove him from the floor at that time is today at the head of a large independent-exhibition company and is well known for his affiliations with producing interests.

"The intention of the 'mule-exhibitors' and their friends is to create confusion in the minds of the independent exhibitors of the country and trying to stage a producer-distributor-exhibitor convention in Cleveland at the same time for which the convention of the 32 states has been called."

California Association Starts Fourth Year

The Theatre Owners' Association of Southern California will begin the fourth year of its organization on May 20, when newly elected officers will be installed at a luncheon.

The officers elected at the association's recent meeting, early this week, are H. J. Seiler, garage theatre, Whittier, president; F. O. Adler, Victory, San Pedro, vice-president; J. S. Lustig, Starland, Los Angeles, secretary, president-elect; J. M. Young, Hollywood theatre, Hollywood, treasurer; Glen Harper, Apollo theatre, Los Angeles, secretary; Pearl Merrill, City theatre, Culver City, sergeant-at-arms; with H. H. Bosley, Alhambra theatre, Los Angeles; B. F. Van Derlip, Huntington theatre, Huntington Park, and S. A. Grant, Windsor theatre, Los Angeles, directors.

Upper Broadway Theatre Has New Manager

The Standard theatre, at 99th street and Broadway, New York City, has changed hands. It passes into the managerial control of B. F. Kimberg, who has purchased John Corb's entire interest in the house.

The Standard has been run as a combination house, and the present bookings will continue for several weeks, after which motion pictures with musical features will be run for the summer months.

Cleveland Convention (Continued from first column)

"It is a story of unscrupulous scheming and desperate daring. These producing interests and their tools have thrown down a challenge to the motion picture theatre owners of America. The next few weeks will show whether these men and these interests can get away with it. It all depends on us, on the men who own and operate motion picture theatres for a livelihood.

"In conclusion let me repeat that the call to the Cleveland Convention at the Hotel Wolcott, comes from independent exhibitors prominent in organization work in 32 states. They decided upon Cleveland as the place and upon the 8th to the 10th of June after careful deliberation for the time of their big meeting. They will gather at the Hotel Wolcott.

"The headlong rush of the interests of the country are in no mood for trifling. The smoke-screen artists and the swindlers may not know it but they are labelled like a trunk that has made several trips around the world."

Exhibitors of Southwest Great First National

Three hundred independent exhibitors of the Southwest have accepted the aid offered by First National to remedy existing conditions. The committee representing them, who interviewed First National executives at Dallas, Tex., consisted of C. W. Hall, Hobart, Okla.; Boland, of Oklahoma City; Walter Fairman, of Bryan, Tex.; E. T. Peters, of Dallas; Ben Lewis, of El Paso; H. S. Cole, of Ranger, Tex.; C. C. Mushelman, of Paris, Tex.; and H. S. Ford.

At the request of this exhibitor committee, J. D. Williams, manager of Associated First National, agreed to return to Dallas before the end of May to complete the organization of the new First National exchange staff.
Optimism Predominates Among Theatre Owners

First National Survey Shows Exhibitors Expect a Heavy Business Soon

CHIEF among the outstanding features of the conditions existing in the motion picture exhibiting field of the United States, as disclosed by the 1920 Survey by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, for which Motion Picture News has the exclusive publication rights, is the spirit of optimism which predominates generally among the owners and managers of theatres, the deep seated conviction that the coming season is going to be a greater one from every standpoint than any season past and the determination to take every advantage possible by providing the accessories necessary to adequately care for a greatly increased patronage. This is not an articulate expression of opinion from any one exhibitor or any group of exhibitors, but it is the inevitable conclusion which must be drawn from the amount of money which exhibitors are putting into their end of the motion picture industry to care for expected business during the coming season.

Despite the high prices, exhibitors have gone ahead with the idea that the public wants the best and will bear its share of the ever increasing costs. Improvements such as enlarged rest rooms, remodeled lobbies, interior decorations and other things which cannot be classed as necessities are scheduled in practically three-quarters of all the motion picture houses to be done during the summer months. In places where increased seating capacity has become a necessity, there has been included in the plans for the alterations enhanced facilities for the comfort of patrons.

Nowhere is this spirit of bigger and better houses exemplified more emphatically than in the middle west and western states. Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin lead in activity, and Iowa, Utah and many other states have ambitious plans, but the fact that original construction was not restricted in most of the western states permitted the building against the future, and consequently increased facilities are not yet a necessity. In the cities, however, especially the larger ones, building of motion picture houses is experiencing a boom. In Detroit, Michigan, alone contracts have been let and actual construction started on twenty-four new houses in downtown, neighborhood and suburban sections, and before the first of next year it is believed that all of them will be in full operation.

The new Allen theatre, at Woodward Avenue and Waterson Street, which opened May 1st, will have a seating capacity of 1,500, is now well under way, and according to plans, will be ready for opening in the fall. Charles H. Mills, who operates the Regent, Majestic, Miles and Orpheum theatres, has announced that he will build a 4,000 seat house on Grand River Avenue, to play pictures and vaudeville. The Kildoff Theatre Co., present operators of the Kildoff theatre, is contemplating the erection of a new house on Forest Avenue, near Concord Street. It will have a seating capacity of 1,200 and will open late in the fall.

Gus Greening, who until a month ago was managing director of the Miles theatre, has announced that he will break ground immediately on Hamilton Boulevard for the New Tuxedo theatre. Mr. Greening says it will be ready for opening on October 1st, with 1,500 seats. The La Salle, at Perry Avenue and 14th Street, managed by Ben Williams, well known in Detroit as a vaudeville house manager, which will seat 2,000 persons, had its formal opening on May 22nd. Wetzman & Ziemen opened their new Linwood theatre, at Linwood and La Salle Streets, on May 1st. This is said to be one of the most beautiful of Detroit's neighborhood houses and will seat 1,500.

John Slepski is now completing a 700 seat house, to be opened in midsummer on Grand River Avenue. Provisions have been made to care for an enlargement if necessary. M. Rohlins will open the new Savoy theatre, on Oakand Avenue, about May 15th, he announces. The Knickerbocker Theatre Co. have started operations toward enlarging the Knickerbocker theatre, East Jefferson Avenue, from 900 to approximately 1,500 seats.

Besides these announcements there are unofficial rumors of the building of several other large motion picture theatres in Detroit's downtown sections. One of these is to the effect that a site has been obtained at the corner of Elizabeth Street and Woodward Avenue, one block north of Detroit's famous Grand Circus Park, for the erection of a large theatre. Phil Gleichman, manager of the Broadway Strand theatre, is also said to be interested in the erection of a large theatre on North Woodward Avenue. Nothing definite has been taken on either of these plans, however. John H. Kunsky, who operates Detroit's two leading first run picture theatres downtown, besides a chain of the strongest neighborhood theatres, is known to have an extensive building campaign outlined for this year.

The Crossett Theatre Co., of Adrian, Mich., has purchased the Crescent theatre there in a plan to improve the entertainment facilities of the city. Both theatres have been running pictures, but the plan is to make the Crescent an up-to-date theatre and use the Crossett for vaudeville and road attractions.

Akron, Ohio, is but a little behind Detroit in building plans. The Waldor Amusement Co. has started the erection of a 1,500 seat house, with all modern conveniences and a novelty of an arcade lobby. The lobby will run through an entire block from High to Main Street, with entrances on both streets. The name of the theatre and the opening date has not been announced. The Kildoff, a 1,400 seat house, on East Market Street and Goodyear Avenue, has just had its formal opening. No modern device was left out of the structure, everything being done with lights. A symphony orchestra has been installed, as well as a Hope Jones Unit organ.

The new Dietz theatre, in East Akron, is nearing completion. It will seat 1,600 people and the cost is in excess of $500,000. In the downtown section of Akron ground has already been broken for the erection of the first theatre building which will house the new Orpheum theatre, to be operated by Botzuh Brothers. It will have a seating capacity of 1,000. A. T. Simons, owner of the Dome theatre, announces that he has procured a lease on a new building constructed for the housing of a motion picture theatre with a seating capacity of 1,500. The new theatre will be known as the Allen. The Akron Enterprise Co. has received a building permit for the construction of a $500,000 theatre building on Main Street. No announcement has been made by the company relative to the plans for the new structure.

The Regent, a new 1,800 seat house being erected by Gus Sun, is so near completion in the downtown section of Springfield, Ohio, that Decoration Day has been set as the opening date. The completion of this house will change to some extent the bookings of the other Sun houses in Springfield, the Sun Vaudeville, the Fairbanks and the Alhambra. The Fairbanks will continue to book legitimate attractions and some vaudeville. The other theatres in Springfield—Colonnial, Liberty, Majestic and Princess—will undergo only repairs and redecorations for next season. All of them will remain open all summer.

Hamilton, Ohio, will have a new 1,600 seat house to help accommodate the unusual patronage which developed during the season in this city. It is the Kildoff, at Front and High Streets, and is being erected by J. F. Jewell. The opening will take place some time the latter part of June.

The Palace, which only opened last February, and the Lyric and Gem are the only ones of the Hamilton theatres which will not be closed for short periods during the summer for alterations or redecorations. The Jefferson, also owned by the Jewell (Continued on page 447).

Educational Will Distribute Popular Christie Comedies

Contract Just Announced Calls for Two Reel Release Every Second Week

NEW evidence of the declared intention of Educational Films Corporation to gather together on its release schedule the best two-reel comedies obtainable was supplied this week with the announcement that the company has taken over the distribution of Christie Comedies, with a release every two weeks.

The contract, which has just been signed by E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of Educational, and Charles H. Christie, general manager of Christie Film Company, is said to involve the largest sum ever concerned in a two-reel comedy agreement. The amount to be spent in production alone within the next year is said to run into a sum that ranks among the largest investments of any of the producing companies.

According to the agreement, Al. Christie, who has been responsible for some of the greatest comedy successes, is to personally supervise all of the productions and actually direct as many as possible. The entire distribution for the United States and Canada is to be in the hands of Educational, the first of the pictures to be released shortly after the opening of its new exchange system which has just been announced.

Two-reel comedies only are concerned in the contract, and none but the new pictures are to be released by Educational. The product already shown will continue to be booked through the present avenues, so that each of the productions to be handled by Educational will merit the name, New Christie Comedies. Immediately after making the agreement with Educational here, Mr. Christie hurried back to the coast to complete enlarged plans with his brother.

Production of the first two comedies to be released by Educational are now under way and the ample facilities of the Christie studios assure that the schedule will be promptly met. With the recent additions, the Christie plant is said to be one of the most complete on the Pacific Coast and the array of actors regularly on the payroll is a large one. With the large casts available and the physical facilities the greatest attention will be paid to each of these releases.

It is probable that Bobby Vernon and Fay Tincher will be featured players in the first two Educational-released offerings. The third will have an "all star" cast. As a matter of fact it has never been a practice to "all star" players in the Christie comedies though probably more noted stars of today have come from the Christie "lot" than from any other organization. Some of the names appearing in recent releases evidence the character of the players who are available: Eddie Barry, Jimmie Harrison, Neal Burns, Teddy Sampson, Vera Steadman, Helen Darling, Charlotte Merriam, Earl Rodney and a number of others including a chorus of beauties that the Christie brothers promise will take all prizes when they are seen on the screen.

In a recent interview Al Christie pointed out that it has been the policy of the company to supply both stories and laughs, and it is that type of comedies that has appealed so strongly to the exhibitors generally. This will be carried out as a general plan, except that it will be the policy to have even larger casts and more elaborate pictures in the future.

With this plan the addition of the Christie Comedies fits in well with the other two-reel releases of Educational—the Chester Comedies, in which animals and children are largely featured, the first of which “Four Times Foiled” attracted so much attention recently at the Rialto, Rivoli and Loew theatres; the Torchy Comedies, which have been carried by Sewell Ford and which center around the red-headed office boy; and the Mermaid Comedies, directed by Jack White of Bennett and Fox Sunshine fame, which run stronger to the slapstick and girl ideas.

"Acquisition of the world renowned Christie Comedies," said Mr. Hammons, "should be excellent evidence of the position that Educational Films Corporation occupies in the comedy, as well as in the rest of the short subject field. We have been confident from the start that we could offer independent producers of short subjects the very best sales and distribution system, and I believe that the signature of the Christie contract will convince any doubter."

"I do not believe that I need say anything about Christie comedies except that we should be excellent evidence of the position that Educational Films Corporation occupies in the comedy, as well as in the rest of the short subject field. We have been confident from the start that we could offer independent producers of short subjects the very best sales and distribution system, and I believe that the signature of the Christie contract will convince any doubter."

Charles Christie was equally enthusiastic. "We have had a great degree of success with our two-reel comedies," he said, "and we feel proud of our record. But it remains a fact that we have not been able to obtain all the results that we desired through independent exchanges because we have not been able to follow up our product or to put organized sales effort behind it. We adopted this plan, however, because we have always refused to permit our product to be handled by companies whose chief concern was with features and have our productions treated as "fillers."

"So when Educational Films Corporation, met with the same difficulties, decided to establish its own exchanges, we found an ideal outlet for our product. We will now have perfect distribution and cooperative effort so that the sales burden comes off our shoulders and we will be able to devote our entire attention to production."

"We have always refrained from boasting of the future, but I cannot help pointing out that the assuredly greater distribution and our opportunity to focus all our efforts on the Los Angeles studios is going to bring a series of two-reel productions, one every two weeks, that we believe will startle exhibitors."

Photoplay, will be closed as soon as the Rialto is opened, to undergo extensive changes and improvements. The Grand, pictures and vaudeville, will be extensively renovated, and the Jewell and Eagle will also undergo complete renovation.

The Majestic theatre at Athens, Ohio, has just completed an alteration in a unique manner. Seating about 250, it had been closed all winter, and architects decided that extension of the walls to the line on three sides would provide space for an additional 150 seats. The new walls were built around the old theatre without interrupting performances until they were completed. Then the house was darkened for one week while the old walls were torn down and the new seats installed and the interior redecorated.

Defiance, Ohio, will have practically a new theatre when Thomas & Henry, exhibitors of Auburn, complete remodeling the Citizens’ Opera House. When remodeled the theatre will be opened under the name of the Valentine, with pictures and vaudeville. The Auditorium at Defiance will be remodeled during the summer.

Chicago and the Mid West
Covered By L. H. MASON

C. M. Giffen, who has been in Chicago for some time, has returned to the Pacific Coast to start work on the new series of Neal Hart five-reelers. The series will be brought out by the Pinnacle Productions, of which Eddy Eckel is general manager. Pinnacle Productions has leased the Pinnacle Studios, formerly the Bachman Studios, and are contemplating extensive remodelling here which will give them ample space for the ambitious program of pictures they have planned.

The Amusement Supply Company is now in its new offices in the Commercial Building, Chicago. Manager Planner is receiving congratulations of exhibitors on the splendid arrangement and new quarters. The increased space now available makes the showing of various articles handled by the Amusement Supply Company possible in an attractive way, and in addition to the store and office room properly arranged, the company has taken over a large storage room immediately adjacent, so that sufficient supplies can be kept on hand to give customers quick service.

M. J. Mintz, special representative of the Columbia Film Corporation in charge of selling “The Gumps” to territory buyers, has returned from Detroit where he disposed of the rights for Michigan to Strand Features, Incorporated. While in Detroit he also contracted with Detroit Free Press to publish the cartoons daily. In the transaction with the Detroit Free Press, Mr. Mintz represented the Chicago Tribune, which controls the newspaper rights to the famous Sidney Smith cartoons. Mr. Mintz is planning to leave for the west within the next few days in the interest of “The Gumps.”

M. S. Slocum has joined the sales force of the Rothacker Industrial Department in New York.

Edward O. Blackburn heading a crew from the Rothacker Chicago laboratory, is hard at work in St. Louis, present, and shooting a series of four short films which will be made in that city.

W. J. Hall, owner of the Plaza theatre at Lansing, Michigan, has purchased the Lyric, a burlesque and vaudeville house at Gary, Indiana, and will expend $30,000 in remodeling and making it into a high-class moving picture theatre. Mr. Hall has arranged to have a Photoplay Orchestra installed to furnish music to his patrons.

Manager Max Levy of Robertson-Cole is building up one of the strongest and most efficient sales forces in the Chicago territory and the largest staff in the state. Steve Montgomery, who has been manager of Famous Players-Lasky Exchange at Toronto, Canada, for some time, and very well known in the Chicago territory for Robertson-Cole, probably no man in the selling end of the business possesses a like acquaintance than Steve and he is being given a warm welcome by his hundreds of Chicago friends. Frank Williams, a native of Chicago, is now known as “Red.” has left the Comediant Company and will hereafter be found at the booker’s desk in the Robertson-Cole Chicago office. With the star aggregation of salesmen, Robertson-Cole has one of the biggest factors in the world’s film industry. Work is being turned away at the Chicago laboratory. Treasurer H. J. Aldous is in Los Angeles to let contracts for the construction of Coast laboratories. Mr. Rothacker has an office on a site for another in New York and early in the summer he is scheduled to depart for Europe to start a laboratory in London and a service station in Paris.

Talent is the backbone of the Rothacker organization and branches in New York, Buffalo, St. Louis, Los Angeles and Philadelphia and other cities where the company is established in Detroit, Boston and New Orleans.

Watterson R. Rothacker has come a long way in the past ten years since he sat at the little desk in the little office and his friends from coast to coast are congratulating him on starting his career of achievement.

W. F. Seymour, personal representative for W. W. Hodkinson, who has been in Chicago for several days, has announced the appointment of Phil Dunas as Chicago manager for Hodkinson. Mr. Dunas has been traveling representative in Illinois for sometime and according to Mr. Seymour, his promotion is in line with the Hodkinson policy of advancement from within the organization to positions of responsibility and trust whenever they show marked ability as in the case of Mr. Dunas, whose sales record as a salesman is recognized in his appointment as Chicago manager.

George Bromley has taken over the Garden theatre on North Martinfield avenue and after giving it a thorough overhauling and redecorating, it will operate it as a combined vaudeville and picture house.

Manager Fred Aiken of Vitagraph gave an exhibitors’ showing of “The Courage of Marge O’Doone” with a musical accompaniment, last Wednesday at the Playhouse and several of the “hard boiled” theatre men present were heard to remark that it was one of the big pictures of the year. Loop showings of this Vitagraph special feature will start within a few days.

The latest film exchange to move operation from the Strand to a new location was the Booth Corporation, Comediant Productions, which are now located with the Greater Stars Productions, 537 S. Deborne street, sixth floor.

Carl Hardill, manager of the Chicago office of Reelcraft, is slated over the heavy bookings of the William Frenay one-reel comedies at the Chicago, Milwaukee and Indiana offices of Reelcraft, whose books show that all records have been smashed by these popular comedies.

R. C. Cropper, president of Reelcraft, was in Chicago this week for a short visit and says that the same conditions exist at other Reelcraft offices.

L. Reichert, who has been assistant manager of Reelcraft’s Chicago Exchange for some months, has been promoted to manager of the Washington office of Reelcraft and has left Chicago to assume his new duties. Manager H. W. Willard is in New York this week attending the Reelcraft Convention.

Sam Katz, of Belaban & Katz, has returned to Chicago after a short visit in New York.

Eddy Brislane, the snare of William Mills, manager of the Crawford theatre, has been sentenced to hang and his accomplice, Robert Carter, must go to the penitentiary for life. The Allied Guild Association, through Chic’s registered membership, has raised a substantial fund for the benefit of Mrs. Mills and the children left orphaned by the murder. Manager Mills was shot down in the ticket booth of the theatre without warning when Brislane and Carter attempted the theft of the day’s receipts.

“Nurse Marjorie,” the splendid feature running this week at the Woodlawn, Central Park and Rosenthal, is being booked heavily in the Chicago district, extra days being the rule rather than the exception. Reelart Exchange also is doing an excellent booking business with “Miss Hobbs,” starring Wanda Hawley.

One of the interesting previews of the week was that of “The Fortune Teller,” starring Marjorie Rambeau, which was given at the Playhouse on Thursday. A large crowd of exhibitors were present and Manager Al Mintz was pleased with the favorable comments passed on the picture.

Fire in the booth of the Garden theatre at Detroit, Indiana, destroyed seven reels of film belonging to the Fox Film Company and damaged the theatre to the extent of about $3,000, according to an estimate by Manager Ezra Rhodes.

American Film Company has added two new salesmen to its Chicago staff. They are E. P. Picker, formerly of Des Moines, Iowa, and Mr. Schraeder, who came from Indianapolis to cover the city territory.

An extensive billboard advertising campaign is being planned by the new Barbe Loop theatre offices, and 5 sheets are already displayed to the Valerian 13 sheets on each of the 350 station platforms of the various Chicago and Illinois railroads. It is understood that each picture to be shown at the Barbe Loop will be given individual exploitation on these elevated billboards.

Frank T. Paul is about to open a new theatre at Carlinville, Illinois, which will be known as the Marble Theatre.

J. R. Katz of Monticello, Illinois, has appointed W. C. Martin manager of his new O’Malley theatre which he expects to open about the 1st of June.

Among out-of-town exhibitors seen around the Chicago exchanges last week were: Abe Wallenstein of Wallenstein Brothers, Michigan City, Indiana; G. Spoor, Academy theatre, Waukegan; B. A. Womord, Marquette theatre, La Salle; Lewis Murphy, Majestic theatre, Rockford; Harvey Grampy, West theatre, Galesburg, Illinois; and Maurice Less of Terre Haute, Indiana.

All the glass doors and the booth office of the Fox theatre at 1822 Chicago avenue were destroyed last week by a fire which ended up in the middle of the house and a raised lady. The theatre was closed for repairs.

The driver of the fire when hauled out from the fireman said that he had lost control of the car.

Al. Rosenthal, formerly of Rosenthal and Saperstein, was a Chicago exhibitor, who was lost in the fire a few minutes last week. He came in on the Broadway Limited and left on the Central the same day. It is hinted that of extra importance brought Al to Chicago.
Frank Lacey, manager of the Majestic theatre, Portland, which is the theatre responsible for the exploitation shown is one of the live wire managers of the West Coast.
Barclay’s Spring Opening Big Event in Johnstown

L. W. Barclay, manager of the Nemo theatre, Johnstown, Pa., recently staged his annual spring opening. Above are shown his exterior and interior decorations for the event. Complete details appear on the opposite page.
Barclay's Spring Opening
Big Success

EVERY spring L. W. Barclay, manager of the Nemo theatre, one of the Grand Amusement Company's string in Johnston, Pa., sets aside a week for special efforts, which he has labeled "Spring Opening." The event for 1920 eclipsed all previous efforts and was likewise successful in the same degree.

Special lobby decorations, an artistic stage setting, big newspaper and other advertising called attention to the "Spring Opening.

The stage setting was a work of art. Especially artistic were the lighting effects. The curtains were drawn over the side stages, closing in the paintings, while the pictures were on. When the pictures closed, the curtain over the main opening—the screen—was closed, and the overture was started by the orchestra. Lights began to fade in dimly on the side stages, starting with blue, then green, red, amber and white. As the lights grew brighter, the curtains were drawn open disclosing the paintings, and the main footlights, borders and prosceniums were brought up slowly.

As a leading number Mr. Barclay secured two clever local youngsters who had previously appeared at private functions only and their act went over as a great hit. These two little dancers are shown in the layout on the opposite page.

"The Silver Horde" was the feature attraction which Mr. Barclay selected for his "Spring Opening.

In selecting a picture with which to inaugurate the spring season at the Nemo, the management sought a production that would make good the pledge to the public printed on the cover of a neatly arranged program covering the bills for the opening week. "To Nemo patrons," the management pledged "renewed and never-ceasing endeavors to make more entertaining, more uplifting, more ennobling, the projection and presentation of the productions offered during the season to come."

From the overture to the final curtain, the performance at Johnstown's "theatre beautiful" was in accord with the most approved standard of motion picture presentation.

Graveyard Stunt Wins Again

HAVING some one sleep in a graveyard, one of the stunts suggested and used considerably in the exploitation of "The Greatest Question," has been given a further o. k. by the management of the Dixie theatre, Fairmont, W. Va.

The Dixie began getting public attention by its newspaper advertising. The points which the Dixie management emphasized were referring to the cemetery as a "graveyard" in all advertisements and presswork and the repetition of the claim that the "experiment" or "test" is "made in the interest of science."

Cemeteries are not often referred to as "graveyards" and the term awakens interest. The "made in the interest of science" has proved professional and popular in melodramas, returning solders and people not speaking English well enough to be readily understood. The first ads barred only spiritualist mediums, and the fact that the want ads were revised and returned soldiers barred made a "story," while the fact that many foreigners were anxious to accept the proposition led to their being barred—the reason advanced being that they could not be readily understood. This suggested that "interviews" in the newspapers would follow the experiment.

It was at first thought that some of those willing to accept the proposition would hesitate to be made prominent in the newspapers in that connection, but the press work was so well handled by E. E. Meredith that everyone was anxious to share in the publicity. One man seventy-eight years old was insistent on making the "experiment." The theatre management hesitated to accept his offer lest he might catch cold, as the weather was not ideal for sleeping in a graveyard on the night of April 10. A one-legged man finally was selected and the interest was maintained in the matter by having the next day's morning paper merely record that the "test" had been made and having the afternoon and morning paper of the next day declare that he "refused to talk."

Effective Presentation Idea for Orchstral Number

In connection with the rendition of "Tuscan" by the Rivoli orchestra this week, a very novel and effective presentation idea has been furnished by the orchestra. The presentation provides for the use of the anvils and hammer to quite an extent in playing the number. With the house and pit dark except for shaded lights over the musicians' stands, a baby spot has been placed in such a position that it illuminates the out-stretched hands of the Rivoli drummer who is manipulating the anvils and hammer and also casts a glow on the drapes, bringing the form of the player and his instruments in silhouette. The spot used is scarlet. The anvil is connected with an electric current that "makes and breaks" as the hammer strikes it sending out sparks that light up the pit like flashes of lightning.

The effect is novel and pretty and adds much to the tuneful number "The Forge in the Forest" as made by the orchestra.

Uses "Cockeyed" Quartet for Sonnet Comedy

The stage which said that there was nothing new under the sun should have been in Dayton, Ohio, recently during the exploitation campaign that was put over by Paul Gray for "Down on the Farm." Mr. Gray worked at Low's Dayton theatre, in that town, and witnessed the hilarity that was created by the use of a "cock-eyed" quartette. Not only did the stunt create much talk and attract attention, but it was the means of breaking the house record for the theatre.

Here's the reasons why for the stunt. Knowing that the famous Ben Turpin of "Down on the Farm," Mr. Gray sought out the best optician in the town and secured from him the names of cross-eyed people. He seated four of them and had them marching through the streets every day for a week prior to the opening of the show, and besides creating much mirth, the newspapers got hold of the stunt. At the opening of the picture and at each performance he had the quartette very oddly arranged on the stage with spot lights streaming on them, while the "cock-eyed" orchestra played a "Hokum" overture and the cock-eyed quartette tried—tried, we say— to sing. The stunt was a scream from start to finish.

This was but one of the many unique stunts that the management put across in their campaign, they jazzy everything they did from advertising and publicity to the manner in which the picture and the picture was presented.

Lacey's Presentation of "Silver Horde" Pre-tentious

Frank Lacey, manager of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., is noted for the elaborate lobby displays he originates for the attractions booked for the Majestic and among the best of his creations in this line is one used for "The Silver Horde," a recent looking at this theatre.

On the opposite page this display is described in pictures more effectively than mere words could possibly accomplish it.

The man in Alaskan fur is "Alaska Jack." Genovis, the Baldwin of the cannery in the film production of "The Silver Horde," and one of the men who actually mined with Rex Beach in '98 on the Nome beach, and who later, was one of the victims of the land grant about which "The Spoilers' centers." A cloud effect machine was used so that during the evening hours a vivid picture of the northern sun was portrayed at the back of the lobby. Four baby spots gave an effective indirect lighting to the entire lobby. A brace of Alaskan dogs cause much interest.

The top portion of the layout shown is a view of the Majestic ushers in their new spring uniforms, in which they appeared for the first time on a recent Sunday morning.
Artistic Settings Particular Forte of Tivoli Theatre

Top Cut—Stage setting and atmospheric prologue used in conjunction with the presentation of "The Idol Dancer," by Turner and Dahnken at the Tivoli opera house, San Francisco as designed by housemanager Frank Costello. The performers for the prologue included Hawaii's most famous prima donna, and a clever native hula-hula dancer. An effect of Kilauea seething with burning lava was realistically achieved.
Steurle Presents Dance With "Sex"

Joseph L. Steurle, manager of the Walnut theatre, Louisville, is a live wire who knows to a certainty that it pays to exploit pictures in new and novel ways.

One of Mr. Steurle's prize stunts which set Louisville agog for a sight of the picture was his campaign for "Sex." A fifteen-minute dancing exhibition at every performance before the opening of the show was staged.

Mr. Steurle's prize stunt in a drive that set Louisville fans agog for a sight of "Sex" was a fifteen-minute dancing exhibition at every performance before the opening of the picture. Mlle. Doreen, a well-known terpsichorean artist of Cleveland, was the star of the prelude, the big feature of which was the spider dance, a skillful simulation of the dance staged by Miss Glaum in "Sex." In engaging Mlle. Doreen, Manager Steurle took a leaf out of George Schade's book of exploitation on "Sahara."

Mr. Schade, who is the enterprising manager of the Schade theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, who put over the former Louise Glaum feature with such tremendous success with a dancing prologue in which Mlle. Doreen was the performer.

The Walnut's lobby for the week also did its part in helping to crowd the theatre. In the center was a life-size painting of Miss Glaum and surrounding it were a dozen scene stills from the picture. Near the entrance Mr. Steurle had an enlarged reproduction of the spider dance and around it portraits of Mlle. Doreen in her various dancing poses.

"Idol Dancer" Stage Setting Artistic

The showmen who have been looking forward with great anticipation to the prologue which Frank Costello, manager of the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, announced, several weeks ago, he would use in behalf of the "Idol Dancer," are now able to examine his stage settings, thanks to photographs which have just been received from the theatre.

Hawaiian dancers, a volcano that seethed and bubbled with fire and lava, toto poles, palm trees and a suggestion of thatched huts were the chief features of the prologue. Delighting effects were brought about by Tom Kenna and the setting was worked out by Jim Stevens, stage manager. The entire prologue was supervised by Mr. Costello, who also arranged for the singing of Mme. Marion Worthington, Hawaiian prima donna, and Miss Paul Lei Lain, a hula dancer, who defied civilization and censors. Critics declared that the setting used for the "Idol Dancer" brought out the true atmosphere of the picture in a way not brought out by previous inner-feature exploitation efforts of the Tivoli.

Remarkable Novelty Added To Criterion Program

As addition to the Criterion program is presented this week under the title of "The Valley of a Thousand Smokes." This contains a series of remarkable views of a volcanic area in Alaska, which were taken by the National Geographic Society and are being distributed by Educational Films. It presents an array of scenes quite out of the ordinary and justifies an exploitation angle of genuine novelty.

In a series of wonderful long shots, "The Valley of a Thousand Smokes" is shown. Miss Glaum, in "Sex," out-glamored herself even in this picture. Glaum cafe-bell belching forth clouds of live steam. Down along the valley as far as the camera takes our vision, craters, big and small, pour forth steady streams of super-heated vapor. No stretch of country that we have seen visualized on the screen has revealed scenes such as are to be found in this strange valley, every crevice of which seems to be a sort of safety valve for some great roaring place hidden somewhere down in the depths.

The close-ups disclose some interesting details—cooking breakfast a la funerelle, sizzling mud puddles and other unusual shots, of which the reader is able to see the unique character of the film. "The Valley of a Thousand Smokes" is not merely a clever title; it is an unusually interesting picture—a scene that we feel can be truly exploited as something out of the ordinary.

Professional Rube Aids "Down on Farm"

Exhibitors in the Pittsburgh territory booking "Down On The Farm" have the opportunity to obtain excellent exploitation in their territory, through the work of Clyde Boak, a professional "Rube," who is lending his services to their promotional stunts, and making a big hit everywhere he has been booked.

Boak is one of the best known professional "Rubes" in the middle west, and immediately upon his learning of the excellent opportunities for exploiting Sennett's comedy, he made a tour of a few of the towns in the Pittsburgh territory and offered his services for $10 per day and railroad fare. He was booked right and left and he will appear in no less than twenty-five towns during the running of the picture, performing his many imitable stunts.

In his make-up walking through the streets of any town Boak always provokes attention, and his performances of acrobatic stunts, whether it is on the main streets or on the sidewalk, riding a bicycle, or climbing the sides of buildings, he draws crowds much like molasses does flies. As a hick-barker he is without rival, and his services have proven big drawing cards and added to the box-office receipts of the theatres in whose behalf he has already appeared.

In many of the towns where the exhibitors use Rube orchestras and have noon-day parades, Boak heads the parade and as the leader is screamingly funny.

Fine Exploitation Idea for Ray Picture

FRANK H. BURNS, who has lately accepted the position of manager of the Kiallo theatre, Jacksonville, Florida, one of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises string, comes through with a fine idea for advertising "Alarm Clock Andy" that should appeal especially to exhibitors in the smaller towns since it is inexpensive.

As shown by the accompanying illustration Mr. Burns constructed an "alarm clock" that stood in front of the theatre and invited Jacksonville residents who passed by to come to the Kiallo.

The "clock" part was an old bass drum with some paint used to advantage in camouflaging it. The "alarm" was a dishpan fastened to the drum with a screw. Under the pan Mr. Burns placed an electric bell and connected it up with wires and battery in the theatre office. The bell rang every two or three seconds with the result that everybody within hearing distance looked to see where the unusual sound was coming from.

Mr. Burns' method of ringing the bell at intervals was most ingenious. The wires leading from the bell to the office were arranged so that an oscillating electric fan would make a connection when the wings of the fan reached one side with the consequent ringing of the bell for an instant. As the wires were invisible and the fan out of sight it appeared as if the "clock" was doing all the work.

Mr. Burns also used a clock in his presentation. He gave a "Big Ben" to one of the Kiallo musicians and in the scene where Ray rises to the tune of the picture alarm, the musician used the "Big Ben." Both schemes worked to perfection, according to Mr. Burns, and were responsible for much added business during the feature's run at the Kiallo.
Branham Living Up to Reputation as a No. 1 Showman

View of the Minneapolis Auditorium where Charles Branham as managing director is playing the United Artists productions. For full particulars of the exploitation campaigns carried out see the opposite page.
Why the Utopia Plays "Em Off the Bat"

Painesville, Ohio, is about forty miles out of Cleveland. Its people are regular visitors to the Forest City, read the Cleveland papers and follow the shows there as carefully as do Clevelanders themselves.

That is why the management of the Utopia theatre, Painesville, like to run a picture immediately after its first run engagement at Cleveland. They say that it is easier to ride in on the Cleveland publicity.

But they don't depend upon the publicity a picture has received in Cleveland. They don't sit back and wait for patrons to read the Cleveland papers and then come to see the shows when they are exhibited in Painesville. They do their part toward putting it over, and they do a big share for it.

"On With the Dance" was given a particularly artistic lobby display by H. T. Lederer, resident manager of the Utopia theatre. He took a regular six-sheet of the kind furnished by the exchanges and mounted it on beaver board. But what made the display attractive was the fact that he cut the beaver board for a stretch right across the poster, covered it with orange color crepe paper, and placed a red velvet ribbon as a border at the lower edge of it. When the light was on, it looked just like a golden sunset and was very striking. The caption, "ON WITH THE DANCE," was made transparent in like manner. This display was placed in a frame and put in the lobby of the Utopia. People came from all the surrounding towns to see it. It attracted attention because it was artistic, and because it was altogether novel.

The results were more than satisfactory.

Branham Shatters Minneapolis Tradition

"Auditorium No Good for Pictures" Idea Proven Erroneous

FOR those who have feared to tackle one of "those no-good-for-pictures" theatres there is an object lesson in the experience of Charles G. Branham, who has been managing the Minneapolis Auditorium for several weeks for United Artists with this company's attractions used as the feature on the weekly change of bill. The Auditorium is situated about five blocks from the "loop" theatre district. The great majority of showmen were of the opinion that people would not walk that extra distance to see a picture. The Auditorium was originally constructed to be anything but a picture theatre and opportunity for street and lobby advertising is reduced to a minimum.

With everything against him, except perhaps public opinion, Mr. Branham began early to tell the public of Minneapolis and St. Paul that the Auditorium would shortly be opened as a motion picture theatre with Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna."

The first shot was in the form of a 60-inch formal announcement advertisement in all the newspapers. This was run three weeks before the opening day. It was immediately followed by a series of "teaser" ads. Mr. Branham also lost no time in taking advantage of the fact that some competition in town was news and both the Minneapolis and St. Paul newspapers carried a great amount of publicity. Twice a week until the opening day, ads ranging in size from 30 to 60 inches were carried, in addition to daily "amusement" column smaller ads. On opening day a full page spread was published.

One of the best of the exploitation was a "jingle" contest which proved the most popular of anything of the sort ever used in Minneapolis, according to the Daily News.

A daily prize of $5.00 was awarded for the best jingle and a new one was published every day. "The only requirement was the mention of Miss Pickford's name. This was continued for ten days and aroused great interest in the star. Thousands of "jingles" were received.

Another contest was that for girls who most closely resembled Mary Pickford. A $100.00 prize was the award but the real attraction was for the contestants to see themselves in the movies. Those who bore a resemblance to the star were filmed in various parts of the city, making, when completed, a scenic of the city.

This film was screened during the opening week.

Throughout the entire advance campaign, very effective displays were secured through the use of white letters on decorative, black background and cuts from photographs. Combination zinc etching and half-tone cuts were used extensively and with great results.
Sid Grauman’s Exploitation Ideas Told in Pictures

Grauman Improves on Overall Idea

A battle was started against Mr. H. C. Living at Grauman's Cinema Temple last week when a review of cotton frocks was given by the aid of thirty living models. The special number was named by Sid Grauman "The Sassy Jane Fashion Review." Sassy Jane being the brand name of cotton dresses made by a Los Angeles company which was started three years ago by a nineteen year old girl, Jun Rand. Later it was financed by Sid Chaplin, who is vice-president, and the gowns designed by Miss Rand are now made by 450 girls.

The idea of such a cotton dress review was brought to Grauman by the suggestion of prominent men that overalls be worn. He secured the models, and the Sassy Jane Company loaned the cotton dresses which are suitable for every occasion. The presentation opened with a 900 foot film showing close-ups of a number of the designs made at this factory. A short spoken prologue followed which was recited by a girl in gingham, after which the drapes parted and the stage contained a pretty garden, with the moon shining in the background. An Irish gardener in overalls sang "Mother McCree." The garden wall encircled the stage, and back of this was concealed an elevator which raised one of the models to the center of the top of the garden wall from which she descended on a handsome grand stairway to the front of the stage for a few seconds to show the beauty of the gown she wore and then passed off until all of the thirty models had gone over the stage in review. There was then a general ensemble, and the gardener and the girls sang, "They're Like A Great Big Bouquet," which ended the act.

Newman Features Popular Songs

During the recent "Sam Fox" week in Kansas City the Newman theatre featured "Alabama Moon," the popular song in its exploitation for the various attractions on the bill for that week.

In front of the theatre were two large signs painted in colors, announcing "Alabama Moon" as a special attraction. Window display cards featuring the song were placed in windows all around the town, and the song was advertised all over the city on twenty-four billboards.

The staging was wonderful. The setting was a southern plantation, with an old log cabin on the left, a cotton field at the right, a big tree in the foreground with the moon shining through its branches. As the orchestra, consisting of forty-one pieces, played the first strain pianissimo, the curtains were drawn, and Lloyd Garret, one of the foremost singers of Kansas City, seated on a log under the tree in a characteristic darkie make-up, sang the song through.

The audience went wild—applauded, whistled, etc.—and the applause went on long after the feature picture was flashed. Enthusiastic applause has been heard before, but nothing that could compare to what the audiences accorded this feature during the entire week.

Mr. Forbstein, musical director at the Newman, played the song throughout the feature picture as the music theme.

Capacity crowds thronged the theatre during the entire week, which merely shows how a house can increase its prestige and business through broad minded and progressive ideas.

Teaser Folder Works Well

A "teaser" was issued by Manager Herb Jennings, of the Allen Danforth theatre, Toronto, for the presentation at the Danforth of "Should a Husband Forgive?" "He said—No!" appeared on the outside of the folder. The second page read as follows: "She said—Yes!" The third page: "Let the film sermon decide." Then follows a brief announcement about the picture.

Old fashioned handbills of a gaudy type were used by Manager Jennings to advertise "In Old Kentucky" as the feature for recent dates. Two-color printing of red and black was used on yellow stock of cheap quality and the announcement, on both sides of the sheet, was written up in circus style. "Come Early! Whooppee! Come Early! The Mammoth Show Is Here! The Sensation of the Year to See!" Hundreds of Actors—Hundreds of Horses—Thrills and More Thrills. Sensation After Sensation—A Tremendous Spectacle. Beautiful Women and Fighting Men, etc., etc., etc. Such were the statements appearing on this "herald." It was meant to be a sensational piece of literature and it formed a distinct change from the modest folders, cards and souvenirs that Manager Jennings had been using.

How California Theatre Put Over “Excuse My Dust”

The motor car played a prominent part in the exploitation of “Excuse My Dust” when this feature played the California theatre, San Francisco. “Nick” Ayer, publicity director for the theatre, had a number of cars out with “Excuse My Dust” signs as shown in this cut attached. The feature had an especial appeal to San Francisco, as the locale of the picture was laid in and about that city. This fact was also played up in all the newspaper advertising in the effort to give the showing the “local color” touch. The lines waiting to get in shown in the top cut will demonstrate that the California was successful with its advertising campaign.
Big Town Advertising by the Small Town Exhibitor

Longmont is a long way from being the largest city in California but when it comes to exploitation for pictures it is decidedly on the map. Gunn and Ringwelt, managers of the Strand, set a fast pace in live wire showmanship. On this page is shown some of the Strand's recent exploitation.

(Above)
Effective "bally-hoo" stunt used to let Longmont residents know that the Strand was playing "Slam Bang Jim." Nothing especially artistic or new about this but still effective publicity.

(Right)
When the Strand played "Better Times" one of the exploitation stunts used for the engagement was an old car as shown in the cut to which a faithful dóbín was hitched. The novel outfit caused a lot of excitement in the little city.

(Left)
For the Strand's engagement of "The Sagebrusher" a float, as shown in this cut, was driven about the city, the banners along the side of the wagon explaining to Longmont people what the parade was all about.
Goldman Presents "Shore Acres" with Prologue

THE unusually attractive prologue arranged by William Goldman, director of the Kings theatre, St. Louis, Mo., in conjunction with the presentation of "Shore Acres," was the cynosure of considerable public attention and much favorable newspaper comment.

The scene depicted the wreck of the "Liddy Ann," which was the name of the vessel in James A. Herne's classic story. The storm effect was graphically produced with lights and lightning; the drums and an actually moving ocean wave. The lighthouse blinked dimly until it was apparently extinguished by Martin Berry of the story. Then the ship which had been slowly creeping across the dimly illuminated horizon was suddenly carried off in a whirl of momentary cyclone and dashed on the light-house rocks. The wreck was depicted in the most natural manner, even to the most minute detail.

Off stage Glen Eastman, a leading bass singer of the city, rendered the solo, "The Bell in the Lighthouse." The effect which resulted from both the vocal and scenic display was an important factor in bringing the picture into the popular favor.

As an exploitation feature in connection with "Shore Acres," a man whose height was over the six-foot mark, was attired in a canvas suit painted to resemble a lighthouse. He paraded the streets in the vicinity of the theatre with a sign on his back reading: "See the lights go out in the lighthouse at the Kings theatre beginning Sunday, May 2." This means of exploitation has found considerable favor in the eyes of St. Louisans and their response was in the way of increased receipts at the box-office.

Reisenfeld Stages Prologue for "Sea Wolf"

A score prologue number Managing Director Reisenfeld is presenting a musical act that provides both some fine singing and a pleasing atmosphere for the feature being shown at the Rivoli this week, "The Sea Wolf." A stage setting consisting of a canvas showing a sea scene with a night sky above the horizon line and wings representing walls of rocks as if the spectator was looking out on the ocean from a narrow high walled ravine is provided.

Grouped about the stage, some reclining, with others seated and standing, about a dozen of the male members of the Rialto-Rivoli chorus sing sailor songs under the title of "A Sailor's Chorus."

All the performers are dressed in the costumes of sailors or fishermen. A full moon is showing half way down toward the horizon. The back drop is shaded in green and blue, to blend with artistic lights as if from the moon, and discloses a schooner of the type in which the producers of "The Sea Wolf" used for the filming of the Jack London story. There is no attempt to use mechanical effects except in the lightings.

Grauman Gets San Diego Manager

W. E. Jones, who for several years has been house manager of the Pickwick and Superba theatres, San Diego, has been engaged by Sid Grauman, and is serving as assistant to house manager Bob Blair at Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles. Jones, during his ten years of office at San Diego, was responsible for a number of exceedingly live wire stunts which resulted in exceptional business for the theatre in his charge, many of which have been chronicled in this department of Motion Picture News.

Isis, Kansas City, Gives "On with Dance" Much Publicity

T. Bidwell McCormick, a brother of the famous S. Barrett, celebrated his inauguration as managing director of the Isis theatre, Kansas City by putting over an exploitation campaign for "On With the Dance," which would have done credit to his illustrious brother.

The newspaper advertising was begun early and was not discontinued during the showing. Drug and confectionery stores were lined up for the display of specially designed window cards. Before the opening two telephones were kept busy calling up hotels, apartments and furnished rooms, the speakers saying that many persons from out of town were expected to see the picture and the presentation it was to have and also diluting somewhat on the feature's merits. Then the persons talking would add that a list of the available rooms for transients was being made to accommodate this expected crowd.

The Isis presentation of "On With the Dance" included an elaborate prologue enacted by five dancers in Russian costumes. This act contained the rendition of many of the principal Russian dances by professional and talented artists. During the screening at the subtitle, "On With the Dance," the picture was stopped and curtains drawn while a toe dancer costumed in flowing white interpreted the "passing of Sonia" to the strains of "The Passing of the Swan." This dance was given in lights beginning in soft blue floods and gradually changed to purple and from purple to amber. The picture was continued immediately after the completion of the dancing number.

New Sennett Comedy Released June 15

Mack Sennett announces the near-completion of his fifth free-reel super-production, "Married Life," and the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., announces its release June 15th. The first national, following the triumphant success of Mr. Sennett's fourth free-reel, "Down on the Farm," came to negotiations with the Comedy King and secured his next two productions in similar size. "Married Life" is the first; the second is in the course of creation at the Sennett Studios and will be released by First National ninety days after the release of "Married Life.""Ailing to the effectiveness of the comedy from a pictorial point of view is the presence of the Sennett girls on nesses. They are seen as beautiful nurses and render tolerable the adventures that Ben Turpin encounters at the hospital.

New Exchange System is Almost Ready

Educational's new exchange system in United States was practical readyly completed this week with the announcement of arrangements for offices in Atlanta, Ga., and Dallas, Texas, in which the South and South Eastern territory will be handled. Henry Gasberg of the New York office visited Atlanta and selected Arthur C. Bronberg, who is one of the best known distributors of motion pictures in the South. Arrangements for the Dallas exchange were made at the time of the recent meeting of independent exhibitor interests in that section with the representatives of the First National Exhibitors Circuit. The manager of the Dallas exchange will be announced later.

Hal Hodes to Leave Universal Co.

Hal Hodes, editor of Universal's New Serial Magazine, has resigned and will sever his connection with the big film company on May 28. His plans to enter a new phase of the film industry. He is not ready to make his plans public.

Hodkinson's Summer Plans
Names Releases That Are Expected to Overcome Slump of Hot Spells

The W. W. Hodkinson organization announces that it will stick with the exhibitor through the summer season, supplying him the quality of pictures which will enable him to defy the effects of the hot spells. 'Sex' will be one of the big assets in every exhibitor's summer campaign, declares the Hodkinson organization. The drawing powers of 'Sex' have successfully defied the heat and cold and may be trusted to overcome the handicap of heat. Then there is Benjamin B. Hampton's "Riders of the Dawn" which has created quite a bit of gossip on Broadway by the manner in which it sustained a high average of attendance during its recent engagement at the Strand, in spite of very adverse weather conditions. "Another Louise Glenn picture is in the making, called 'Love Kindness.' This production measures up to the high standard set by star and producer in 'Sex,' the animation picture of the year. Expectation on the quality of this coming Read Glenn release is highly favorable. The theme of the play is as engaging and as full of thrills and sentimental surprises as 'Sex.' another good picture, which is called 'Bucko McAllister,' also produced by J. Parker Read, Jr., shows Bosworth in one of those character parts in the portrayal of which he stands unrivaled in the screen world."

Walsh to Start Another Director Makes Preparations for Second Mayflower Picture

Coincident with the launching of "The Deep Purple" his initial independent subject, R. A. Walsh announces the completion of preliminary preparations for his second production, to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation through the First National Exhibitor's Circuit. It is expected that actual filming will commence within the ensuing week. Details concerning the new Walsh feature are being withheld for the present. It is estimated, however, that the theme and treatment will be marked by a radical departure from that of "The Deep Purple." The continuity prepared by Director Walsh in collaboration with Earle Browne was completed last week. The director is now engaged in assembling the cast, which, it is said, will contain a number of prominent players. A location expert attached to the Walsh staff is now in Baltimore making arrangements for exterior settings. Immediately upon his return, the director, accompanied by a large company of players and technical experts will enthrall for the city where many of the film's most important scenes will be photographed.

In order to facilitate production, William C. Menzies, art director, will prepare the interior settings at the Paragon Studio during the company's stay in Baltimore, making it possible for the director to begin "shooting" immediately upon his return. Encouraged by the success of "The Deep Purple," which has been accorded an enthusiastic reception by press and public at its first run showings in New York, Boston and Chicago, Mr. Walsh will produce his second feature on a scale of exceptional lavishness. The story, it is said, is well suited to elaborate scenic treatment. In filming his new offering, Director Walsh will have the assistance of the same technical staff which contributed so substantially to the success of "The Deep Purple." It includes Hal Horne, assistant director; Earle Browne, scenarist; William C. Menzies, art director, and Jacques Biezul, cameraman.

Paramount to Reissue Pickford Picture

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which recently announced the early reissuing of "Old Wives for New," the first and one of the most successful of Cecil B. DeMille's series of dramas of the marriage relation, and Mary Pickford's "Artcraft" picture, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" will release them both in June, the former on the 6th and the Pickford picture on the 20th. "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" was originally released by Artcraft nearly three years ago. The cast chosen was a competent one, Eugene O'Brien being Miss Pickford's leading man and the support including players as Charles Ogle, Marjorie Daw, Helen Jerome Eddy, Kay Kelso, Jane Wolfe, Josephine Crowell, Jack MacDonald, Violet Wilke, Frank Turner, Kate Touny and Fanny Geories.

Charles Ray Adhering Closely to Original

Charles Ray's screen version of "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," the George M. Cohan classic which he is adapting for the screen, is being kept close to the original form which had such great success during its Broadway run. The wide popularity of the original Cohan play and the star's recognition of its value in the form known to a vast public has convinced the producers that the biggest success will attend a screen version following closely the lines of the popular stage piece. "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway" is the first of the Artcraft adaptations which Arthur S. Kane will present for First National release.

American to Release Minter Special Soon

"Peggy Rebels," adapted from "The Mate of the Sally Ann" a "Flying Arrow Special starring Mary Miles Minter, will be put on the market the latter part of this month, according to recent announcement. The scenes were filmed on the picturesque coast of the Pacific where many beautiful views of the rocky shore and the sea beyond were snapped. The filming was directed by Henry King.

A scene from Larry Semon's next Vitaphone comedy, "Solid Concrete."
Neilian Likes Work of Colleen Moore

Marshall Neillan feels that he has another "find" in Colleen Moore, the little actress, now appearing opposite Wesley Barry in the first Neillan production, featuring the boy actor. Miss Moore has already had considerable screen experience.

In Colleen Moore, Mr. Neillan found the exact type he had been seeking for the Wesley Barry picture. After the very first scene the director became highly enthusiastic over the talents of the little actress. "I consider Colleen Moore one of the big possibilities of the future," said he, discussing her work. "Above all things she is just as natural a born artist as little Wesley Barry is. She presents a type that in itself cannot help but prove popular with motion picture patrons."

Allan Dwan Starts His Sixth Mayflower

Actual work on the sixth and last Allan Dwan production for Mayflower was started last week when Dwan, his cast, and staff left the Brannon studios for a week on location in the mountain country of the California Sierras.

Mary Thurman and Niles Welch will play the leading roles in the star-studded cast. Thurman has played leads with William Russell and William Hart. Niles Welch played the lead in Vitagraph's latest production, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," Joseph Dowling, who created the role of the Miracle Man in the George Lous Tiller picture is also in the cast. Frank Capra, George Hackathorn, Eugene Besser and Stanner Williams and other important players, First National will release the production.

"Suds" to Be Released June 27 is Report

"Suds," Mary Pickford's latest United Artists production, is now completing its final stage of the printer. Iram Abram, of United Artists, announces that this production will be released June 27.

With a touch of retrospsect, Miss Pickford is seen as a poor, weebogone slave in a bandanna in the streets of London. This production is credited by the United Artists officials who have seen it as being the best picture that Miss Pickford has ever done and absolutely unique in the line of stories and characterization.

Vitagraph Party Goes to Work by Plane

According to Vitagraph, Tom Terriss, who is directing "The Girl From the Sky," Marguerite De La Moto, Wallace MacDonald and several of their supporting players, as well as the heads of the different technical staff, recently made a trip to "location" on a number of airplanes that are being used in "The Girl From the Sky." The company started from an aviation camp near Los Angeles and landed without mishap at Catalina Island within a short distance of the set that had already been constructed for the picture.

Exhibitors See Mayer Film

Mildred Harris Chaplin Picture Pleases First National Showmen

The picture, the name of which is withheld until its release through First National, will be shown to the public next fall. Mr. Mayer refused to go into details regarding the picture, as he intends to launch it as a surprise. It will be a special in the full sense of the word and admission prices will run to two dollars.

This is only another illustration of Mr. Mayer's determination to make pictures of the finest quality, which should bring in big money at the box office.

E. J. Peil to Appear in Hampton Production

Edward J. Peil has been engaged by B. B. Hampton to impersonate a Chinese role in the forthcoming production of "The Money Changers." Peil has played a number of similar parts in recent releases including "Broken Blossoms" for D. W. Griffith.

"The Branded Mystery" Making Progress

Rapid progress is being made on "The Branded Mystery," the new Ben Wilson serial, which is being made on the West Coast, under the supervision of the star-director who first rose to serial fame with "Voice on the Wire."

First of Paramount Scenics Received

The first of the series of pictures of the lower Pacific, secured by the Paramount-South Sea Expedition, have been released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and will be released in the Paramount Magazine in one of the June issues. The title for the initial installment, which depicts the unusual scenery and customs in the lower Pacific, is "Beyond the Southern Cross."

Under the auspices of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and various scientific and educational institutions, a small group of Boston scientists and motion picture men sailed from Marblehead, Mass., last December in the I25-foot power yacht Ajax, bound for the Southern Pacific. "Beyond the Southern Cross" is the first of the pictures revealing the breadth and intensity of the party's exploration.

Producers

Urges That Exhibitors Select Stories

Richard Stanton, director of many Fox pictures, has outlined a new departure in collaboration between the exhibitor and picture producer. He believes that the exhibitors selecting screen material, would mark a step forward in the industry.

"I, for one," said Mr. Stanton, "would be glad to direct any story upon which has been set the stamp of exhibitor approval. As I am interested in one thing only, the production of box office successes, I would appreciate suggestions from the exhibitors in regard to this or any other plan which will raise the standard of our mutual livelihood."

Pathé to Start Drive on Blackton Pictures

A concentrated and extended drive on Blackton feature productions will be inaugurated this month by Pathé's Manager, J. C. Preparatory to launching this drive, Pathé is now conducting a publicity campaign which will be additional assistance to exhibitors in presenting the Blackton pictures to the public.

Particular stress is to be laid upon "My Husband's Other Wife," "Respectable by Proxy" and "The Blood Barrier," all of which have been released "Fasters." A June release, also will be thoroughly promoted by the Pathé sales force.

More Chicago Houses to Play Vitagraph

Vitagraph's increased activities in Chicago and its environs has just been further emphasized by the addition of twenty-six first class theatres which will now present Vitagraph stars. Through contracts just signed with Jordan and Trinch, fourteen theatres controlled by them were added to those already showing Vitagraph productions, and twelve more were added through a similar contract with the Alter Brothers, who have now included the Larry Semon comedies in their bookings.

GOLDWYN

THE stage play made famous by Leo Dricthstein, "The Great Lover," is shortly to be put in production at the Goldwyn studios under the direction of Frank Lloyd. Continuity for this well-known play is now being prepared, and the cast will be selected within the next week.

The Aborigines' village for the "In the Wake," which is being filmed under the direction of E. Mason Hopper, has been completed in the sea coast country north of Santa Monica, and scenes are being taken, and this week hundreds of Negroes will be employed. The cast promises to be the most spectacular and colorful section of the photodrama. One of the big scenes for this is that of the cannibals putting a visitor to death by the much talked of method of boiling him alive.

"The Black Paw" has gone to Catalina Island where they will work under the direction of Reginald Barker.

On the west, scenes will take approximately two weeks, and the principals taking part in these are Russell Simpson, who takes the name role; James Mason, who plays Red Paw, and Robert Courtman, who appears as Spies. The continuity for this play was written by J. G. Hawks, head of the Goldwyn scenario department.

The Jack Pickford Company filming "They Won't Trade It" is in San Francisco. The producer for this picture is Robert Sherman, who plays the part of "Rose Alving," and Mabel Normand, the star, has gone east on a short vacation.

FOX

ANNOUNCEMENT was made by the publicity department of the William Fox studios this week that the last sequence is now being completed of "Believe Me," the latest entry of the popular Hampton Del Ruth comedy production. In speaking of this setting, it was said it is perhaps the most expected for a comedy, covering at its does, more space than any previous setting of the kind. No title is given out for this comedy, and plans provide that no definite name will be given the subject until the name has been approved by the eastern offices of the William Fox Company. It will probably be several weeks before the finished print is sent from the studio.

The William Farnum Company has gone to San Francisco to spend three weeks in the filming of a serial, "The Scarlet Lash." The serial, which is being filmed in the eastern offices of the William Fox Company.

Universal City is particularly quiet, for it so happens that more than half the companies now at work are on distant locations, and will be away from the big studio for a week or more. The company filming "Marama," is working at an island off the California coast where a South Sea Island village has been built. This picture is being directed by Norman Dawn and stars Edith Roberts.

Lynn Reynolds is directing a company at Big Bear Lake, 150 miles out of Los Angeles, where they are making scenes for "The Red Lane," a tale of the North-west, starring Frank Mayo.

Harry Carey is working at Victorville on the desert sequence of "Fighting Job," by H. H. Van Loan. The direction is in charge of Reeves Eason. "The Moon Riders" company, directed by Albert Russell and featuring Art Acord, at Yosemite Valley, and Jacques Jaccard is filming scenes for "The Death Trap," a Northwest mounted police feature in Pecos Canyon. Leonora Cap- ham and Virginia Fair are the principals.

A number of companies making short-reel subjects are at work at the Universal plant. "Hook" Gibson is working in a two-reel Western for Goldwyn, "Stamboul," with John Ruby as his leading woman. Phil Rosen is making a two-reel melodrama titled "A Happy Fool," and Joseph McDonough and Horace Devies are co-directing a comedy titled "Twin Lassies," "The Way of the Law" is a dramatic story with Western atmosphere being directed by William J. Craft for the Oscar Jacobs Production Company. The subject features Eileen Sedgwick and Joe Moore, and is to be released by Universal.

Four comedy companies are at work. J. A. Howe is making a satire on the Federal prohibition measure titled "The American Desert," and James Davis is directing Charles Doretty and Lillian Byron in a subject that will feature the Century girls. "An Awful Skate" and "Should Waiters Marry?" are nearing completion. The latter features George Ovey.

Messrs. Lyons and Moran have selected Ann Cornwall as their leading woman for their next comedy feature, "La La Lucile," from the musical comedy of the same name, and will have their entire cast selected to begin work the latter part of this week. Princess Dean is next to play in an original photoplay, story of which was written by Tod Brown- ing, who directed "The Virgin of Stamboul" with this star. Lucien Hulbordt, editor of the scenario department at Universal, is writing the continuity for this feature.

Two productions are in the making at the Jesse D. Hampton studio, and plans are being made for the filming of a number of other subjects. Paul Scardon, recently engaged as director, following an engagement at the Goldwyn, has begun work on the Blanche Sweet production, "Port O' Caprice," which gives the star the role of a Broadway actress and her experiences between seasons while in the pursuit of a husband. Albert Roscoe is leading man, and Helen Stevens, George Kayne head a notable cast.

The Robert Thorndyke directed unit making an all star special, "Half a Chance," is in San Francisco filming ferryboat scenes. Mahlon Hamilton as Sailor Burke is to escape by diving into San Francisco harbor while wearing manacles. Lilian Hall is the leading woman, and the cast includes Sidney Ainsworth, Little Mary McAllister, Tom Guice, Josephine Crowell and a number of others.

"The Brass Bottle," from the E. Anesty stage success, is to be filmed with H. B. Warner under the direction of Henry King. Both the star and director are now on a vacation. Edwin Stevens will play the role of geni which he created on the stage in this film.

"Leona Goes a Hunting," the sixth of the Blanche Sweet features, is now being edited, and in the opinion of K. E. Anderson, film editor of the Hamptom studios, this will surpass any of the Sweet subjects released to date.

VITAGRAPH

The William Duncan, "The Silent Avenger" serial company is using the mammoth tank at the Vitagraph plant for harbor scenes. The stern of a large ocean liner has been built in the tank, and fire engines of local departments were used to secure necessary water effects. A setting requiring ten acres of ground is now being built for use by this company.

Mary Miles Minter in her latest Reaart picture, "Jenny Be Good!"

The electrical department of the Vitagraph has found it necessary to add additional facilities to increase the electrical supply to 25,000 volts. This is made necessary because of the trick electrical effects being used in "Hidden Dangers," the Joe Ryan-jean Hagen serial to be released following Duncan's "The Silent Avenger." Because many of the effects in this depend upon trick photography, an additional camera has been added to the staff.

The Tom Terris Company staged a big hotel fire scene in Long Beach this week when more than 200 people were used for scenes in the picture tentatively titled, "The Girl Out of the Sky," which has Wallace MacDonald and Margaret De Motte as leads of an all star cast.

METRO

THill. Metro studio is to be the renderers of many prominent authors of the present day fiction, according to an announcement made by Bayard Veiller, who returned from a business trip to New York this week. The authors are expected to arrive in Los Angeles early in June to work with the Metro scenario department in the adaptation of some of their present stories, and also to write special stories for the screen.

The list of plot makers includes Wally Cook, whose first story for Metro will be "The Five Dollar Baby," with an all star cast. Others engaged according to the statement by Bayard Veiller are Henry Roland, Arthur Somers Reardon, George Gilbe Turner, Arthur Stringer, Don Byrne and Lloyd Chamberlain.

June Mathis is to go East for Metro to work with Maxwell Karger at the New York studio, and plans to come to Los Angeles within two weeks. Miss Mathis has been at the west coast since the Metro producing forces were transferred to Hollywood, and in that time has supervised the continuities of many of the plays. It is intimated that her stay in the East is to be permanent.

The "Hearts Are Trumps" Drury Lane Melodrama company, being directed by Rex Ingram, has gone to San Rafael, California, for exteriors for this Metro production.

The George Turner story, "Held in Trust," which is to be a starring vehicle for May Allison, has been put in production under the direction of John Pace. The cast selected for this includes Darrell Foss as leading man, Walter Long, John H. Elliott, Lawrence Grant and G. Barrell Manley.

Simplex Notes

THAT the Simplex Distributing Organization, as a whole, looks with considerable favor upon the advantages to be derived through the generous use of printer’s ink, is evidenced by the increasing number of "House-Orphans" that are now published by many of the Simplex Distributors throughout the country.

Among the older papers can be counted the "Coskit" of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company of Atlanta, Ga., of which Mr. Harry K. Lucas is the editor. "Sawdust as the Monthly Messenger," published by Lewis M. Swaab, the well-known Philadelphia correspondent, and the "Boston Bean Pot," published by the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, southern New England Distributors for Simplex.

The "Teco Tattler," published by the Tees Products Manufacturing Company of Minneapolis, Minn., with Mr. George Beinberg as its editor, is another monthly house organ that is enjoying great popularity while the "Yale Service Bulletin," edited by C. E. Struble of the Yale Theatre Supply Company, Kansas City, Mo., is formerly issued for the purpose of furnishing to its subscribers a list of new items, humor and accessory information each month. The "B. P. Service Bulletin," published by the Greek Photoplay Supply Company of San Francisco, Cal., keeps the readers informed of everything that is new in the film industry, and is highly esteemed.

According to a report from the Exhibitors Supply Company a survey of the projection rooms in Chicago showed that there are eight thousand Simplex Projectors in use daily in the city. The city is the only city in the country where the percentage of stay shows is maintained in the suburbs and outskirts sections of the city.

This photograph of the new Rialto in Aurora, Illinois, was supplied by H. F. Riege of Chicago, who installed the electric sign.
Auditorium and Two Details in the Rialto, Fall River
The Rialto Theatre, Fall River, Massachusetts

Fall River Consolidated Enterprises, Owners—Louis M. Boas, Manager

The new Rialto theatre marks an important chapter in the amusement life of Fall River, representing as it does the last word in theatre construction, and more especially the modern ideas in appointment and equipment for exclusive motion picture houses.

To Louis M. Boas, general manager of Fall River’s four leading theatres, belongs the credit largely for providing such a theatre.

The New Rialto—modern and up-to-date in every way, with a foyer of splendor and beauty, a lower auditorium of extreme magnificence, a stage setting of novel and exquisite design, a balcony second to none in that section in the matter of convenience for patrons, a booth with a battery of moving picture machines without a parallel in New England, with every detail looked after for the comfort and convenience of patrons—meets the instant approval at the hands of Fall River theatre-goers.

The New Rialto is dedicated exclusively to a motion picture theatre. Twice weekly the program is changed and performances are given continuously from 10:30 A.M. to 10:30 P.M. The construction is fireproof. The balcony is supported by a steel truss weighing 20 tons. The installation of such a girder does away with posts.

Attention is called to the arrangements of exits. From the auditorium there are several exits opening out to the north and south sides. There are also ample exit facilities from the balcony with two stairways leading from the promenade into the balcony seats.

Beautiful in decorative design and effect and enhanced by the most artistic scheme, the entrance to the New Rialto is thoroughly in keeping with the richness of structural appointments throughout.

The outer lobby is entirely devoted to advertising display. Within this section are set specially arranged and manufactured display frames. The arrangement is artistic and decorative and grouped on a scale as elaborate as is usually found in theatres only in metropolitan centres. On either sides are frames for photographs, lithographs, etc., used in connection with exploitation work. Directly above the door, too, and running the full width is another novel frame also used for exploitation purposes.

The real glimpse into the beauty of the theatre comes with an inspection of the second or “mirrored” lobby. On either side are paneled mirrors, between each being a gilded “torch” fixture with a single subdued light. The decorative scheme is gold and ivory with just the faintest touch of blue to complete the beautiful picture. The “inner” foyer is a panel scheme in ivory and gold with the tiniest touch of blue and is carried out most effectively. Mahogany doors, with small mirror panels and beautifully windowed panels within which are set photographs of screen stars who will be seen from time to time at the theatre afford delight.

The lighting effect within the foyer completes the scene of beauty. Two bracket fixtures of gold with Japanese shades are set between the panels on either side, harmonizing perfectly with the general decorative scheme. Shower bursts radiate brilliancy from above in the two inner sections.

In the first section, or advertising lobby, is a ticket window. A second window for the sale of tickets is located in the second section. Opening from the “inner” foyer, are rooms for men and women. First comes the ladies’ room on the left on entering the theatre. The ladies’ recreation room is splendidly furnished. A popular feature in the ladies’ room is a public telephone.

Concentration at the stage, and on either side, is the design executed in an Italian renaissance architectural effect, as seen in the Venetian palaces. A most effective composition is formed by combining the simple and dignified columns, and alternating with its simple profiles, and the arch of the decorative detail. The capital of the Roman orders with rich ornament and gold glazed with a soft green, an effect that is beautiful in the extreme. Within this ornamental arch is the organ.

A silk velour valance, with a four-inch gold fringe, rich in color and design and blending in harmony with the general design is drawn to hide the screen. Above conspicuous in a rich rose colored frame is a large gold letter. Gold and ivory predominate in the decorative scheme, in which is set the screen, unfolded when the valance is withdrawn. The white screen is framed in a border of black. The seating capacity of the theatre is about 1,700 seats.

Special electrical fixtures are installed within the lower auditorium, shades of music being used to subdue the lights. A handsome shower light radiates brilliant effect from the centre of the theatre. There are numerous gas pilot lights about the theatre, installed for emergency purposes.

There is a spacious promenade leading from the balcony stairway along in the rear of the seating area. Opening from the promenade are stairways at either end leading up into the seating area. An emergency sick room, ladies’ rest rooms and a man’s room also open off the promenade, as well as rooms for porters, ushers, etc.

No theatre in New England can boast of a picture booth of the modern type which has been constructed at the New Rialto. In the first place the booth is reached from an entrance entirely apart from any entrance used by patrons in the theatre. It is of absolute fire-proof brick construction with a concrete floor. It is 9’20 with a height of 12 feet.

Another important feature is an electrical device on the door. By means of this device the door cannot be opened from the outside without the knowledge and approval of the operator within. This is made possible by an arrangement of signal bells. The person without makes known his presence by ringing the bell and before the door can be opened the operator within must operate an electrical device. Another feature is a separate storage room at the north end. By means of this film, etc., may be stored in this separate room thus eliminating what has always been regarded as a fire hazard.

Equally important is the equipment in regard to the motion pictures. The New Rialto, it may be said, is equipped on a bigger scale than any motion picture theatre in New England. There is a battery of five picture machines.

The fan system is used in heating and ventilating, hot air being circulated throughout the theatre by this means.

A house telephone system is an added and important feature. By this arrange-Society of Motion Picture Engineers
Holds Convention
Tenth Semi-Annual Meeting at Montreal Great Success

The tenth semi-annual Convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was held at the Hotel Windsor, Montreal, on May 10, 11 and 12. About fifty members gathered from all parts of the United States and Canada and listened to the finest collection of papers that have ever been prepared for presentation before the Society. After listening to several invocations from various civic bodies in other cities, it was decided unanimously to hold the October meeting in Dayton, Ohio.

Monday forenoon on the first day of the Convention was taken up with the opening ceremonies and the discussion of new business. The actual reading of papers did not commence until after luncheon, B. E. Norrish of the Department of Trade and Commerce, with offices at Ottawa, reading the first paper entitled "Educational Possibilities of the Movies." Mr. Norrish related some of the means now being used by his department to further education by means of the motion picture and finished by suggesting possible ways of developing this feature of education.

George A. Blair, Manager of the Motion Picture Department of the Eastman Kodak Co., followed with an intensely interesting paper on "Film Tinting." On account of the thoroughness with which he had absorbed the subject, Mr. Blair felt that those present might not care to go deeply into the subject-matter, the abilagible found the paper to be so interesting that Mr. Blair was requested to read it.

Immediately after the paper on "Tinting," the Optics Committee made its report, laying before the society the results of a psychological test carried out by its members. This report was but the beginning of an exhaustive study into tinted films and its effect on the optics. This work, under the leadership of Dr. Story of the Research Laboratory of the General Electric Company, promises to be of the greatest value to the producer and laboratory expert.

The Educational Committee then made its semi-annual report, bringing out a suggestion for a Course in Motion Picture Engineering for those interested in the subject. As developed by the Committee it is their intention to prepare a number of books on related subjects having to do with the production of motion pictures and to sell the Course in such the same way that correspondence schools are marketed their wares. The huge amount of work incident to the preparation of such a series of lessons was recognized by the Society and the Committee was given the support of the Association to go into the matter further and render a more detailed scheme.

Monday evening the entire membership was the guest of the Perkins Electric Company at the Princess theatre.

Tuesday morning, W. T. Braun, a prominent theatre architect of Chicago, had the honor of presenting the first paper, "Standards in Theatre Design to Safeguard from Fire and Panic." The preparation of this paper is of the utmost importance to the industry and represents a great deal of work on the part of the author.

Mr. L. A. Jones of the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Co. presented the second interesting paper on "The Ventilation of Motion Picture Theatres," as worked out in the case of one theatre near Rochester. It is probable that the publication of this paper in the Transactions will cause many architects to make radical changes in their methods of illuminating theatres. It was one of the most valuable papers delivered during the three-day session.

Closing the morning session on Tuesday was "The Ventilation of Motion Picture Theatres and Studios," by O. K. Dyer of the Buffalo Forge Co. Mr. Dyer went into the various systems, gave their advantages and their shortcomings and concluded by stating what in his opinion constitute the proper and ideal system for the present-day theatre. The afternoon session was commenced with F. H. Richardson's paper on "Projection Speed and Its Effects." Then came W. B. Cook with a treatise on "The Eccentric Star Interrupter Movement," in which he outlined a variation of the Genera Star movement, making use of a non-radial slot. Mr. C. Francis Jenkins followed with "A Continuous Motion Picture Machine." Mr. Jenkins' paper developed that he had been working for some time on a continuous projector that seems to have great practical possibilities. He produced a reversible prism which was the heart of the machine. Further details are not forthcoming at this time but it is expected that at the Fall meeting of the Society the Jenkins will have gone far enough into the experimental end of the project to add considerable to his statements made at Montreal.

C. E. Egelar of the National Lamp Works delivered a paper on the subject of "The Application of Mazda Lamps to Small Motion Picture Projectors." This paper related a history of the development of the Mazda lamp for projectors and hinted at some of the ideas now being carried out to make their application more successful. This concluded the papers for the second day. The banquet was held in the Rose Room of the Windsor in the evening. Mr. George Perkins, to whom the Society owes much for his handling of Convention and for many of the courtesies shown it during its stay in Montreal, was Toastmaster. Other speakers were A. F. Victor, W. C. Smith, H. H. Codimore, A. D. Cameron and G. A. Blair.

Wednesday was taken up with the delivery of five papers. The first was by R. L. Lee on the subject of "Design of Gasoline Electric Sets for Motion Picture Theatres." The second was by H. C. McNary of the Westinghouse Company on "Remote Control Systems for Studios." Mr. McNary's paper compared the older methods of controlling studio lights with the remote control systems now in use in many of the leading studios. The paper was illustrated with lantern slides and was well received.

Dr. H. P. Gage followed McNary with a demonstration of an "Optical Testing Equipment." After luncheon Dr. Story continued his paper of last year on the "Photoelectric Comparison of Lens Systems," and W. F. Little of the Electric Testing Laboratories concluded the session with his "Tests of Screen Illumination." These tests made by Mr. Little are among the first that have been accurately made and as such shed considerable light on a subject little understood up to the present.

The stay of the members in Montreal was interspersed by journeys to many of the famous spots of the French-Canadian City. The hospitality of the citizens and particularly those who had the affair in charge was everywhere in evidence. The spirits could not have been improved upon and on account of this there was an agitation on the part of many members to make Montreal the permanent gathering place of the Society. But whatever may be the future aims of the association this meeting in Montreal will always stand out as one of its best and most successful.

Theatres Combined
Some very ambitious plans have been worked out by the Goldwyn interests and Ascher Brothers, the new owners of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee. Negotiations are now said to be under way for the purchase of the old Gayety theatre, directly adjoining the Merrill. When these are consummated the Merrill will be entirely rebuilt, it is reported, making it one of the finest in Wisconsin. The entire seating arrangement will be changed, as the addition of the Gayety will give the Merrill a floor space of 125 x 150 feet.

Typhoon Fan Co.
333 Lexington Ave.
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

In reply to yours of the 18th inst, beg to advise that the Typhoon Cooling System installed in the Empress Theatre has proven entirely satisfactory and beyond our expectations.

In our opinion, we believe that it is by far the best cooling system that has yet been devised for cooling theatres in the hot weather and for ventilation the year around.

Last summer, although we had continuous hot weather for over three months here, we did regular winter business during this time, which was largely due to our cooling plant.

Exhibitors will make no mistake in buying this cooling plant for their theatres.

Yours very truly,

ipment attaches in any part of the theatre may talk through a central office, but this is not the case here. For example, a mix-up in seats may be easily adjusted by an usher communicating directly with the box office instead of the old-fashioned way of losing time in making a personal trip there. Likewise, an emergency call for a physician may be handled by direct communication.

The New Rialto theatre is the newest playhouse of the four theatres owned by the Fall River Consolidated Enterprise. It is a holding company with the following officers: J. C. Bills, jr., president; L. M. Boas, vice president; B. A. Brager, treasurer; James M. Swift, clerk.

Louis M. Boas, general manager of this entire chain of theatres, has been such a prominent figure for so many years in the theatrical and amusement line in Fall River that he has really become regarded as a "native son." As a matter of fact his birthplace was Providence. He was born there 38 years ago. It was about 1905 that Mr. Boas first entered the show business in Fall River. When he opened up the little picture show at the Scenic theatre, his program at the Scenic called for eight shows daily, with admissions at five cents.

As the general manager of Fall River's four leading theatres and the chain now held by this same company, he is known in the theatrical world from coast to coast.

Development of the Mazda Lamp for Projection Purposes

This is the fifth installment of an exhaustive article on the Mazda Lamp and its application to Projection. The author is H. Freeman Barnes, which is proof enough that the data is authoritative.

Accurate focusing is a necessity with the Mazda lamp. If your lamp, for instance, is only slightly off, 1/4" off center.....20% decrease in light. If the lamp is not focused, 1/4" ahead of focus...23% decrease in light. It is practically impossible to tell by the eye, when the most light is on the screen. Differences, however, are readily noticeable when a dark film is run through the projector.

The following test shows how near the eye judges:

A light was thrown on a screen and several observers asked to note its brightness. The light was thrown off for a few moments and another thrown on. Each observer claimed he saw no difference in the brightness of the screen, although in the first case, there was an intensity of four foot-candles, and in the second case, only two foot-candles.

Two lights of different quality were thrown side by side on the screen. The observers immediately placed one as being at least twice as bright as the other and yet both were of the same intensity.

With the arc, where a three-winged shutter was formerly used, with Mazda projection, a two-winged shutter may be profitably employed, a two-winged shutter, of course, passes considerably more light.

With the alternating current arc, the speed of the revolving shutter blade may often times be exactly timed with the alternations of the current. When such is the case, the light on the screen will vary periodically in intensity.

Operation

The operation of the Mazda Lamp when the optical system is lined up and the lamp focused, is extremely simple—the strongest appeal to the projectionist. No one cares to keep continually fussing with adjustments such as are necessary in feeding a non-automatic arc.

Focusing with the Mazda Lamp, however, is slightly more complicated than with the arc, since two images, one of the filament—the other of the mirror—have to be considered with. The images may be allowed to fall upon the blade of the revolving shutter. Shutter, of course, must be properly positioned.

Gentlemen:

The Power's #6B Cameragraph installed for us by your company about one year ago, has given us excellent satisfaction. We had the machine equipped for Mazda Lamps.

Our machine has been in constant use, and considering the fact that at least ten different persons handle the machine, our expense for lamps has been very small indeed. We have used six and ninehundred Watt lamps, and find both of them very satisfactory.

We use your machine exclusively.

A PRACTICAL TEST OF THE EXCELIKE EQUIPMENT

Christie Film Company
(incorporated)
Office and Studio, Sunset at Gower St.
Los Angeles, California

February 23, 1920.

Yours very truly,

Fred L. Porter
For Christie Film Company, Inc.
A pin-hole in the douser on some housings allows a sharp image of the filament and the mirror reflection to fall upon the fire shutter or cooling-plate, so that a ready check upon the correct focus and placing of mirror may be had.

When used for stereopticon projection, a set of plano lenses are easily pulled into place. The prismatic lens (as before described) cannot be used for stereopticon work.

As regards operation of the lamp itself when it has burned approximately 100 hours there may be noticed on the surface of the filament very minute holes much the same as those in a sponge, only, of course, very much smaller. This is called "Spot evaporation" and is an indication that the filament has burned its rated life and that a new lamp should be inserted.

Again, the four filament coils should at all times be equally spaced. If, for any reason, the coils should bend towards each other so that they are about to touch, the lamp should be removed, since if one coil touches an adjoining one a short circuit will result and the lamp will burn out. The lamp should be inspected before each run. Mirror and condenser should be thoroughly cleaned every day.

Equips with Speedco

Carl Fulton, sales manager of E. E. Fulton Company, has contracted to equip all theaters in the Loew Circuit with Fulco Speedco Arc Controls. In speaking of this important contract Mr. Fulton said that several of Loew's New York houses have been equipped with the Speedco device where they have been in constant use for five years without the cost of a nickel for repairs, so that Purchasing Agent Meinhold was thoroughly familiar with the value and durability of the arc control.

White Light for Motion Picture Photography

By Wm. Roy Mott, Research Laboratory, National Carbon Company

In lighting it is well to get a suitable blending of the direct light and of the diffuse light. Nature’s rule is half and half. The diffuse light is so advantageous in cutting out the harsh sharp black shadows and giving what is known technically as luminous diffusion. Diffuse light can be secured by indirect light as well as by diffusing screens. The intensity of the light should photographically be very high in order to get the camera to operate satisfactorily with f 5.6. The flame arc can be used with a camera lens at f 5.6 to give good lighting on a small stage with 20 kw.

The jump from f 5.6 to f 4.5 or even f 3.5 makes a big difference in the definition and clearness of the picture. The depth of focus can be maintained better, of course, with f 5.6, and because of the important artistic value of the background and the large distances with rapid movements that should be covered, it is highly desirable to work with a good depth of focus. With the flame arc the high concentration of light can be easily controlled as well as the direction of light. This convenience of control of the amount and direction of light are necessarily of the highest importance for free artistic expression on the part of the directing geniuses. In general, the motion picture stages will use flame arcs the following amount of powers having the lens at f 5.6.

Small Stage 20 kw. 4 to 6 flame lamps. Medium Stage 50 kw. 10 to 16 flame lamps. (See Fig. 1.)

Large Stage 100 kw. 20 to 32 flame lamps. Using the larger openings of lens f 3.5 as soon as 20 kw, with flame arcs can be used to secure the illumination of large stages. As the amount of light varies with the reflecting surfaces and is inversely as the square of the distance from the light sources it is not easy to give exact information without going into too elaborate detail. Also multiple reflection can in partly closed spaces greatly increase the illumination. (See Fig. 25 and 26.)

The artistry of the motion picture field is advancing so rapidly with so many new and complex changes that it is rather hard for an amateur like myself to keep track of even their main drift. Among the recent innovations has been the production of plays with the background subdued so that instead of the usual “close-up” the faces of the players in tense scenes to accentuate and cut through the entire production of the play. As, for example, in the play “The Golden Chance.” In this case, the background is subdued to such an extent that the characters in the foreground appear to stand out in stereoscopic relief.

In another arrangement an intensely lighted background is used to cause the players to stand out in sharp shadow-like relief. In still other cases the immense control of intensity of light gives a power of securing the sudden appearance or disappearance of an actor in trick and dramatic pictures and to aid greatly in securing such peculiar effects as double exposure and other photographic tricks. The lighting can be utilized in such a way that the artistic forming of the picture is accentuated in harmony with the idea involved. Another way in which flame arcs are used is for casting shadows in trick pictures and to represent prison scenes in the more artistic manner of showing the shadows of the prison bars rather than the actual grim solid fact.

It would not be expedient to describe in elaborate detail the many devices for rapidly moving the lights around in studios or the particular mechanical arrangement for carrying the lamps around on wheel cabinets or on trolleys or on ropes, etc. The actual installations of lighting are arranged in a great variety of ways, in some cases the overhead lighting is set up with the idea of permanently supplying the particular set. In other cases the overhead lighting is arranged so as to be easily moved by a trolley system from set to set. In the latter case the small weight of the flame lamps in proportion to their candle-power greatly reduces the cost of the moving system and also affords a better utilization for admitting overhead daylight if this is desired. For side lighting the flame lamps are mounted on wheel stands either separately or in powerful unit groups of 6 and 12. The typical Edison stage is shown in Fig. 19 and 20, which were most kindly supplied by the Edison Co. Here about 28 lamps of Aristo type are seen mounted in 4 rows of 7 each. These are arranged to be easily moved. One large stand lamp is shown in this picture, Fig. 18. It is interesting to note that the resistance of the flame lamp can be mounted in a separate room so as to further reduce the heating which is remarkably small with the flame lamp. In some studios a dozen Aristo lamps are mounted in a portable cabinet formed in sets of three rows of four each with the top row forward and the bottom row back away from the stage. The whole can be easily moved around the studio because mounted on wheels.

In Fig. 22 there is shown the overhead arrangement of flame arms and mercury arcs used for lighting a boxing match at Madison Square Garden. (See Lighting Journal 4, p. 78, Apr. 1916.) It is interesting to note that eight motion picture cameras were used simultaneously and that the entire room was so well lighted that brilliant illumination was obtained in every part of the large hall.

The use of flame arcs is carried out on an extensive scale in the Vitagraph motion picture studio located in Brooklyn, New York. Mr. Ross, master mechanic of the Vitagraph Co., was kind enough to furnish me data showing that the average number of flame lamps (20 amperes each lamp) used per set is twenty. In the Brooklyn studio alone, there are 225 flame arc lamps, hanging overhead, or in sets in stands or mounted so as to be easily moved about in small carriages so as to eliminate shadows. In Fig. 20 there is shown a portion of one of the main studio rooms. In Fig. 21 is shown a setting of lighting arrangements received through the kindness of Miss Anita Stewart. In Fig. 24 and 25 are some interior studios that illustrate the use of multiple reflection to increase greatly efficiency and to give diffuse light.

Mr. Cecil B. DeMille, director of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co., wrote about three years ago, an article (“Photography 15, p. 240, Jan. 29, 1916”) under the title “Lighting to a Photoplay Is Like Music to Drama.” He concludes that lighting effects as applied to motion pictures assume precisely the same value in EVERY DIRECTOR will agree that LIGHT is unquestionably the greatest single adjunct in the production of Motion Pictures. If the lighting is wrong because of inefficient control or for any other reason—the picture is bad.

Light achieves its importance in the studio because motion pictures must focus the five senses of mankind in an appeal to one—"sight."

The great tasks of the Director are facilitated by proper electrical equipment and control.

In these branches we are pioneers in the industry and have to our credit the largest and most efficient installations in Eastern studios.

We are alert to the trend of production to this section of the country and place at the disposal of Producers and Directors our entire staff of experts.

the photo drama that music assumes in the spoken drama. He says "the theme of a picture should be carried in its photography." "The Cheat," representing unprincipled sinister Japanese characters, used abrupt bold lights to definitely suggest the "clang" and smash of Japanese music.

In "Carmen," however, the Rembrandt idea was followed. The lighting and grouping of the characters in the soft shadows were all worked out in keeping with the school of that famous master. "Light effects are out of place in comedy; there you will notice our lighting is clear and brilliant corresponding to the faster light comedy and music, except in the melodramatic scenes where we carry our audience into thrills not only by the action of the artist, but by a change in the mode of our photography."

Years of Experience Is No Proof of Knowledge

Our dictionaries define "knowledge" as "skill from practice." The definition of "practice" is given as "frequent or customary action; dexterity acquired by habit, habitual exercise."

For a moment let us forget the above definitions and resort to reality. We must admit that the heading of this article can justly be applied to our own profession—"Music and the Film." We don't wish to specifically pick men whom this glove fits but isn't it an established fact that every profession can bring forth sufficient evidence that "Years of Experience is No Proof of Knowledge"?

How many musical directors are today boasting of infallibility, attempting to prove the correctness of their assertions with a long review of their past experiences. As defined above, experience is gained through practice. Dictionaries define "practice" as "habitual exercise," and we must admit that all habits are not admirable.

In our estimation knowledge in our profession can only be acquired through careful study of human nature. Give the public what they want! Habitual practice is not sufficient to create such a valuable asset as knowledge backed by common horse-sense, the only knowledge the world needs. Alertness and the ability to instantly parallel the ideas of the public is the only fundamental doctrine of real knowledge.

I know of musical directors who although very young in the profession have performed admirable work. Mr. Don Roberts of the Alczar theatre of Tampa, Florida, is one of them. Mr. Roberts not only masters his instrument, but is also able to perfectly fit his pictures in a most satisfactory manner. His music scores are rich in elaboration and vivid in truth for. All this he is able to do in spite of the fact that he is serving in the profession but a very short time.

The above example shows that the proof of real knowledge is the unanimous acceptance of a man's idea by the majority. Immaterial instances can be cited to ascertain the correctness of the above theories, but we hardly believe that is necessary.

We are sure you know of someone practicing a certain trade for a great many years and although professing to know a great deal about that trade, knows but very little.

Let's forget ostentation: Let us value our performances and knowledge by the acceptance and approval accorded them by the masses they are intended for. -The Eurus.

"The Emotional Miss Vaughn"
(Mrs. Sidney Drew Production starring John Cumberland—Released by Pathé—Two Reels)

Seemingly Mrs. Sidney Drew is getting overly ambitious. Having been very successful as producer and director of two comedies from the Julian Street "After Thirty" stories with John Cumberland starred, she not only offers these two for a third production under the title of "The Emotional Miss Vaughn," but plays the leading role herself. In so doing it seems to us that a very clever comedy idea is very poorly muffed. Mrs. Drew isn't the type of the emoting actress, which is the role she plays and in taking a part in the picture she seems to have neglected her job as director, all of which is a long way of saying that the third of the series from the Street stories doesn't rank as well as its predecessors.

The basic idea of "The Emotional Mrs. Vaughn," that of having the impressionist "Jimmy" get interested in an actress who was a former stage girl, apparently not overly outstanding, finally deciding to cure him by pretending to reciprocate and in so doing recites to him a long speech of romantic flavor, interspersed with free love doctrines from her next play with "Jimmy" getting alarmed when he finds himself apparently accepted, and beating a hasty retreat back home to wife and babies, is probably the best of the trio used, but it has not been so skilfully handled especially in building a finish for the offering. However, the skill with which John Cumberland plays "Jimmy," and the idea when it is disclosed along toward the end of the picture make a combination which gets the comedy by. Mrs. Drew as the actress doesn't contribute to any great extent. She registers as a nice wholesome little woman and that lets her out. —J. S. DICKERSON.

"The Flapper"
(Selznick)

The first four reels of "The Flapper," with Oliver Thomas as star, makes an unusually entertaining and amusing drama. And except that the picture is slightly too long drawn out, running to six reels, and the interest lags a bit on account of this, it is well up to the mark in every possible way. "The Flapper" was written by Frances Marion, who has built up her story about a young girl's boarding school, and has chosen her characters largely from that romantic and golden-dreamed period of life that surrounds the age of sixteen. It might be called a female version of "Seventeen," but only inasmuch as the modern young lady who wants to add several years to her age and who seeks sophistication, is a prototype of the male hero in Booth Tarkington's story. There is plenty of good incident, and the subtitles ought to get a laugh. The logic of the story is especially to be commended, for the author has not made a thirty-five year old flibustern fall in love with the youthful "flapper." (Instead, the romance develops between the two young girls, each of whom is tyrannically confined in boarding schools close to one another.

The star lives up to all that you expect of her and possibly more. She is as nice to go upon as ever and judicious enough in appearance. Also she has hit off the modern small town high school girl to perfection. And when she decides to surprise her folks at home during vacation time, by creating a dark and mysterious past for herself, she does it in a very pleasing but love-lorn of a cowboy and world-wary vampire. Theodore Westman has been very well cast. He is a student at a military academy—full of bravado, bluff and romance, and his characterization of a slangy hero is one of the best of the comedy. The story opens in Florida, shifts to New York and ends back in Florida. In transmuting all the characters from North to South the scenery writer has had a little difficulty. There is a bit of the crook element injected which mutes the interest well enough in the beginning but which is partly responsible for the six reel length, and the pictures consequent tendency to drag. The director, author and star are the triflery that have made this interesting little photo-play, which provides good entertainment even if it does not attempt to be a world-beater. Length 6 reels.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Third Eye"
(First Three Episodes of a Fifteen Serial, Starring Warner Oland and Eileen Percy—Astra—Pathé)

HE press sheet on "The Third Eye" announces it as a serial of baffling mystery, intrigue and romance, and proves to be correct as far as the first three episodes are concerned, for all these elements are there and worked out in a way that will give the "serial fan" all the thrills, surprises and excitements their hearts desire. Also, J. H. Van Loon, whose latest feature, "The Virgin of Stamboul," has met with such profound success, is the author of "The Third Eye" and we're going to give him credit for the masterful way he has drawn his characters and the deep imagination he has had in putting them forth in a "serial manner." For although the story thrills and mystifies it carries a certain amount of human interest which acts as a relief to its stranger moments.

The cast which is a splendid one for this kind of work, is headed by Warner Oland and Eileen Percy. Oland again shows that he is a master in timing his scenes, using his moving mannerisms and then again varying them when necessary to the "deep, dry, villain." And he is ably assisted by Miss Percy, who has many difficult and dangerous tasks to perform.

Director Horne has kept the action moving at the right pace throughout and showed excellent judgment in keeping his scenes free from the entanglements that so often occur in serial stories.

The plot revolves around the killing of Curtis Steel, a society man in a moving picture studio. He pursues Rita Moreland, a picture actress, to her studio and endeavors to make love to her. She repels him and in a struggle that follows, finds herself the guilty party. Steel staggers forward and collapses. Our heroine is terrified, for she believed the revolver was loaded only with blank cartridges. As he is bending over her, he leaps to his feet and with a swirling round derringer he rushes to raise her.

That night, however, she is informed that Steel has been found in the studio shot through the heart. And to make matters worse a film is brought forth, she finds herself the guilty party again, this time being mixed up in a murder case, instead of a rare piece of autism. There is a plot to the thing because the cowpuncher is on the track of a sack of gold. The comic points are revealed in his discomfiture over the strange conduct of the armored crook. It is slapstick, pure and unadulterated, with considerable footwork applied to the lower end of the torso. The tomfoolery is extended right down to the bomb explosion when the armored crook endeavors to run away from the cowpuncher and the enemy trespassing on dangerous ground. The street car trick is worked— with the trolley running on the switch just when it approaches the victim. This stunt is becoming quite a phase. Other time-worn tricks are used which are as fresh and new as when they are shown which are brand-new. The girls come into the action with some exercises, but most of the incident revolves around the crook and the cowpuncher. "The Third Eye" is not a master-piece of burlesque but it, nevertheless, has its comic values. Chester Conklin is the principal comedian. —ALFREDO REID.

"Should Dummies Wed?"
(Sunrise Comedy—Fox—Two Reels)

I t is taken Hampton Del-Ruth to think of the ancient armor suit as an idea for one of his Sunshine comedies. It is the burgher burlesque with one of the footpads keeping his "in-man" to a power show where he is disposed of as a rare piece of antique. There is a plot to the thing because the cowpuncher is on the track of a sack of gold. The comic points are revealed in his discomfiture over the strange conduct of the armored crook. It is slapstick, pure and unadulterated, with considerable footwork applied to the lower end of the torso. Tom Mix Thriller More Than Satisfies

Here you have Tom Mix in a picture that abounds in surefire thrills and real dramatic interest. The scenario writer, Jacques

Lazard, is evidently having fun with our story in the beginning, when

Mix does a dashing stunt of leaping through the air from a speeding train, and then, with a speed that is truly wonderful, he lands on the tracks and refuses to fall. The girl is credited with writing the story, and while the plot material is more or less familiar, it is composed of thrilling and entertaining novel incidents, and this, appears to be the work of a woman of the mystery. The star is credited with the cowboy-actor's daring, making this a Western that should get an enthusiastic reception. The dance hall set is huge, the figures proportioned, several hundred extras, and "Tony," the bronco, afforded fearless riding of the picture. A remarkable high decision for a speeding motor truck pursued by bandits is a novel bit of business. Mix drives the heavy car through a wooden slat to escape his pursuers.

The story runs along smoothly with no improbable evidence in view except that all the bandits are rather poor shots, and work up to a climax that is wonder. The star is a Deputy United States Marshal, and the plot deals with robbings of gold shipments, which are made by motor and truck, and the clearing up of the mystery by the marshal. The star witness is kidnapped, and is rescued just in time to testify in behalf of the innocent prisoner.

To run this set in a small mining town, they have made it a twentieth century mining town instead of a crude log cabin affair of the gold rush days. Mix receives good support from Francella Billington, Lucille

Young, and Lester Cuno, and the rest of the cast is equally pleasing, while there is some good riding by the cowboy actors.

The Terror," starring Tom Mix, is scheduled as the opening of the new theatre on the west coast. The star is a Deputy United States Marshal, and the plot deals with robbings of gold shipments, which are made by motor truck, and the clearing up of the mystery by the marshal. The star witness is kidnapped, and is rescued just in time to testify in behalf of the innocent prisoner. Tom Mix is riding in reality, and he has injected a goodly amount of it into this picture. But such thrills as diving off a high cliff hold no terror for Mix, for he is riding in reality. Tom Mix has the greatest daring feats in "The Terror," which he performs, is leaping back of the cliff, running up and down the tracks. His performances have been noted for the dashing stunts of his star, and in this feature, the cowboy-actor has outdone himself. He does this riding by backing and kicking until he has cleared the entire floor. Meanwhile his master is "covering" the other two girls. There are only a few of the stunts of this interesting picture that will make you hold tight to your seat in your excitement. There is also a pleasing love story running through it all, and a gripping tale of a series of robberies in a western mining town. Mix plays the deputy United States Marshal, who eventually solves the mystery and punishes the guilty parties. The cast is such an unknown players as Francella Billington, Lester Cuno and Lucille Young.

PROGRAM READER

If you like to see pictures of masculine dexterity and courage mixed with a strain of beautiful romance, there is a treat in store for you on this week. When Tom Mix, one of the most popular screen stars, will be in "The Terror," his latest photoplay of the West, it is a picture that specializes in sending the thrills running up and down your back. Mix's productions have been noted for the dashing stunts of their stars, and in this feature, the cowboy-actor has outdone himself. It's just five reels of excitement, romance, and more excitement.

The star plays the part of a Deputy United States Marshal who is sent to a Western mining town to solve the mystery of a series of robberies. He does this by backing and kicking until he has cleared the entire floor. Meanwhile his master is "covering" the other two girls. There are only a few of the stunts of this interesting picture that will make you hold tight to your seat in your excitement. The cast is such an unknown players as Francella Billington, Lester Cuno and Lucille Young.

SUGGESTIONS

Boost the dashing stunts of the star in this picture. Tell your patrons that these pictures are sure to please one of the "Terror," and they will not be disappointed. His last picture was a success, and they should be pleased with this one. As this allow for good stories, and the Western is a picture par excellence. It's just five reels of excitement, romance, and more excitement.

“BURNING DAYLIGHT”
(C. E. Shurtleff-Metro)

London's Violent Story Makes Good Audience Picture

There is nothing vital to this screen version of Jack London's "Burning Daylight"—enough dramatic conflict, rugged characterization and picturesque backgrounds to make it a good audience picture. Those who are unfamiliar with the story may find somewhat disappointing in discovering that the outdoor action is relieved by indoor incident, and those who have read it or will not certainly remember that the idea has been used time and again on the screen.

To the contrary, it seems to appear far away, since its development presents the juvenile Westerner leaving the open range to take up business in New York and be fleeced by a

"Jip-i-Ji" man—"wolves." The tenderfoot who goes West and the vile of the soil who goes East are certainly two overworked formulas.

It must be admitted here that the director has treated the latter so that it presents a full quota of action. The story, looking at times like a Western novel against which the miner Harmsen, or "Burning Daylight," as he is commonly called, starts a boom town through his discovery of the precious metal. He sells out for a snug fortune and decides to move to the metropolis and best Wall Street at its worst. It is clearly out that Miss

Lewis is the star, her following is apt to be disappointed not to find him in his customary battle royal. No fights take place on the edge of a cliff. The only time be becomes the "he-man" is when he holds up the "wolves" with his Forty-five and recovers the five million of which he is temporarily fleeced.

The audience will also be surprised to notice that Lewis has taken up the comedian's mantle, for he becomes, in his Eastern environment, the proverbial "ball in a china shop." He is not always at his best in the comedy scenes. The romantic interest is well emphasized, there being an adequate note of conflict. And the suspense is well maintained.

The direction shows the Westerner's unique aspects. All things considered, the star gives a capable performance, ably assisted by Helen Ferguson, who furnishes the romantic interest. Some of the minor actors overplayed and destroyed the effectiveness of their roles.

Length: 5 reels.

"Burning Daylight," a screen version of Jack London's novel of the same name, will be presented at the... — the week of... — with a cast that includes Mitchell Lewis... William V. Mong and Edward Fenton. The story of the star will recall that of Elam Harmsen, or "Burning Daylight," as the whole of Yukon knows him, a crude, big-hearted prospector, with a huff for adventure and a devil-may-care spirit that drives him guiltily through the hardships of the mining town. It is an ideal role for the star since his rugged personality is synonymous with the part.

The opening scenes show the gold stamped, with the action centering... of the Tuvio saloon, with its turbulent atmosphere of elemental passions, forms a striking contrast to the developments in the latter part of the picture, where... "Burning Daylight" fights the giants of Wall Street and bears them at their own game. The picture is well punctuated with stirring action and there is a pleasant vein of romance running throughout the entire plot. "Burning Daylight" may be safely recommended to the public. It is a picture that will be liked by a gay, and the picture on the screen it presents a bang-up smash hit.

"NOTHING BUT LIES"
(Taylor Holmes-Metro)

Fare Picketed - Drag and Carries Very Little Humor

n expenditure of effort which might be placed to better advantage is brought out in Taylor Holmes' latest picture, "Nothing But Lies." Not always fortified with any sustaining highlights in the shape of comic situations and with the action running around in a circle, it carries but few entertaining moments. On the stage it was presented as a sequel to "Nothing But the Truth," but didn't seem as near the success of the former. One of the idea alone in the play. In the word "Truth" there contained a note of originality and was spontaneous in its development, the fare of "Lies" was conceived to take some of the glory of its forerunner by presenting contrariety theme and treatment.

It was a quiet scene at the court and on the screen, deprived of snappy dialogue, it drag's its way to a pointless conclusion. Five and one-half reels are too many to present a fare built upon a fabric of lies, because the action becomes repetitious long before the ultimate climax is reached. The scenes are not funny in themselves, the situations being too thinly conceived. What one scene is a series of bits of entrances and exits and the players rushing about making explanations. Even a fare must have backbone to score its points. A bit of logic woven in the thread somewhere. Here the chief character is caught spreading one falsehood on another in order to save his concern - with divers persons being complicated. It is quite efficacious at this.

The telling tells more of the story than the action itself and contains most of the humor. Mr. Holmes works hard, as do all of his players, in an effort to make it snappy and bright. It must be admitted that they have little or nothing to work with, and are not at ease in their roles. Mr. Holmes knows when he is going over the top and keep them subdued. His skill at expression is lost because of the vanity of his idea - an idea, incidentally, which doesn't intrigue the imagination. Most of the interest is centered in the love of business introduced by the players, among those who stand out being Rapley Holmes and Dodson Mitchell. The production itself is praiseworthy. Length, 5000 feet. - Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

George Cross - Taylor Holmes
Ann Nigh - Jack McGowan
Allan Nigh - Fred Thomas
Mr. J. Nigh - John Juno

Rolie - Gaye O'Brien

By Aaron Hoffman, Directed by Lawrence Windom. Photographed by Jacob Badaracco.

PRESS NOTICE - STORY

Taylor Holmes will appear - no one - in an earlier offering, "Nothing But the Truth," and concerns the efforts of a young man to cover up a friend's mistake. The hero is the junior member of a high and Godly family and he is shyly and smoothly in his concern until Nigh's son becomes involved with the propaganda of truth. George Cross wants to go to prison and his friends don't care to have him, they are too busy swamping him with congratulations and nobody would listen to the man who had caused the initial outrage which turns out to be a big business asset.

Cross nearly loses the love of Ann Nigh in attempting to square himself and he gets himself entangled in a series of startling complications. These same complications made thousands laugh when they were incorporated in the original play and presented in the picture they are as mirth-provoking as ever. Mr. Holmes is a comedian who knows the value of situation and climax and he scores effectively in a quiet way. He includes the beautiful Justice Johnstone, Rapley Holmes and Jack McGowan. Lawrence Windom directed the feature, and his action is as snappy and full of comedy as much as the story.

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever start out to tell the truth and find yourself involved in a fabric of lies? And every attempt you made to square yourself you found that you were talking deeper every day. That's the situation in "Nothing But Lies," directed by William Collier. It is in the generation of William Collier's stage success, "Nothing But Lies," which comes to this screen. The story is a sparkling comedy-a-composition piece. It is a previous offering, "Nothing But the Truth," and it features the same comic high lights which are excellently brought out by the star and his well-balanced players that include the beautiful Justice Johnstone in the opposite role. The picture makes a lie look like a white lie.

SUGGESTIONS

Emphasize the fact that this is a screen version of a well-known stage success - a fare originally acted by William Collier. And tell that it was a companion piece to "Nothing But the Truth." Exploit the star as one of the screen's leading beauteous. Treat "Nothing But Lies" as a campaign for your programs and newspapers. Use a portrait of George Washington Holmes which will appear in your lobby to fit the humor situation and Johnstone and advising your patrons that she is one of the most beautiful women in America. Feature the beauty of the one long continuous laugh start to finish. Use such a teaser as "We're telling the truth when we declare "Nothing But Lies" is one of the funniest farce pictures ever made.

"NO. 99"
(Brunton-Hodkinson)

Obvious But Interesting Photoplay Is Kerrigan's Latest

It is a made-to-order picture which J. Warren Kerrigan has in "No. 99," but despite its obviousness the offering is quite interesting. An escaped convict story, by its very character, is usually full of action and adventure and this one is no exception. What if it is in the fact and quite improbable? What if it does develop according to the story? Its faults are unimportant compared to the generous spray of highlights which forms one's attention. The star dearly loves to bask in adventurous roles because they permit him to be heroic in full radius of the camera. And he is the center of activity from the time he escapes from prison until he vindicates himself in the court. The convicts have sneaked into this house and is protected by the heroine. She gives him her brother's clothes to wear and presents him to a guest. Naturally this is shocking with a vengeance. And all of it follows the familiar groove. Still the interest of the spectator is maintained.

Certainly touchers do much to destroy the logic. For instance: Why are the guards permitted to search a house without a warrant? They are admitted when a week-end party is in full swing and conduct themselves in a thoroughly Prussian manner. Of course their actions may be discounted in a way because of the serious-value of the story. The convict has sneaked into this house and is protected by the heroine. She gives him her brother's clothes to wear and presents him as a guest. Naturally this is shocking with a vengeance. And all of it follows the familiar groove. Still the interest of the spectator is maintained.

The complications develop when the guards appear and introduce and a bit of suspense is thus aroused when one wonders if the convict will be able to "get away with it." When be exposes the girl and marries her, the complications are swept aside and he is revealed as a "more sinned against" than Simon young man. It may perplex the critical how is he able to keep his story without proving it or proving it from the crime in itself. The keen observer will also notice that Kerrigan elopes in a fur coat and comes back in a leather one. There are several slips which show a carelessness of detail. However, the picture keeps going, sending out a full measure of action and a balancing note of romance. The star and his players contribute good performances.

Length, 5 reels. - Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE - STORY

"No. 99" is J. Warren Kerrigan's latest picture and it comes to the theatre one of the best of the year. It is an entertaining comedodrama containing action, suspense, and emotional situations, all of which is seen as an escaped convict. He hides himself in Cynthia Vivian's boudoir, where she is saving the life of a high and Godly man. The man is saved and the convict, out of guilt, hides his hiding at the home, posing as Philip Valentine, a friend of her brother who is exiled from a small family and who at this time is seen as an escaped convict. The house party is John Brentt, the man who sent Arthur to jail, and Renee Eifferting, an old sweetheart. Complications develop and Arthur's identity is established, but when things look up for him, the judge comes to rescue. He had married Cynthia in the meantime. The spirited action keeps the audience along with unique situations and Kerrigan makes the most of them in his dashing way. As in his previous offering Fritzi Brunette heads the aggregation of players among whom are Lila Leslie, John Stepping, Charles Arling and William V. Mong. The story was written by P. Kerrigan and directed by Ernest C. Warde. The star has a good characterization here and one that permits him plenty of acting opportunities.

PROGRAM READER

He escaped the prison, jumped in someone's limousine and made a good trip to the airport and entered a bedroom window of a house. But the girl who saw him extended her sympathies and made him a guest of the week-end party being given a nearby hotel. The prison guard stopped at the house, thinking he was the real convict, but the prisoner guard searched the house they never mistook that their convict was present. The picture is a spirited comedy-drama which unfolds a series of unique situations, and J. Warren Kerrigan in his inimitable manner makes the most of his opportunities. Fritzi Brunette appears again as his leading lady. The picture is called "No. 99," and was written by Lessen, photographed by Jack Cunningham, and directed by Ernest C. Warde. It will be at the theatre next week. - Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

Convict stories by their very character lend themselves well to exploitation. You may be sure this is a picture that will entertain your patrons. Announce that J. Warren Kerrigan has another picture which is titled "No. 99." He should be played up prominently. You can go in for suspense by featuring the title and nothing else. You can assassinate the audience with "growing suspense" and build up a situation that is a comedy-drama of an escaped convict who turns the tables on his pursuers. Toll that it unfolds a series of spirited situations. Feature the other interesting characters: "Allen the World to Nothing," "The Man Outside." Send out circular letters because the star has a big following.
“ROMANCE”

(United Artists)

Artistic Production Given Play of Love and Sentiment

The long heralded screen version of Edward Sheldon’s famous play “Romance,” with Doris Keane playing her identical role, has reached the exhibitors and the public and the verdict is sure to be “It is a charming performance, finely calculated for the screen.” The production is under the skillful supervision of the platform which is attached to it. Still the average patron is ever in search of a screen picture. From that standpoint the star is certain to please any one tired or the personalities who are presented every other week. She brings to the screen a fragrant personality even though her historical capabilities are smothered through its limitations. Yet she sells well and conveys a spiritual quality in her work.

The picture itself is lacking in physical action, there being scarcely a scene of situation or climax. So it is dependent upon its theme of broken romance for its exploitation. But it must be said in all fairness that action which presents nothing else but the serious and sentimental love-making has a tendency to become wearisome at times. The material follows the play very closely, the subtitles being genuine excerpts and carrying on its thought exceedingly well. And the treatment is identical with the original, even to the sets and to its subsequent development. A young man contemplating matrimonial approaches his grandfather on matters of love and the old gentleman’s imagination travels back to the heyday of his youth—to the big romance of his heart.

His account of it makes up the moving moments of the play. He is a character in love with an Italian opera singer and the conflict is generated in his effort to rise above worldly cares and take her with him. But she is of the flesh and the romance ends with a deep sense of grief. It is hard to reconcile the conduct of the young gentleman with his religious doctrine. And his action, to some, will be a big pill to swallow. Chet Wittenberg plays the part of the lover with the atmosphere. The scenes are well arranged and he has guided the play and got the most from them. Basil Sydney as the Rememberer plays with a good deal of fire and persuasion, and Norman Trevor brings a balancing note with his admirable restraint. The picture will certainly appeal to those in search of romance or love who have lost it in the days when love was young. Length, 5 reels.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

No screen production that has yet been produced possesses such delightful plays ever written and you can mention that it holds audiences spellbound in New York, Boston, Chicago and London, will play the chief part, when it is shown at the theatre next Monday. This fascinating drama reveals Mr. Sheldon as a playwright of rare sentiment and poetic gifted, and his play has endured because of their very qualities. The picture is well named for it expresses an exquisite romance. As Mme. Cavallini, the fascinating prima donna heroine, Miss Keane has won for herself many triumphs on the screen stage and is ranked as one of America’s greatest emotional actresses. The most minute care has been taken to represent faithfully the environment of the period in which the story is laid. It is a breath of romance which comes like a summer breeze. Miss Keane is supported by another cast of excellent players most of whom have had long training upon the stage. Chet Wittenberg, the director, has been faithful to the original and has turned out a picture which is a rich achievement.

PROGRAM READER

Manager−has the pleasure of announcing that “Romance,” a screen version of Edward Sheldon’s well known play of love which has captivated audiences throughout the land, will appear at the theatre next Monday. As Miss Keane, who has won a position as one of America’s greatest actresses, Miss Keane is known for her talent of poetic imagination and charming sentiment, while the love of romance of the period is as deeply rooted as the love of the characters who are appealing and beautiful. Miss Keane was brought from London where she created a genuine sensation in “Romance,” to appear in her leading role on the screen. And she gives excellent testimony why she is called a superb actress. Our patrons are assured of seeing one of the most appealing pictures ever screened.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture which demands full exploitation. It is one of the greatest plays ever written and an admission ticket to the shows is sure to sell out. The title and use circular letters and every kind of exploitation possible.

“A LADY IN LOVE”

(Paramount-Arcafit)

Ethel Clayton’s Charming Performance the Only Redeeming Feature Here

There is very little to commend in this picture aside from the star’s sturdiness and effective portrayal of the heroine’s domestic roles. Whatever merit it once possessed as a play has apparently gone astray since there appears to be neither rhyme nor reason in the plot. Although based upon a melodramatic formula the woman with a past, there is something to ring in a sentimental or two will be contrary to its logic. It will be difficult to present one that depicts the young well bred girl in love with love, eloping with a mustache wearer, finding herself a grass widow immediately after the ceremony, and waiting for a divorce to take place before she can marry the new rich man. Of course the fatal note is nether eventual which makes her marriage void and the second fellow is revealed as a Prince Charming. In the meantime there is considerable “give and take” between them, because she is the main woman of her know of her past. And a counterplot is offered which presents the reverse situation of her playing at love. The villainous scamp who leaves her heroine in the lurch, if she will change her name, does not have Miss Clayton gives it tone, but she desires a picture with the purpose, Harrison Ford is pleasing to the gentleman in love. The production itself is unnoticed. Length 5 reels.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The latest photo play to present the charming and talented Ethel Clayton in “A Lady in Love,” adapted by Alice Byron from the original play by that name by Harriet Ford and Caroline Duerr, and directed by Walter Edwards. The picture will appear at the theatre next Monday. It may be described as a domestic drama with much of the same qualities that were found in “The Thirteenth Commandment.” The story plays the role of a convent girl who elopes with a certain Never-Do-Well. After the marriage she discovers that he is already married, although he contradicts it. Later he is forced to flee and Barbara consults her guardian about a divorce. This arouses the jealousy of his wife. A young lawyer is summoned to handle the divorce and Barbara falls in love with him, despite the fact that it is a never-Do-Well. This picture contains a full quota of appealing situations that are duly enacted by Miss Clayton and her comediene, who are as endearsome as they are captivated. Tell that Harrison Ford is the leading man and advertise the director. He has turned out some fine products for Constance Talmadge and others.

SUGGESTIONS

The steady picturegoer knows what to expect from an Ethel Clayton picture. He knows that the star will give her best effort in the production which is flawless. So exploit this latest Clayton lecture as up to her standard. Tell that it is an adaptation of a successful play and that it adheres the star with another opportunity to present a melodrama of romantic interest. Repeat to the trade that her character is the heroine of the story and her and her’s. There are no situations in the play with which you can link up because this picture is based on the love of the story and her. But this is the same high quality that is seen in "Young Mrs. Warfield." Tell that Harrison Ford is the leading man and advertise the director. He has turned out some fine products for Constance Talmadge and others.

CATCH LINES

She was in love with love and married before she reached the age of discretion. Then when the real man came along, what happened? See Ethel Clayton in "A Lady in Love.”

She was married to a man who led a double life. How to keep her self-respect. That was the question. Her heart told her. See “A Lady in Love.”
"A TRIP TO MARS"
(Tower Film Corporation)
Should Furnish Average Entertainment

THIS picture dwells upon a topic which, although not a new one, has troubled the minds of scientists for many generations. Every now and then a story is made up which suggests a possible truth in this old but always new theory and works our imaginations to fever point, wondering whether we will succeed in his almost hopeless task—that of communicating with the well-known planet, Mars.

The author of this tale has put this thought into story form with the objects of giving us interesting and thought-provoking entertainment. In this lie has succeeded in many ways. The picture should afford pleasant amusement. However, there are a few drawbacks which may tend to lessen the feature's success. It was made in Italy and the foreign style of acting and direction is noticeable throughout. The actors either overact or they pose, which seems to draw the attention from the story and to themselves, the leading man being especially glaring.

The settings and lighting are not up to the standard and the exteriors, especially in the Martian atmosphere, are beautiful, many "smells" appearing in them.

The story is different from the usual type in that it is not of the dream sequence variety, for we see two ancient explorers leaving mother earth in their airship "Excelsior" and, after the usual experiences and discouragements, arrive at Mars.

In the new world the discoverers find a different world from the one they have left. Peace, quietness and good will towards mankind is the motto there and it is an offense even to kill a bird, as our heroes soon discovered.

We are shown the temples, the hills and plains which are filled with beautiful maidens, who do not have the "macho" look of the "wimp" but are tough and practical about things. They have known our planet and of the terrible disasters that have occurred, through the faint hints which appear in the story. After being shown the wonders that exist on the new found planet, the discoverers prepare to leave it and return to their home, but where is the "bird of paradise" whom he takes with him back to earth that she may spread her beautiful doctrines among the people here.

PROGRAM READER
Manager—announces that "A Trip To Mars," a Tower Film Corporation feature, will appear at this theatre on next week.

Although the theme of this story is not a new one, it is one that has worried the minds of scientists for many years and it is only within the past few weeks that one of our own scientists has shared this knowledge with the world. We have had many letters from scientists interested in this matter and we have included some of their letters in this feature.

The author of this feature, however, has taken upon himself the difficult task of accomplishing this object. He has written the story in his own way and so has he placed his characters upon the screen and thus has made it possible for us to see the world as it may be in the future.

The story is not only interesting but it is also well written and the characters are drawn with such vivid and accurate descriptions that one could almost see the characters in their own mind.

The idea is that man is destined to conquer the universe but it must be done in such a way that peace and joy are the chief objects of his efforts.

The adventures are shown the temples, the hills and plains, which are filled with beautiful maidens who are devoted to the cause of peace and justice. They have a different kind of beauty than that which is found in our own earth, but they are just as beautiful.

The story is not only interesting but it is also well written and the characters are drawn with such vivid and accurate descriptions that one could almost see the characters in their own mind.

The idea is that man is destined to conquer the universe but it must be done in such a way that peace and joy are the chief objects of his efforts.

A Mistake Worth Thousands

to Showmen

Mistakes are usually expensive, but this one is a money maker. Before we started producing and releasing "COMEDYART" we made a budget covering the expenses for distribution, productions, etc. Of course, we based these figures on the gross amount of business that we expected to do with "COMEDYART."

This million dollar mistake, with the reverse English, that is, making money today for several thousand exhibitors so that we greatly underestimated the value exhibitors would immediately place on the "COMEDYART" idea, that is-three snappy, high-class subjects in a two reel release each week. We underestimated our gross bookings on "COMEDYART" so greatly that starting with our fourth release, "MOTHER'S ANGEL," we find ourselves able to spend from three to four times as much money on the making of our comedies as we had planned in our budget; that we were able to add four more companies making these comedies; able to add more specialists in title writing, gag men, artists; able to build the biggest, most elaborate sets—to use hundreds where we had planned to use dozens.

The costumes of our "special" beauties are more daring, more magnificent than any producer ever has used and each one of them is a new, original creation by the highest priced imported modiste west of New York.

And the "special" Beauty Chorus! Well, we allowed for some expense in this line but these "specials" cost five times our original figure and they're surely worth ten times as much to you.

We started walking; now we're running. We started in low speed; now we're in high and hitting on twelve. There is no program of short reel subjects that can compare in quality with the "COMEDYART" releases now available, and to come.

If you have contracted for "COMEDYART" consider yourself lucky; if you have put off getting a contract for this latest winner there is still time to remedy it. There's a "Special" office near you and a postcard will bring you your opportunity—the same opportunity that thousands of the wisest, most successful exhibitors in America are cashing in on right today.

TO EXHIBITORS-

"In every way 'Below the Surface' is superior to 'Behind the Door.' The story is strong and not gruesome. It is a daring theme treated in a daring manner.

"The undersea scenes are simply astounding. They are by far the most startling ever shown.

"I am sure that no matter how great your expectations are, you will not be disappointed in 'Below the Surface.'"

A Paramount Artcraft Picture
A NEW note has been struck in screen drama. The scenes, the situations, the thrills of "Below the Surface" are amazing in their novelty, compelling in their intensity.

The story of a love that carried all before it, it is a picture that is destined to arouse the entire public to unqualified enthusiasm.

It's simply a case of knowing. Take a trip to Paramount's Land of Make Believe, land of love and life and laughter, land where everything you want to come true, comes true.

You're the guest of the finest actors, directors and dramatists, who guide you through these glorious hours. They are waiting for you now. Start tonight, make this evening a great evening. Your invitation card is your theatre's advertisement, and if that says "It's a Paramount Picture," it's true.

Wise exhibitors know that. And they know that they can bring these millions into their theatres by tying up with the national advertisements.

Just run this line in your newspaper space:

We Show Paramount Pictures!

And watch the crowds come!

"The Greatest Love Story Ever Told"
Triumphs At Its Initial New York Presentation

"'Romance' is one of the finest examples of screen entertainment seen in New York in many months. Doris Keane gave a performance which might well serve as an object lesson for most of our 'movie' stars. The reality of her 'Rita Cavallini' has seldom been seen on the screen."
—New York World.

"Miss Doris Keane charmed a large audience yesterday by her impersonation of Mme. Cavallini. She is at her best in this picture and her work is as effective on the screen as it was on the stage. The unfolding of the story kept the audience at a high pitch throughout."
—New York Evening Telegram.

"Miss Keane's acting on the screen has lost none of its charm."
—New York Evening Post.

"'Romance' is uncommonly interesting."

"Miss Keane makes a lovely Marguerita Cavallini, just as she did on the stage and as the love story unwound itself, one could easily understand why the stage production had been so great a success."

"The screen version shows that Miss Keane has indeed gained in power to stir the emotions. Her work is beautifully shaded."
—New York Sun-Herald.

"Doris Keane in the role that she played over a thousand times in England and many times in this country, in Edward Sheldon's 'Romance', repeated on the screen at the Strand yesterday, the triumph that she achieved in this charming play on the legitimate stage."

TWO STANDARDS

THE "PROFESSIONAL STANDARD" inflammable film is that used by the EXHIBITOR. In every theatre there is a fire-proof booth and a licensed operator as prescribed by law for the protection of the audience. Every theatre man recognizes the great work being done to increase his patronage and promote his interests and those of the Producer, in building up his audience by the use of the "SAFETY-STANDARD" non-inflammable film in the Church, the Home, the School and elsewhere.

Here we find men, women and children, usually those who have previously looked down on Motion Pictures, now becoming interested. These are the ones who make up that potential audience who ultimately will become enthusiastic Motion Picture theatre patrons.

Demand and Supply

THE louder the demand, the greater the supply! That is one version of the economic law. The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is perfectly equipped to supply all the RITCHEY posters demanded.

The exhibitor needs all the RITCHEY posters he can get. He will get them in sufficient number when he voices his demand with enough sound, volume and insistance.

Regarding the demand and the supply of great posters,—our interests and the exhibitor's interests are identical. We make and he wants the greatest motion picture posters that it is possible to make. We are concerned with their production. Getting them is his concern. He should always remember that tickets are only purchased at the box-office—they are sold by the poster! To always sell the maximum number of tickets RITCHEY posters are absolutely necessary.

The exhibitor should therefore always have them, and he will only have them always, when he always demands them. In this matter he must take care of himself. God only takes care of drunken men and fools. The exhibitor is neither, and the surest way of demonstrating his sober wisdom is by DEMANDING RITCHEY POSTERS!

The How and Why of Reviews

MOTION PICTURE NEWS this week continues to present extracts from exhibitor letters on the subject of trade paper reviews. In entire frankness we wish to state at the outset that our only present purpose in the publication of these letters is to place before producers and the trade in general these forcible evidences of the exhibitor mind on the review question.

The fact that these letters are the outgrowth of the declaration of the Selznick organization that any trade paper reviewing its pictures would lose all advertising, and the subsequent action in the case of the News alone—this phase may now be allowed to pass into the background.

As far as we are concerned it will.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS is far too solicitous for its standing and dignity as a representative trade publication to go any further along such paths than is necessary to justify its position and clearly express its policy.

We have pledged our faith to our readers, and emphasized the pledge to the thousand exhibitors who have written us. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will maintain its review policy firm and unswerved; seeking no compromises, making no bargains.

So let us turn to the lessons taught by those exhibitor letters. Several outstanding impressions remain on our minds after reading the letters. At random, they are:

First, that at least eighty per cent of exhibitors consider competent reviews even more than a mere desirability, yes, a vital factor in the conduct of their business.

Second, that the exhibitor faces the review question in an intelligent logical manner, caring as little for "the reviewer who calls everything rotten" (one letter phrased it that way) as he does for the milk and water review which covers space, but says nothing.

Third, that the increase in producer-controlled theatres and the spread of the franchise plan, have made reviews of even greater importance than heretofore, for the value of the big first run as a booking guide has been proportionately decreased.

These are the prominent impressions driven home by the letters. Were it not stating the obvious conclusion that these facts point, we might add that the letters are a complete and effective answer to the type of producer and distributor that minimizes the exhibitor intelligence.

ONE additional reason for the necessity of providing real reviews is more directly applicable to the coming season.

Here we may be hazarding a prophecy, but it is our plain conviction that "open booking" in all the words imply will be an actuality next year.

True it is, that "open booking" was announced with a grand fanfare of trumpets last season; and true also, that the outcome was far removed from the promise.

But there are natural forces at work that will lead inevitably to a booking system based on the individual worth of the production. This season is the appointed time. And when the day dawns, what factor more vital to the success of both exhibitors and worth while productions than sincere, competent reviews?

WE cannot too strongly urge all whose success is based on a close contact and knowledge of the exhibitor mind to appropriate the time necessary for a real study of the exhibitor letters appearing in last week's issue and those on the following two pages.

In their treatment of the review question the letters also serve to shed light on many other phases of exhibitor thought and action. Scarcely a word in them can fail to be of value to the producer and the man employed by the producer.

The stiff competition that the coming year is certain to see will make equally stern demands on the man sitting at a New York desk and hiring its rewards to the man best fitted to diagnose and analyze exhibitor psychology.

And to the end that it is giving service as an inter-trade medium of communication, and that end alone, MOTION PICTURE NEWS will continue to present as many extracts from these letters as space conditions will permit.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.
Exhibitors Speak Plainly on Reviews

"THE REVIEWS AND THE ADS"

"We subscribe to your journal for two reasons, the most important of the two of course is the reviews of the various pictures, they help me greatly in many ways, it is impossible for me to see every picture I play before I play it, therefore I find your reviews very valuable, they help me to secure good clean pictures for our audience, and they give me many good pointers as to the best manner of advertising each subject."

"Our other reason for subscribing for the News is for the purpose of reading the advertising it carries. The producer may not know it but his advertisements carry many valuable hints and suggestions for the live exhibitor."

STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER

"I have always read your reviews and think they are as Fair if not better—than any other paper—and I want the reviews to continue—in spite of the fact that some producer has an idea that he would start something."

H. E. Sloan, Empress, Kearney, Neb.

ADMIRES THE "NEWS" STAND

"I admire your stand in this matter and only hope that you will not move an inch regardless of a temporary loss of advertising."

E. O'Keefe, Regent Theatre Company, Billings, Neb.

"WE MUST HAVE REVIEWS"

"If we cannot read what the critics think of the pictures we will certainly be getting a lot of bad pictures as we all know it is impossible to judge a picture by what the film salesman says."

C. W. Eckhardt, Manager Marlow, Helena, Mont.

"NOTHING BUT SERVICE"

"As both operator and manager I wish to state that the News has always been a great help indeed and have never found anything in it but service from beginning to end, and mighty fair at that."

Glen Carver, Manager, Empress Theatre, Hastings, Neb.

GIVES A SPECIFIC EXAMPLE

"We are very glad to state that we do read all of your reviews and all other reviews we have time to read from the four publications we are now receiving together with Harrison's Reports and we find same very helpful in booking and advertising our pictures."

"For instance just last night we ran 'The Mother of His Children' and the only reviews we had on this late picture was the review in your issue of April 17th and we will say that the review was correct."

"I AM PERFECTLY SATISFIED"

"Your service has been fair and impartial to all. In fact, at times it appears that you are partial more so to the producer than to the exhibitor. However, I am perfectly satisfied in the service rendered by Motion Picture News."

"To date I have not seen any adverse criticism by any exhibitor to the effect that Motion Picture News is not a competent judge of pictures."

F. W. Harrigan, Manager, Macdonald Theatre, Philipsburg, Mont.

USE REVIEWS AND AD AIDS

"Yes, we use your reviews for press notices and like them better than the producer press dope."

Fred Cosman, Electric Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

THANK YOU—BROTHER KEYES

"I have always found out that if you give every one concerned a square deal that you will come out at the top of the pile, and this, I believe Motion Picture News is doing."

Chas. R. Keyes, Wagon Mound, N. Mex.

SPEAKING FROM THE HEART

"Thank God there is one instrumentality in the whole world that is willing to give the exhibitor just the ghost of a show. It seems to us they are tied hand and foot on every occasion and in every way."

A. P. Sitton & Son, Amusa Theatre, Tularose, N. Mex.

"STAND BY YOUR GUNS"

"More power to your arm. Stay with that policy and you will find that all fair-minded exhibitors will stay with you. We look to your reviews for facts."

"MOTION PICTURE NEWS ALONE"

"The Motion Picture News is the only trade paper I use in the conduct of my four theatres and if I thought its main columns were controlled by the advertisers I would soon drop it."

Henry J. Rockefeller, Rockefeller Hugheson Enterprises, Asbury Park, N. J.

THE COMPLETE CIRCLE

"I would not think that a producer who had supposedly put his best efforts in making a picture and then feared to have the light of day turned on it would have a permanent place in the business. To my mind the industry needs producers that make good pictures and exhibitors that show them and both proud of the achievement."

Arthur J. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, N. J.

"KEEP UP THE GOOD WORK"

"We believe the Motion Picture News to be the best trade paper on the market and are always looking forward for the next issue. We believe you to be fair in your service and competent in your reviews, as they certainly give the exhibitor some line on how to advertise the picture. And it also gives him a general idea of pictures before he buys them. Keep up the good work."

W. L. Darrington, Star Theatre, Littleton, N. H.

BATTING 1000 PER CENT WITH HIM

"The reviews of pictures in your Motion Picture News have always been a great help to me in selecting features and never have I exhibited a picture which was favorably spoken of by your critics that did not please my audience, and, furthermore, whenever I have a picture booked that is well spoken of in your reviews I do not hesitate to advertise it as a first class and pleasing production, and I have never gone wrong in so doing.

NEVER BOOK WITHOUT THE "NEWS"

"As a 'small town exhibitor' I want to say, 'Shake' for the stand you and your paper have taken in the reviewing of pictures, whether it is acceptable to the producer, and if we had more of your type of men in the business we would have much easier sailing, for it is a bad proposition booking pictures now on press accounts, and the producers, at least some of them, are holding the 'big stick' over the exhibitor as well as the others of the business.

"Not all the exchanges, though, are of this type for we do business with several who are on the square, and always willing and glad to help us along.

"So far as your reviews go, we find the comments from others who have run the pictures and also your reviews helpful, and might say we have never booked a feature that we did not try to see what the News had to say, and we think the stand you have taken will be appreciated by all of us, the 'big fellows' and 'little fellows' alike."

DON'T WORRY—WELL KEEP THE FAITH

"An honest review of current pictures is of advantage equally to the producer and the exhibitor. Assuredly, despite the vapors of fool salesmen, no producing house thinks that all its output is 'super-special,' and in the long run an exhibitor will have a friendlier feeling with an exchange which does not sting him than for one which does. A review which is biased by the advertising pages is a betrayal of the trust which your subscribers have a right to place in you, and a continuation of such policy would soon reduce the News to the level of an amplified house organ."

"To me reviews are very important for several reasons. If I find favorable reports in the different trade papers on a picture I have booked I push it for all it is worth and if reviews are not so good I don't force it quite so strong. Reviews are the only fair way that an exhibitor gets a line on the picture he has booked. The press books boost the picture to the sky anyway. And many reviews amount to nothing."

Reichenbach Scores Again

YOU gotta hand it to him, boys! Harry Reichenbach has scored again—and right splash on the first pages of those hard-boiled eggs, the New York dailies.

Harry had barely returned to New York flushed with the triumphs of "The Virgin of Stamboul" from coast to coast when he turned his hand to the Numa picture, "The Return of Tarzan."

Nothing happened for a few days while Harry laid his plans. Then, on last Monday morning the storm broke. Practically all the New York papers told on the first pages with lengthy stories about the eccentric African explorer, "Mr. T. R. Zann," who had registered at the Hotel Bellescarie in a mysterious trunk, and then, the next morning, startled the hotel clerk with a request for 'steen pounds of raw meat.

Horrors! Investigation by the clerk, the manager, all the bell-hops, the house detective and nineteen others disclosed the fact that "Mr. T. R. Zann" had a live baby lion in his room. What could be done? But the lion wasn't registered for one thing. Another, while there were rules against dogs, cats, and even monkeys, nothing in the books said anything about lions.

Of course nothing remained but to notify the papers. Reluctantly this was done. So reluctantly! And now Harry's scrap book is filling up again, the New York papers have done their share to boost next week's showing of "The Return of Tarzan" at the Broadway Theater, and out of town clippings are appearing to show that the word is spreading.

First National Survey Continued Next Week

THE third installment of the First National survey of motion picture conditions throughout the country, which is being published exclusively in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, will appear in the issue of June 12th. Owing to the continuance of the paper shortage it was necessary to omit this interesting resume this week.

THE TRUTH ABOUT PRICE-DAMMERSING

"Replying to your letter of the 26th, beg to state that I value reviews for the purpose of protection in advance bookings with no idea in mind regarding price as a poor picture I would not show free of cost."

Fox's New York Studio Formally Opened
Prominent Speakers Address Crowds During Ceremonies at New Building

GALA scenes and impressive ceremonies marked the formal opening on Monday, May 24, of the new William Fox motion picture studio and administration building on West 55th street, New York. Most prominent in the official life of two States joined in making the affair one of the most successful of its kind ever undertaken. Among the speakers, in addition to Mr. Fox, were Governor Edward I. Edwards of New Jersey; Supreme Court Justice Charles L. Guy, and the Rev. Joseph Silverman, of the Temple Emanu-El on Fifth avenue.

Long before the dedicatory exercises started, long lines of invited guests were shown through the mammoth picture producing building. The doors of the new structure were thrown open shortly after 12:30 to those invited, and the guests, who numbered several thousands, began to arrive. After visiting the many executive offices on the main floor the guests were directed to the immense studio on the top floor, where they were able to get an intimate glimpse of the methods used in making screen productions. Several companies were working. To add to the brilliancy of the affair, a full uniformed band played selections on the studio floor, keeping the crowd in good spirits until the opening exercises started.

Governor Edwards touched briefly upon the career of Mr. Fox and extended his sincere wishes for continued success and prosperity. He pointed to the motion picture industry as "the big educational feature of the present day," and also to the work done by Mr. Fox during the war as something worthy of the highest praise.

Justice Charles L. Guy, introduced as an "ardent movie fan," touched upon the rise of the motion picture industry, which he said had come to be an educational institution, the same as the daily newspaper—in fact, a "larger press."

Rabbi Silverman paid a high tribute to the career of William Fox and dwelt upon the relationship between the church and the theatre.

Mr. Fox, the last speaker of the day, was formally presented with a set of engraved resolutions of congratulation from his employees. Chairman Rogers made the presentation speech.

In responding, Mr. Fox told of the conditions surrounding the motion picture eighteen years ago, when he first entered the business as a showman.

At preliminary exercises in the morning a large American flag was unfurled atop the new building, the employees of the various departments of Fox Film Corporation who were in the service during the war taking part. The colors were raised to bugle call sounded by Bugler Billy Allen of the First New York Field Artillery.

Rear Admiral J. H. Gleason, in command of the Third Naval District, sent his regrets; he was in Washington for the meeting of the Selection Board. He was represented by his aide, Lieutenant Commander Elmer de Loss Langworthy. Other officers of the Navy present were: Captain O. P. Jackson, Captain F. Symington, Captain Norris, Captain Charles A. Adams, Commander W. S. Anderson, Lieutenant Commander Van de Leer, Lieutenant Norris, Lieutenant Westod and Lieutenant McClure.

General Robert Lee Bullard, of Governor's Island, Commanding the Department of the East, was represented by his Chief of Staff, Colonel William Weigel, U. S. A. Colonel Booth and Lieutenant H. W. Miller of the Marine Corps also were present.
Exhibitor Factions Are Still at Odds, Still Plead for Union

Opposing Bodies Issue Statements; State Leagues Announce Their Plans

The developments of the past week, centering around the forthcoming exhibitor conventions at Cleveland on June 8, 9, 10 and 11, consist, in the main, of the issuing of statements by exhibitors associated with the two principal rival factions. An analysis of the mass of statements that still pour in from individuals and organizations located in various sections of the country leads to the following brief resume of the situation: The Independent Motion-Picture Exhibitors of America, of which Frank Rembusch is chairman, have not modified their plans to meet at the Hotel Cleveland on the dates indicated above. The Motion-Picture Owners of America, of which Sydney S. Cohen is temporary chairman, have made no change in their program to meet on the same dates at the Hotel Winton. Both these factions, it would seem from their pronouncements during the past week, are still at odds.

Alfred S. Black, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, announces that his organization will convene with the other exhibitors at the Hotel Cleveland June 8 to 11, instead of meeting later in the month in Chicago as originally planned. A delegation of the Illinois Exhibitors’ Alliance, it is announced, will attend the Hotel Winton convention on the appointed dates. Various state exhibitors’ associations have issued calls for the convening in the near future of the state bodies.

Out of the array of conflicting statements, sweeping in from all sides, two distinct planks for the oblation of all quarrels between the principal factions and the holding of a single united convention on June 8 to 11 are heard. One comes from William Brandt, president of the Theatre Owners’ Chamber of Commerce of New York; the other call for the union of all rival forces is embodied in a telegram to Frank Rembusch from President Maurice Chyonsky and Sam Atkinson of the Allied Amusement Association.

The pertinent paragraphs of the communications received from the rival organizations and from individual exhibitors and local associations interested in the Cleveland “get-together” are submitted as follows:

What Cohen Forces Say

“The most interesting development in the preparation for the great national exhibitors’ convention at the Hotel Winton, Cleveland, June 8th to 11th, is the action taken by the Cleveland Convention Committee in asking the temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Sydney S. Cohen, to appoint a committee of exhibitors representing every film shipping zone to take charge of the arrangements for the convention and the matter of registration.

“The request to Chairman Cohen came about in this way: The Cleveland committee, consisting of Henry H. Lustig, chairman; W. J. Shinn, treasurer, and Samuel Bullock, secretary, was griefed to read that exception had been taken by the promoter of the second ‘convention’ to the committee’s treatment of the subcommittee of the Chicago conference consisting of Mr. Kress of Ohio, Mr. Farley of Alabama and Mr. M. Van Prang of Kansas. It is a matter of history that these three gentlemen visited Cleveland and, in the language of the Cleveland arrangement committee, expressed absolute satisfaction with the arrangements in hand and plans outlined. Not only Mr. Van Prang but his associates on the subcommittee have duly and emphatically registered their appreciation of the courteous treatment they received at the hands of the Cleveland arrangement committee.

“In connection with this matter the Cleveland convention committee has issued a statement which completely covers the ground and which, no doubt, will be read with interest by the exhibitors who are interested in the coming convention at the Hotel Winton.”

Here is the statement of the committee as submitted by Mr. Cohen:

“Cleveland regrets the necessity for issuing this statement inasmuch as we were proceeding with convention arrangements with only one thought in mind—harmony, expressed in the trade papers, issue of May 22nd.

“Since then we regret to announce that we have been informed that Mr. F. J. Rembusch has engaged the Cleveland Hotel Assembly Hall and reserved a block of rooms for a convention of motion picture exhibitors.

“This information is direct from the hotel management. Whatever Mr. Rembusch’s object may be in thus ignoring our committee will be hard for Mr. Rembusch to explain, in view of his insistent demand for harmony and ‘no politics’ at the Patterson meeting in Chicago, as reported by Mr. Bullock.

“We sent a representative to that meeting, Mr. Sam Bullock, our executive secretary, with a message to deliver.

“We have evidence that he delivered that message on the floor on Tuesday, May 27th, by consent of Mr. Patterson, to whom it was addressed. Part of that message follows: ‘May we be pardoned for inquiring if it is your intention to initiate a new national exhibitor organization or merely to get an expression of sentiment from the assembled exhibitors and prepare to crystallize that sentiment into action at a convention later? If that is your intention we are with you heart and soul. If, however, some over-secret exhibitors, smarting under present and prospective abuses, should prematurely undertake to start a national organization with such little preparation, there could be one only result, failure, with producer influence in control. It has always been so in the past and our tentative national organization will have nothing to do with such a proposition.”

“Mr. Bullock gave further details and invited all present to come to Cleveland and help form a national theatre owner organization. A statement was made that an investigating committee be appointed on producers’ attitude; said committee to report their findings to the Cleveland Convention June 8-11. The meeting adjourned without any further authority being conferred upon anyone.”

In commenting on the action of the Cleveland arrangement committee, Temporary Chairman Cohen said that he would gladly comply with their request for the appointment of a committee on arrangements and registration. The names and addresses, organizations and offices of the appointees are as follows:

“The committee will convene at the Hotel Winton on June 7th for its first important business meeting. The temporary officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America desire to make it very plain to the entire industry, and particularly the producers and importers, that they have no connection with or interest in an exposition which for some reason best known to the promoters of the enterprise has been advertised for the same days as the convention at the Hotel Winton. They say that the convention at the Hotel Winton will be a business convention pure and simple, and that if this exhibition wish to do justice to only the most urgent problems now confronting them, they will have no time left and certainly no inclination to attend any so-called exposition.

"The following is the text of the report made to Chairman Rensbach of the Chicago Conference called by W. C. Patterson on April 26 and April 27, through executive preference. What I want to see come out of the Cleveland meeting and I am voicing the wish of the great majority of independent exhibitors who were in Chicago on April 26 and April 27—is a working body of theatre owners solidly pledged to combat, through co-operation and collective action, the producer-exhibitor menace as the greatest danger confronting us as exhibitors, and prepared, in every way, to function quickly and efficiently on all other national conditions affecting its members.

"I shall bend my every energy in Cleveland to keep any semblance of politics or personal ambition from any source out of the discussions, and work as an individual exhibitor, without office or desire for office, but as one of the rank and file of independents who want a national source through which to operate in defense of our respective theatre interests."

Patterson States Views

Rumors which have reached W. C. Patterson, manager of the Grand Seminole Criterion theatre at Atlanta, to the effect that the plan which he sought to consummate at his Chicago mass meeting for a concerted national opposition by independent exhibitors against producer operation of theatres had fallen of its own weight, and that the postponement of definite action until the assembly at Cleveland on June 8 was a bit of diplomatic strategy to cover failure, are ridiculed by him in an outline of the platform he will recommend as the basis on which independent theatre owners can be merged into a national organization.

"An official evidence of sincerity and regard for the opinions of exhibitor absentees," he declared, "was manifest in the willingness of the theatre owners present in Chicago to accept the assurances of various league executives and promoters of the Cleveland meeting that the exhibitor representation there would be more adequate to the purpose, apparently have been perverted to serve ulterior motives from some quarter or other. We were asked, in Chicago, to form the convention on a permanent organization, with a Committee of Seventeen which would gather facts in New York, and reconvene the new national unit, with its committee report, in Cleveland, so that out of the various exhibitor alliances which will attend there can be formed a substance of a country-wide organization to meet national issues which concern the welfare of independent exhibitors. It was further proposed in Chicago, both by the theatre owners who responded to my call for the meeting, and by representatives of the state leagues which will meet in Cleveland, that the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, with the membership pledged at the Hotel Congress, would constitute an excellent beginning for a new national league.

"I do not know who sponsored the rumors, but, in comparison to facts, they are ridiculous. We are going into Cleveland as an organization, with our accustomed determination to get somewhere as a national exhibitor council. We have no politics to play. There is no individual supporting the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America who has any personal ambitions to gratify. There is no one seeking fame, glory, 1000, or power through executive preference. What I want to see come out of the Cleveland meeting and I am voicing the wish of the great majority of independent exhibitors who were in Chicago on April 26 and April 27—is a working body of theatre owners solidly pledged to combat, through co-operation and collective action, the producer-exhibitor menace as the greatest danger confronting us as exhibitors, and prepared, in every way, to function quickly and efficiently on all other national conditions affecting its members.

"I shall bend my every energy in Cleveland to keep any semblance of politics or personal ambition from any source out of the discussions, and work as an individual exhibitor, without office or desire for office, but as one of the rank and file of independents who want a national source through which to operate in defense of our respective theatre interests."

A. S. Black to Join Forces

"To the exhibitors of the United States:

After careful consideration we believe that the best interests of the exhibitors of the United States in view of the recent Chicago meeting and the subsequent happenings, demand that exhibitors from all over the country meet in Cleveland. Disregarding the personal interests of any one set of men it is better to have a threshing out of many problems at one city and at one time than with divided attendance at different places.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors of America stands for a fair deal to each and every exhibitor of the United States. We are therefore calling our convention to meet at the Cleveland Hotel, Cleveland, Ohio, on June 8, 9 and 10.

"ALFRED BLACK."

Forty From Illinois

President Joseph Hopp, of the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, will head a delegation of forty theatre owners, who will attend the Cleveland convention called by Sidney S. Cohn of New York. Their headquarters in Cleveland will be at the Hotel Winton.

A marked revival of interest in the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance was shown at the annual meeting of the association held on May 13. Mr. Hopp was selected president, John Frndt, vice-president; William E. Burford, financial secretary; Fred W. Hartmann, recording and corresponding secretary, and Henry Van Meeran, treasurer. The members of the executive committee represent thirty-seven theatres.

Brandt Suggests Plan

The following letter has been sent to Sig Samuels, of the Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., secretary of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors League, Cleveland, Ohio, secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, by William Brandt, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York:

"Dear Sir:

"In view of the fact that the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are about to hold two separate and distinct conventions in Cleveland at the same time; both conventions being called for the same purpose; and in view of the fact that the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America represented by a committee of seventeen, appointed at Chicago, are to hold a preliminary meeting in New York on June 3 and 4, may I suggest that in the best interests of harmony and so that the Cleveland convention can get down to real business by eliminating politics and petty quarrels; that a committee of an equal number representing the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America meet the former committee on June 3 and 4 to arrange to hold a joint convention in Cleveland instead of two separate and independent conventions."

Another Plea for Unity

President Maurice Choyanski and Sam Atkinson, of the Allied Amusement Association, who are to head a delegation of one hundred Chicago exhibitors to Cleveland, are prepared to fight for unity and one convention. They have sent the following wire to Frank Rembausch:

"Am strongly opposed to two conventions—in Cleveland. Let us fall in line and thresh out our differences, if any, on the floor. This was our understanding in Chicago, and that we attend the Cleveland convention. We never arranged to hold separate one and will not be a party to any division."

Jersey "Exhibs" to Meet

The motion picture exhibitors of New Jersey are summoned by their temporary chairman, John T. Collins, to attend an exhibitor's convention to be held in Newark, N. J., on June 2. The object will be "the perfection of an organization which will be representative of the great interest of the motion picture theatre owners of New Jersey." The exhibitors are also urged to attend to combat the producer-exhibitor evil, Exhibitor Interest Thoroughly Aroused

By J. D. Williams

On to Cleveland!

It is in every issue of the trade journals. Exhibitors met on a recent Southern trip were saying it. Producers and distributors are echoing it. Visiting theatre owners, in New York from many territories, talk enthusiastically about the next big chance to mold a national league of exhibitors, representative of every section, free from petty politics, nation-wide in scope and determined in its course of defence for individual interests.

Similar attempts in the past made it a big order to fill, and a great undertaking for the exhibitors whose mutual initiative and business acumen were to give it an appealing force. It is a purpose beset with dangers and difficulties, surrounded by countless pitfalls, but with possibilities of such magnitude if it succeeds that it is worthy of every ounce of support, encouragement and counsel that can come to it from every quarter.

It is doubtful if any group of independent exhibitors, or any individual theatre owners, passively or intensively interested in the outcome of Cleveland, realize so keenly what tests of mutual confidence, of personal integrity, of individual loyalty and steadfast resistance to insidious, destructive influences, are to follow and attack the ambitions of the national league to be solidified at Cleveland as the exhibitors who, three years ago, joined hands in a national cooperative and defensive structure which was, and is, fundamentally identical to the composite unit so far advocated. Their theatre interests were threatened then with dangers equally as great as the independent exhibitor menaces upon which the Cleveland assembly will unite and act.

So they got together and organized First National Exhibitors' Circuit, the formation of which was for a purpose similar in many respects to that which exists today.

First, the exhibitors who formed First National merged their respective desires for relief from oppressive conditions, began with a definite, well-established plan. They confined themselves to the big, important phases of the menacing conditions they confronted, and they applied themselves strictly to determining the best and quickest means for eliminating them.

When it became known that a number of exhibitors had formed a cooperative organization, the majority opinion over the situation as yet was one of scoffing and ridicule. Professional competitors lost no opportunity to relate, every time they encountered a member alone, stories of alleged questionable methods and ulterior motives harbored by one or more of the other members.

Similar experiences will befall the exhibitors selected to administer the affairs of a national league. The solution, for the future, as in the past, is the same. Pay no attention whatever to gossip, rumor or vague insinuations affecting the loyalty, integrity and sincerity of any league official. Stick together and resent such tactics as unpleasantly as you would attack them if they affected an intimate personal friend.

Care, discretion and mature consideration should precede the selection of executives for a national league. To them is entrusted the problem of leadership, direction and progress. Once a majority vote has delegated authority to this kind, the only practical and safe policy is for every member to cast his allegiance unhesitatingly behind the elected officials, without regard to previous inclinations.

Even with this unanimous aid which First National possesses, the path of that national exhibitor body, as will prove to be the case with a national league, has been neither smooth nor easy. It is fraught with natural and hard to assume, in the instance of a national exhibitor league, as in other cases, that some one of these myriad links in the national chain may prove vulnerable and that destructive forces harboring ulterior motives may break through and strive to create disturbance. Then comes the real test of cooperative strength. If the national membership remains steadfast, these occasional attacks will become helpful, welding the organization into a more compact and determined unit.

A national exhibitor organization, so much as its objectives may be, so long as it is a cooperative body formed for mutual aid, protection and defense, must have the unqualified loyalty and unwavering allegiance of its entire membership, and differences in personal opinion and viewpoint on questions before it never should affect this support.

On to Cleveland! With individual exhibitor determination to hurdle all petty differences, to allow nothing to halt action on the big, basic dangers which can overcome only through organization, to grant office to the most capable, and then be loyal to them as the choice of the majority; thus every independent exhibitor will create, for himself and his fellows, an asset beyond value.

Associated Will Meet in Cleveland

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS, INC., will be represented in Cleveland during convention week by an almost 100 per cent representation of its exhibitor members—a group of independent theatre men in which is mirrored the spirit of the Independent Exhibitors of America.

That Associated intends to fight tooth and nail with and for independent exhibitors who are battling against the forces who they claim seek to deprive the theatre man is indicated in the fact that Associated will hold not only a meeting of the Board of Directors, but also will have convened other members and officers from almost every point in the United States.

Virtually every franchise holder in Associated already has given assurance of attendance and all, also, individually and collectively, have pledged themselves to the platform of a fight to a finish against the producer-exhibitor. Some of those who intend to be on hand are Harry Crandall, Dennis Harris, Samuel Harding, Harold B. Franklin, H. H. Wellenbrink, Hugo Lambach, Harry M. Lohrner, James Q. Clemmer, J. Libson and many others.

Advices received in New York from F. C. Quimby, general manager of Associated, who recently arrived in Los Angeles from New York, and who expects also to attend the convention, are to the effect that never before in the history of the industry have exhibitors been so aroused and determined as are at present. Mr. Quimby had the opportunity of feeling out the sentiment of showmen in many cities and, according to his analysis, showmen big and small have come to a full realization of what they are up against.

Independent exhibitors seem to realize fully that definite constructive action must be taken at once. Mr. Quimby advises, adding that from what he had been able to learn it seemed as if every exhibitor who possibly could make the trip to Cleveland would be on hand during the convention.

The attitude of independent exhibitors varies slightly in territories where there are purely local conditions to be considered, Mr. Quimby said, but on the vital and important issues they are standing solidly together.

The majority of the independents are said to believe that the convention may result in the formation of two national bodies—one organization composed of exhibitors who are not purely independent, and which will take up questions concerning all exhibitors, regardless of any producer-affiliations; the other association composed entirely of independents, its single purpose being to combat the efforts of producers to gobble theatres.

The latter will be the stronger organization, it is believed. This is indicated by the earnestness of spirit and the zeal of those actively engaged in missionary work. The depth of spirit reflected at the Chicago meeting in April is only a slight sign of the intensity of feeling which since has been aroused, it appears, and the cry throughout the ranks of the independents today is "On to Cleveland!"
Denver Club Planning Big Movie Exposition

Denver's Annual Moving Picture Exposition, Convention and Grand Ball, which had been set for June 18 and 19, has been postponed two weeks more for preparation and will be held on Thursday and Friday, July 1 and 2, under the auspices of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club.

Never before in the history of Denver was there such a big, joyous time planned for the moving picture industry and its "fans." Big movie stars are said to be coming to Denver for this occasion and the distributing companies in New York are lending their assistance to the branch managers in every way possible.

All the exchanges, supply houses and producing companies have special exhibits and one of the most interesting exhibits will be a regular studio set complete, where scenes will be taken. There will be a model theatre, equipped up to the minute and showing pictures with the best equipment. Every article used in and around a motion picture theatre will be on exhibition.

The Governor of Colorado, the Mayor of Denver and the big City and State officials are co-operating with the Rocky Mountain Screen Club to make this event a gala occasion for Denver.

Famous Players' Experts Start for Bombay

Carrying plans for the erection of a studio and the establishment of an exchange system throughout the Far East, Frank Meyer, assistant secretary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Tarkington Baker, sailed Tuesday on the City of Lahore for Bombay as the first step in the plans which Adolph Zukor has made for the production of Paramount Pictures in India.

The departure of Mr. Meyer and Mr. Baker follows the announcement recently made by Mr. Zukor of the formation of the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Company, Ltd., a $3,000,000 corporation organized by the American company acting in conjunction with prominent London and Indian bankers.

As soon as they arrive in Bombay, Mr. Meyer and Mr. Baker will begin at once the erection of a large studio equipped with all the most up-to-date appliances. American methods will be employed throughout.

Rothapfel in Charge of Capitol Presentations

Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol theatre, announces the appointment of S. L. Rothapfel, who will assume charge of the future presentations at the Capitol.

With the advent of Mr. Rothapfel as Managing Director Bowes announces the inauguration of a summer policy. The theatre will be closed after next Tuesday's performance and will not reopen until Friday night following, when the type of program that Mr. Rothapfel has devised for motion picture presentation will be ushered in. During the two days of intermission there will be extensive physical embellishment of the interior of the theatre, with particular reference to the stage, and rehearsals for the inaugural program will be actively carried on.

There will also be a radical reduction in prices with the opening of the Capitol theatre, Friday, June 4th, under the summer policy. The top price will be $1 for the choicest seats, with the scale down to 40 cents. Matinee prices will be on an even more popular scale—30 and 30 cents.

The Capitol theatre was opened on October 24th, 1919, an opening which created a stir in amusement circles. Every newspaper in the United States commented on the size and splendor of this institution, which has been continuously successful since its inception. The recent innovation of operatic performance in conjunction with motion pictures has also been the theme for much comment.

Legal Suit May Follow Alleged Deceptive Ads

What is alleged to be a case of deceptive advertising in the Los Angeles press may result in a legal suit, according to a report of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Display advertisements of the Alhambra theatre, is the report, announced "Gloria Swanson, Cecil B. DeMille's famous star, in 'You Can't Believe Everything.'"

Mr. DeMille claims that the theatre obtained an old release featuring Gloria Swanson and advertised her as a DeMille star. The producer ran signed advertisements stating these facts in the Los Angeles press and has threatened legal action against the theatre.

Del Ruth Edits Picture en Route to New York

Having just finished the production of his long-heralded farce Hampton Del Ruth, supervisor of Fox Sunshine Comedies, reached New York from Los Angeles in time for the Fox Convention. The feature was shown to Fox managers and executives at a special performance in the Academy of Music.

Mr. Del Ruth arranged for two drawing rooms on the train, fully equipping them with re-winding and splicing machines to enable him with his assistants and cutters to put the finishing touches on the big special so that it could be shown in completed perfection.

Lederman of Universal Resigns His Post

After having been connected with the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. for ten years, D. B. Lederman, assistant to Mr. Laemmle, has resigned. Mr. Lederman has become connected with a prominent film organization and will take up his new duties in the very near future. In point of service, Mr. Lederman was the oldest Universal employee at the time of his resignation.

Box Office Reports and Advance Releases will be found in this issue.

Winfield Sheehan Returns from Abroad

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, has returned from his European trip, and is back at his desk in the new William Fox Building on West 55th street. He arrived last week on the White Star liner “Adriatic,” which brought many persons prominent in the theatrical world.

As a result of his trip, which covered branch offices of Fox Film Corporation in England, France, Germany, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, Italy and Belgium and also brought him in close touch with Spain and Algiers, Mr. Sheehan brought back with him most enthusiastic reports of Fox status abroad. During his visits to the countries named, he made a systematic study of conditions surrounding the motion picture trade generally, and the outlook in particular of Fox films for the forthcoming season.

During Mr. Sheehan’s stay in London the new offices of Fox Film Corporation, at 13 Berners street, were officially opened with ceremonies at which Justin Huntly McCarthy, author of the world-famous story, If I Were King, presided. Many notable figures were present at a luncheon in the directors’ room of the Fox Building which, by the way, served during the war as headquarters of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces in London.

General Manager Sheehan opened in England and France new plants for the production of Fox film in those countries.

These two branch plants will enable the European offices of this firm to supply prints on a far bigger scale than hitherto. Also they will supply for America Fox films made in France with French companies.

Fox Film Corporation now maintains a branch office in almost every lending city in the world, with distributing facilities ample to meet any pressure for years to come.

No announcement is yet forthcoming from the Fox office of next season’s plans, or the names of new stars or plays which may have arrived with General Manager Sheehan. It is expected, however, that such an announcement will soon be issued.

Federated Exchanges Meet to Form Permanent Plans

Room 432 at the Hotel Astor was a busy place this week with the meeting of members of the Federated Film Exchanges of America to form a permanent organization and decide on definite production plans. The sessions were still on as THE NEWS went to press and no statement will be issued until later in the week.

Among those present at the gathering are: J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players, Chicago; D. Chatkin, Marion Kohn, San Francisco; J. J. Allen, Toronto; Mr. Kyler, Supreme photoplays, Denver; Sam Werner, United Film Service, St. Louis; Al Kahn, Crescent Film Co., Kansas City; Ralph Wettstein, Midwest Distributing Co., Milwaukee; F. W. Thayer, Merit Film Corporation, Minneapolis; J. E. Pearce, Pearce Films, New Orleans; H. Charnas, Standard Film Service Co., Cleveland; Harry Lande, Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh; Sam Grand, Federal Feature Film Corp., Boston; Ben Amsterdam, Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia; A. G. Whyte, Empire State Film Corp., New York, and Fitzpatrick and McElroy of Chicago.

New York Governor Signs Deposit Bill

A WIRE recently received at the offices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League of the State of New York states that Governor Smith has signed the Cotillo bill and the Kelly bill, both of which passed the legislature during the last session.

The Cotillo bill provides that all producing companies exacting deposits or similar advances for films which must be paid to the exhibitor. The second bill allows children to attend the theatre provided a matron is in attendance.

Lou Baum Will Manage Northwest Division

Lou Baum, manager of the Universal branch exchange in Cincinnati, has been appointed division manager of Chicago and the entire northwest division for Universal; it is announced by H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for the film company. This is the most important change in the sales force for Universal in many months.

Baum’s new territory is the most important division in the United States, and includes the combined territories of the following Universal branch exchanges: Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, St. Louis and Omaha. His headquarters will be Chicago.

Baum’s promotion, says Berman, is a result of his efficient management of the Cincinnati exchange, where he has been in charge for the last eighteen months. In that brief time he built up the exchange from a money-losing proposition to a highly profitable subsidiary.

Baum made an enviable record as a film salesman before Universal placed him in a managerial position. Prior to working as a salesman for Universal, he sold films for Fox, Selznick and other film concerns.

Theatre License Fees Are Raised in Canada

The moving picture interests of Ontario were advised officially on May 20 of the passing of an Order-in-Council providing for the raising of the annual theatre license fees and doubling of the annual fees of moving picture exchanges. The order also provides for a fee for the censorship of moving pictures that is exactly double the rate in effect last year. According to the announcement of Hon. Peter Smith, the new Provincial Treasurer, the new scale is scheduled to take into effect with the opening of the fiscal year in June.

The theatre license fee changes are, briefly, as follows: for theatres in cities of 10,000 or more, the new tax is to be 35 cents per seat per year in place of 25 cents. In towns having a population of from 5,000 to 10,000, the theatre license now costs 25 cents in place of 20 cents. Municipalities of between 3,500 and 5,000, the increase is to place the flat rate of $75 per annum for the theatre. Theatres in municipalities of between 1,500 and 3,000 will be charged 15 cents per seat instead of the old rate of $50 for the whole theatre. Theatres located in municipalities having less than 1,500 people will pay 10 cents per seat per year.

Tax on exchanges has also been largely increased while operators must pay a fee of $75 to receive their examinations.

Edward J. Shalvey Dies Suddenly in New York

Edward D. Shalvey, president of the V. B. K. Film Corporation, producers of Paramount-Drew comedies, died suddenly on May 19th in New York City. In addition to his executive position with the V. B. G. Welch, who is negotiating the deal. The building will cost $1,500,000 and will be complete by May, 1921.

Sam Atkinson and T. H. Butler, to whom credit is due for finally getting matters straightened out, are now hopeful that the City Council will allow the exchanges to remain in their present quarters until the new building is finished by extending the time of enforcement of the drastic fire ordinance.

Standardized Containers at Cleveland Exhibits

Specifications are being prepared for a standard container in which to ship motion picture films. This announcement was made by W. S. Topping, of the Bureau of Explosives, Interstate Commerce Commission, at a meeting of the executive board of the transportation committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Several cases were under the new specifications will be ready for exhibition at the annual meeting of the National Association in Cleveland, June 8.

For the emergency transportation of films it was decided to have prepared a box which will meet the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the railroad authorities and which can be checked as baggage.

Screen Aids Wage Fight of Postal Employees

The screen has come to the aid of the postal employees in their fight for higher wages. In connection with the campaign for this purpose, the International Film Service Co. announces that some remarkable motion pictures have just been made showing the progress of the letter or parcel post package from the time it leaves the hands of the sender until it is delivered to the addressee. The pictures appear in the International News No. 28, which is released through Universal.

Mr. F. W. Thayer of the Merit Film Corporation of Minneapolis, Minn., has secured from the Canyon Pictures Corporation the rights for Minnesota, North and South Dakota for the two-reel western pictures, featuring Franklyn Farnum.

Griffith Buys Back Film from First National

D. W. Griffith has purchased from the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit his production of "The Mother," released at the Grand Intersection, scheduled to have been the third Griffith first National release, and formerly called "Black Beach." The price involved is said to be $100,000.

Under the contract by which Mr. Griffith was to make three productions for First National, "The Gambist Girl," as well as the two preceding pictures, "The Greatest Question," and "The Idol Dancer," were bought from Mr. Griffith before any of the pictures had been started. When it was first purchased by First National is said to have rejected all offers, until Mr. Griffith told of his plans to take more scenes and enlarge the film to a super-feature, an elaboration that will require several months.

According to announcement from the Griffith offices in the Langacre Building, "The Grand Intersection," will be shown at a prominent New York house in September, and will be presented with the usual Griffith care and atmospheric surroundings, with special music and other features.

The Griffith production of "Way Down East" also will be presented the same time, and there is another Griffith repertoire season in New York, with a number of surprises in store.

Pantages Circuit to Run Features with Shows

The Pantages Circuit of theatres, numbering more than thirty in the principal cities west of Chicago, is to adopt a new policy shortly of showing a feature film production in connection with the usual vaudeville program. The first theatre to try the new plan are those at Spokane and Tacoma. In two weeks this policy will be inaugurated at the Salt Lake theatre, and a little later at San Francisco. The new Pantages theatre at Los Angeles, which will be opened to the public on June 14, will adopt this policy, and the opening bill will consist of the Vitaphone special production made under the direction of David Smith, "The Courage of Marge O’Doone."

Post Office Urges Care in Addressing Films

The results of an investigation instituted by the Post Office to ascertain the cause of delays of insured and C. O. D. parcels containing films indicate that confusion is frequently caused by the use of containers from which address labels covering previous shipments have not been removed or upon which these old addresses have not been completely covered.

The postal officials urge that the greatest care be taken that the name and address of both sender and addressee are clearly written and all former labels be completely covered or obliterated.

This is Going to Be the Biggest Convention and Exposition Ever Held in the History of the Industry
An Acquisition

To the Staff of Motion Picture News and the Service of Exhibitors

MOTION PICTURE NEWS announces the engagement of Charles D. Isaacson as its Music Editor. He will conduct a weekly department, which will be supplemented by the continuation of Mr. Winkler’s music cue sheets. Mr. Isaacson has been termed “the democrat of aristocratic music.” A musician, and a member of a famous musical family, for many years he has been pioneering his way in the development of a larger interest in good music. While his main aim has been the creation of a larger music public, which would raise American art and art-appreciation, the importance of his work to the readers of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS must be considered primarily from a business point of view.

Mr. Isaacson, during the course of his propaganda, has, more successfully than any other man, sounded the appeal which has aroused the crowds to come to concerts and opera and all other musical enterprises. It is not an exaggeration to say that a large part of the present frenzy for symphonic concerts and operatic performances, must be credited to this man.

In New York City he has been conducting the famous Globe Concerts. Although run under the auspices of the New York Globe, they are famous around the world. These Globe Concerts, now numbering 1050, have brought over 2,000,000 people, who never before heard or paid any attention to good music, to attend and grow intensely enthusiastic over the highest classical musical offerings.

These are the people who have responded to the musical programs of the Capitol, Rivoli, Rialto and Strand Theatres—who made not only possible, but highly successful the season of opera comique of the Society of American Singers; who have forced the extension of the New York musical season three months longer this present year; who made it necessary to have another opera house, etc.

The Globe Concerts are the biggest factor in American musical development. When the 1000th concert was given recently at the Metropolitan Opera House, 100,000 persons demanded admission. On that night, the veteran music propagandist, John C. Freund, Editor of Musical America, said, in presenting a cup to Mr. Isaacson, that his work was unprecedented in the history of the world. Otto H. Kahn, America’s leading musical patron, said that Isaacson’s work was more significant than the opera house.

Now the NEWS feels that it wants the best man in the country to tell its readers how to utilize the vastly growing musical interest; and Isaacson is the man to do it. He is an interesting writer, his contributions are highly paid for by such publications as Collier’s, Hearst’s, Pictorial Review, Theatre, Physical Culture, etc., etc. Thus his name is known in practically every community.

Under the scheme which will be evolved during the course of his contributing, it will be made possible for the individual exhibitor to capitalize Mr. Isaacson’s local reputation.

We have read several of the opening articles in the series and can promise not only interesting reading, but mighty profitable advice. Before the series is far advanced, the reader will understand the philosophy and practice of music-theatricals, and will realize why it is that music is becoming such an important factor in motion-picturdom.

Charles D. Isaacson is not unknown as a motion picture man. He was engaged by Goldwyn to develop its promotion, but resigned a lucrative job to devote himself entirely to his literary and musical propaganda. He is author of several motion pictures, the first “A Good Woman,” directed by Frank Reicher; the second, “Democracy,” in collaboration with Dr. Frank Crane, and the third on “Spiritualism.” He is the author of “Face to Face with Great Musicians,” a book now in its fifth edition, and on the list recommended by Boards of Education; the author of a novel, “The Music of David Minden,” and countless short stories on musical subjects. He is the creator of the scientific use of music in hospitals, and is a visiting authority at Central Islip State Asylum; Sing Sing Prison; and is Honorary Member of the faculty of De Witt Clinton High School and several public schools. He is the inventor of the Story Music Roll, which in full page advertisements in the Saturday Evening Post, was recently indicated as being the most important development of the player piano music roll; as great in its improvement over the old style player piano roll as the new phonograph record is over the old.

Silver Horde Exploitation in New York Brings Great Results

Recent Campaign Proves Even Metropolis Not Too Large to Be Stirred

"Old Lady 31" Presents Opportunities for Education

Great Idea for Advertising "Down on the Farm"

THE SILVER HORDE" exploitation campaign, conducted in connection with the showing of the Rex Beach drama at the Capitol theatre, the week of May 9th, and followed up for two additional weeks, when the picture was transferred to the Broadway theatre, is another indication of what may be done in the way of publicising a picture in New York. Such campaigns are proof positive that thorough exploitation is feasible in the largest cities, as well as small towns, and that it is not necessary to spend a small fortune in order to make an impression.

One of the best of the stunts pulled was a tie-up with the United Cigars Stores, whereby 2,000 window stickers (12 x 12) were placed both inside and outside of every United Cigar store in the city. The stickers carried a large portrait of Rex Beach, author of "The Silver Horde," who expressed satisfaction with the Ricoro cigar. The advertising of these stickers, displayed the latter part of the week preceding the showing might be estimated in thousands of dollars.

Another worthwhile feature of the campaign put through at a nominal cost, was the placing of "Silver Horde" stickers on taxicabs, starting May 1st. A week later a count was taken over a space of two miles on Broadway and Fifth Avenue and the estimate showed that one out of every six carried the announcement of the showing of "The Silver Horde" at the Capitol.

In the matter of window displays it is doubtful if any production presented in New York has done as well. An illuminated mechanical device, showing animated reproductions of the picture, was placed in stores, not only in Greater New York, but in outlying towns, such as Mount Vernon and New Rochelle.

A special window display that attracted thousands of people was placed in A. C. Weaver's store on 66th street, just off Broadway. From 3 to 5 o'clock every afternoon from 7 to 8 in the evening an artist painted pictures in the window in full view of the throngs passing on the busy thoroughfare. His portraits were of Rex Beach, and Myrtle Stedman and Betty Blythe, the two actresses featured in "The Silver Horde." On Saturday night the crowd collected in front of the store was so great that the window was almost pushed in.

For advance publicity, starting about ten days before the opening, some 50,000 circulars announcing the engagement at the Capitol were distributed. These circulars, prepared in the manner of booklets giving a brief, vivid and dramatic account of Rex Beach's career, were also inserted in the Capitol theatre program and passed out to all those entering the Rivoli, Rialto and Strand theatres.

The appropriation for special newspaper advertising was distributed in a manner likely to secure the maximum results in consideration of the circulation of the great New York dailies and the readers it was most essential to reach.

The billboard end of the exploitation was well taken care of with choice locations for eight-sheets all the way from the Battery to Mamaroneck. A trip through Washington Heights and the Bronx gave the impression that they were all "Silver Horde." The placing of cards in store windows also was thoroughly looked after in all sections of Greater New York.

On the Saturday preceding the transfer of the picture from the Capitol to the Broadway, the Goldwyn exploitation department put over a stunt that attracted a great deal of attention in the theatre district during the afternoon hours when Broadway and Fifth Avenue were thronged with people. Early copies of every evening paper published in New York were secured, and across the front page of each was stamped in flaming red type the announcement of the showing of "The Silver Horde." at the Broadway. More than 5,000 of these newspapers were distributed during the afternoon and early evening.

Mr. Proftitt's method was to tie up his campaign with the local business houses by the use of specially printed signs. For instance, the grocer cards reading "Turnips Fresh from 'Down on the Farm'" were provided, and, of course, gladly used. There was a whole list of these cards, each apparently advertising only the merchants' wares.

The "Down on the Farm" signs were printed on oblong card of good size and quality. A red border made the cards attractive and an appropriate link-up with the various commodities sold in Chester made it possible to insert a number in most of the stores of the city.

Besides this, Mr. Proftitt supplied all of the grocery stores with six pound bags on which was a scene printed of "Down on the Farm," and grocer's used them continually for the week prior to the opening of the production. Twenty-four sheets, six sheets and three and one sheets were used in profusion all over the city and not any of them contained the name of the theatre. Everybody wanted to know what it was all about, and a few days before the opening the newsboys selling papers all yelled some trite phrase about "Down on the Farm," never mentioning the William Penn theatre, however, Jitneys in the town were also placarded with "Down on the Farm" signs.

Two days before the show opened and every person in Chester had heard and seen "Down on the Farm" propaganda there bulged forth in the newspapers the announcement of Mack Sennett's production. People looked for themselves when they reached the main street for the theatre that was running the production, paying little or no attention to the opposition, with the results that the house box office record was smashed to smithereens.
New York Wakens to Effectiveness of Exploitation

One of the features of the engagement of "The Orphan" at the William Fox Audubon theatre, New York, was an "orphans party" which was a great success both from a publicity and presentation angle.

Mercantile Tie-ups Get Results

The UPS with local merchants are generally categorized as "old stuff" but Ace Berry, field exploitation representative for the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, in putting over "The Luck of the Irish" for the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., gave it a new wrinkle that brought big returns.

A string of pearls figures prominently in the action of the Dwan production, giving Berry his opportunity to hook up with Leo Krauss, one of the leading jewelers of Indianapolis. The usual procedure was merely to plant an ad linking his wares with the picture attraction was reversed. In this instance, the Ohio theatre paid for the jeweler's ad, which occupied three columns in all of the local daily.

From the standpoint of typographical novelty, the ad prepared by Berry was decidedly different. The copy was in the form of a statement from the proprietor in which he gave his personal endorsement of the picture and called attention to the display of pearls in his window.

In return for the ad, the jeweler purchased from the Ohio, a block of tickets equivalent to the cost of the advertisements. These, he used as a business stimulant, giving one to each purchaser during the run of the picture. Acting on the suggestion of Berry, the jeweler arranged a window display devoted entirely to pearls. The window was tastefully decorated and contained seven scenes from "The Luck of the Irish" and a neatly framed card calling attention to the showing of the picture at the Ohio theatre.

As a result of the campaign, the business done by the jeweler reached a high-water mark and he felt himself well repaid for the effort and expense entailed by the stunt. The Ohio benefited to the extent of capacity houses at every performance, a noteworthy occurrence in view of the fact that the expense borne by the theatre in the campaign was practically negligible.

Advertising Novelty Worthy of Imitation

An advertising novelty that is worthy of imitation was originated by Harry R. Guest, Goldwyn's press and service representative at the Detroit exchanges, and used there in connection with the exploitation of "The Silver Horde" during its showing in Bay City, Mich. The novelty has three things in its favor. It is cheap, original and carries an advertising message that is certain to be read.

A yellow cardboard about three by one and three-quarters inches was lettered at the top, "Learn to Read the Ticket Tape," and at the bottom, "The Grasping Fingers of Wall Street Greed—The Courage and Might of Strong Men Fighting for Fortune and a Woman's Love."

Wound around the center of the cardboard was a paper tape about one foot and a half long. Lettered in type similar to that used for the news ticker, it read: "Don't pass up 'The Silver Horde'—Biggest entertainment investment of the year—A drama of fiery hearts and frozen trails—Rex Beach wrote it—Goldwyn produced it—The Washington is playing it 5 days commencing Sunday."

Some 4,000 of these novelties were distributed on the streets of Bay City, and it is safe to venture that they were not thrown away before the tape had been unwound and the message noted. A still more effective variation of the same stunt might be secured through having the cardboard shaped to represent a ticker machine. But even in its present form, the novelty has proved very attractive.

Rivoli Stage Setting Decided Novelty

A very effective stage setting has been devised for the vocal number on the Rivoli bill this week, "The Sweetest Story Ever Told."

The back drop represents a side of a room with a real opening about which is painted a frame such as would adorn an expensive mirror. Miss Anderson, the soloist, sang the song stands back of this opening in a costume gown and white wig. Back of her another is provided to conform to that in the immediate view of the audience. Against this second backing and to one side of the singer a small fancy stand on which is a vase of flowers is placed.

The effect from the house is as if the singer was stationed somewhere else and that the audience is viewing her reflection and the articles mentioned in a mirror. The coloring used for the backings is a dark crimson. The lightings are arranged back of the first drop to a great extent which heighten the "mirror" effect. The result is very pleasing.

Honesty Important Item in Exploitation

Pittsburgh Exhibitor Who Believes in Telling the Truth

What part does honesty play in exploitation? This question was put to Elmer Harris, manager of the successful Blackstone theatre, Pittsburgh, an exhibitor who has generally sacrificed promotion possibilities rather than "juggle the truth." Mr. Harris replied:

"Honesty is about fifty-one per cent of exploitation. And your other forty-nine per cent doesn't mean anything unless you've got the first quota. The popularity of the motion picture has eliminated the one-born-in-a-minute idea. The exhibitor who won't come clean with his audience is likely eventually to have no audience with which to come clean."

"The man who refuses to respect his customers and his own integrity had best not try out his theories on the show business. You can't sell a fellow something that is advertised to be something else. Not if you want to keep his friendship and patronage! When a man places his admission money through the box office of a motion picture house he usually knows what he is buying. His desire to purchase was stimulated probably by the exhibitor. If the exhibitor causes a patron to believe that his "stock in trade" is something out of the ordinary or "the best in the world" by means of fake and dishonest advertising methods he is misleading his customer by taking his money and allowing him to sit through a performance that is not what it was advertised to be. Such methods can not prosper in the exhibiting game any more than they can prosper in any other line of industry. For the simple reason there are ARE dishonest advertising methods he is leading his customer by taking his money and allowing him to sit through a performance that is not what it was advertised to be. And the patron who has been once deceived is likely to make it his business to search out the houses where the attractions are as good as they are advertised to be."

"A house may be able to get along without honest advertising methods for a little while. It may be able to stack up good looking receipts for one or two over-advertised features. But when the patronage finally catches on the exhibitor might as well take down the score board, rule the players off the diamond, dismiss the umpire and call the game. He's as lost without HONEST ADVERTISING as a ship without a rudder. He's simply floating along with a slight margin, nabbing the drifting customer who doesn't know any better than to buy something that is advertised to be something else."

"As manager of the Blackstone I have tried to carry out the policies of the house as they had been carried out before my advent. Mr. Guckenheimer, owner of the theatre for the first time that I am connected with the Blackstone which have been standing since the motion picture game was on a bottle. And one of these standards, pertaining to advertising as well as house methods was: 'If You Can't Make Your Ad Tell the Truth. Have the Paper Kill It.' And I believe that this system, rigidly enforced, has brought the Blackstone many hundreds of regular patrons."
Ohio Theatre, Indianapolis, Leads in Exploitation

Some of the exploitation for "The Luck of the Irish" which Harry Koch used for the picture's engagement at the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., one of Frank Reubush's houses. The top half of the cut shows a very attractive window display. The bottom cut illustrates the way Mr. Koch decorated the lobby of the Ohio.

Harry ("Sunny") Goldberg, proprietor of the Sun theatre in Omaha, Neb., who has gained a great reputation as an organizer of clever exploitation stunts for boosting his box office receipts, conceived and carried out a winner in connection with the Sun's recent showing of the new Nazimova picture, "The Heart of a Child." The exploit was nothing less than offering a child for adoption, and it set the whole town to talking.

Mr. Goldberg made arrangements with one of the localльн firms of this city, to get a little fellow about four or five years old; then took him to one of the department stores and had him dressed in a velvet suit, with everything to match.

"The little boy was put in the sun room of the theatre every afternoon at two o'clock. Mr. Goldberg had made arrangements with Orchard and Wilhelm, one of the big department stores here, to furnish all kinds of toys and playthings for the little fellow's use each afternoon. 'Sunny' was on view from two until five o'clock each day, and was open for adoption by interested parties.

"Mr. Goldberg had taken the precaution of running teasers in the newspapers for the week previous to the showing of the picture. He simply printed a big heart with a heavy black border, with the words, 'Win the heart of this child' in the center of it. Naturally this created a great deal of curiosity among the residents of the city, and when he finally announced the opening of the picture, and the appearance of the little boy and invited those wishing to adopt him to make application at the theatre, it made the biggest kind of a hit with the public.

Reisenfeld Originates Presentation Novelty

The manner in which film presentations and specialty numbers may be synchronized has been ably demonstrated at the Rivoli theatre, New York, several times during the past year, but no plan to better advantage than this week when a colored strip released by the Colora Company under the title of "Bubbles" was worked into the act of the Pictorial to be immediately followed by a dancing act which is an exact rendition of the performance shown in the film.

"Bubbles" is a strip several hundred feet in length showing a graceful young woman performing a catherine wheel dance while playing with a gently floating colored balloon, the movements of the hands in keeping the balloon in the air as well as the dance being in waltz time. The film is beautifully colored in life like tints.

At the finish of the Pictorial the drapes are drawn for a few seconds to be opened again with screen removed and a grey velvet backing in its place in front of which Miss Nazimova performs the same dance as that shown in the film, using the toy balloon in its rendition as the dancing girl of the film did.

The costume of both dancers are identical and the waltz played by the Rivoli orchestra for the film performance is used for Miss Geshy's dancing.

The set is artistically lighted by the use of light blue and blended floods. The number is being enthusiastically received by Rivoli audiences.

Barrymore Essay Interests Waco, Texas

As exploitation for "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" during its engagement at the Liberty theatre, Waco, Texas, an essay contest limited to 300 words each on the acting of John Barrymore was inaugurated with gratifying results.

A substantial prize was offered which interested a large number of Waco citizens. The date of the closing of the contest was set for a day after the picture had closed, not during the run, for the reason that it was figured that a great many people, not being familiar with Mr. Barrymore's professional ability and knowing only of him, would attend the picture to gain first hand information. In this the Liberty proved its theory to be correct, and through the attendance of the contestants hundreds of people learned of the extraordinary merits of the production, especially concerning the performance of the star.

In addition to the contest other special exploitation was put over to good advantage.

The merchants of Waco were quite willing to have window cards and other matter placed in their windows while two book stores gave window displays of the works of Robert Louis Stevenson, during the showing, with "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" featured in the display, and with scene stills and other attractive advertising material displayed in conjunction.

Rice Puts the Bloom In Bloomington

Exploitation Campaign for "Virgin of Stamboul" Astounds Illinois City

Hall and Griffin, owners and managers of the New Chatterton theatre, Bloomington, Ill., chose for the opening attraction after a thorough remodeling of the theatre, "The Virgin of Stamboul," and then set themselves for an exploitation which will be the talk of Bloomington for many a day.

Some weeks ago Bloomington Armenians were warned of the coming of the terrible Turk, Sheik Ach Me Hamid. These warnings appeared in the form of five and ten line editorial readers on the front page of local newspapers. So much interest was aroused by this form of exploitation that the local publishers were compelled to divulge the secret of the terrible Turk a week ahead of its schedule, announcing that the terrible Turk was none other than Wallace Berry, the terrible villain in "The Virgin of Stamboul."

Two days before the New Chatterton opened its doors, two Arabs (guineas) in full desert regalia, arrived in Bloomington. Hardly an inhabitant of the town but knew the object of this strange dzo's appearance. The cry was immediately taken up by the youngsters around the station "Here Comes the Terrible Turks!" which gained momentum as Slayman Ali and his companion worked their way to the New Chatterton. To prove if the newspaper advertising was being watched and to stir up some noise and attract attention with a novelty, it was announced in the papers that all the children who would report at the theatre at a certain time, would be given a free street car ride. Two hundred of Bloomington's Young America were set hand at the appointed time and started on their journey about the city. The cars carried banners announcing the "Virgin of Stamboul" showing at the New Chatterton.

Each urchin was provided with some noise making instrument like a bell or horn and told to make as much noise as possible. The result was a medley of sounds from vocal to cow bells that for three hours made Bloomington's principal streets resemble a bedlam.

For the presentation Hall and Griffin provided an elaborate stage setting and prologue number. The stage setting consisted of an So-foot cyclorama of the Sahara Desert in front of which was placed a flower bedecked altar. The orchestra was placed on the stage.

The prologue was opened by disclosing one of the Arabs who had been imported for the occasion sitting with the other standing with hand pointing to the star of Bethlehem. Lighting effects showed the rising sun with a caravan silhouetted against the sky, at which time the Arabs proclaim their faith in Allah in native tongue.

During the electrical process of bringing on the day, a local singer rendered "Somewhere Some One Is Waiting For Me." The scene closed with the stage in darkness, the sun having passed below the opposite horizon.

The presentation of "The Virgin of Stamboul" is the most elaborate ever attempted in Bloomington. The orchestra totaled seventeen pieces where five players are usually used at the Bloomington theatres.

The stage setting exploitation and presentation was the work of Harry Rice, Universal's Chicago district exploitation manager.

Union Hill Exploitation
Unusually Attractive

R. W. BAREMORE, of the Lincoln theatre, Union Hill, N. J., interpolated a novel touch in the recent presentation in that theatre of "The Virgin of Stamboul," which went over big with the audience and caused much interested discussion.

"We engaged a Turkish dancer to go on with the picture," says Baremore, "We ran the film up until that portion of the scene which shows the dance in the Harem, when the picture was stopped, screen raised disclosing a Harem set with the costumed girl ushers lying about in the background and the spotlight on the dancing girl who then performed her dance. When she was finished the picture was immediately flashed back on the screen and went through to the finish.

"This presentation made a great hit. It can be worked in with this feature to perfection, enhancing its value and providing a real novelty. We called our dancing girl 'Resha' after the Sheik's favorite as shown in the film and we billed her heavily as the girl who did the Harem dance in the feature, using such lines as 'Personal appearance of Resha,' performing on the stage the dance she does in the feature picture.

"For a week in advance of the show we exhibited large paintings in the lobby, arranged with electric drop lights shaded above them in much the same manner as paintings are shown in an art gallery. Slides were also shown at each performance for many days in advance of the first play date and the Saturday preceding the Monday opening we used a half-page smash advertisement in the two daily newspapers of largest circula-

Daring Horsemanship Feature of Short Subject

U NDER the title of "Modern Cen-
ing a short subject at the Strand Theatre, New York, this week which has some remarkable exploitation possibilities as well as entertaining qualities, inasmuch as it is made up of a variety of horse and horsemanship material performed by the famous Portuguese cavalry riding "up hill and down dale," through water, sliding down embankments, climbing lines which would almost prohibit a squirrel and otherwise exhibiting themselves to be wonderfully trained animals and courageous skilled riders.

The exploitation possibilities are contained in letting your patrons know what to expect from the cavalry in the way of stunts and in depending upon the almost universal love of horse flesh to assist in making them curious of seeing the film. Extravagance in praising the film is justified.

Fine Lobby Display Idea for Lewis Feature

Stan Brown, managing director of the Met theatre, Grand Forks, N. D., is a thorough believer in novel exploitation ideas, and, whenever the opportunity presents, "puts something over." Recently he played "Other Men's Shoes" and as a lobby display arranged remarkable exhibition of shoes, which included snow shoes, shoes worn by Uncle Sam's boys in Siberia, the footwear of Calcutta Hindus, of Mexicans, Hollander, and in fact shoes from all over the world were on exhibition in the lobby.

Tastefully arranged, the display attracted wide attention, and was of material assistance to Brown in making "Other Men's Shoes" one of the greatest box office attractions he has ever played. In telling of the stunt himself, Mr. Brown said:

"It caused lots of comment and also got plenty of comedy out of it. One old man wanted to know how much a pair we were selling the old shoes displayed at. Another one thought we gave a pair of shoes away with each ticket.

"I had window displays in all shoe stores—a litho card attached calling attention to the fact that we were playing 'Other Men's Shoes' at the Met.

"The store had every size shoe in the window, ranging from baby shoes to a pair of overshoes, size 14.

"I had signs in all shine parlors and shoe repair shops. Had the sidewalk marked, so many paces to OTHER MEN'S SHOES. In the lobby we had strings of old shoes by the dozen, and on a bench had a pair of Mexican shoes, wooden shoes, Japanese, Hindu, Russian, and snow shoes.

Funny Week New Vogue in San Francisco

Imperial Theatre Program Made Up Entirely of Comedies

F UNNY WEEK is a new vogue in California.

The Imperial theatre of San Francisco, Cal., started the ball rolling with the idea when they put on Mack Sennett's latest five-reel comedy, "Down on the Farm," and all the theatres along the line are following their example.

There's a real reason behind it, however. The idea of running a "Funny Week" yacked them in to capacity for a whole week, and every patron had such a gloriously good time that they not only complimented the management upon the idea but asked for more. The Imperial put over the idea with a resounding bang.

Funny Week the management tells us, made the whole town forget its troubles and act like kids on their first trip to the circus.

"Come on folks" the Imperial invited the people in their ads, "and see an all comedy show, the best durned thing that ever hit the town. Mack Sennett's "Down on the Farm," you'll bust laugh over. Severi, the big little leader, has turned the Imperial orchestra into a hick band and the tunes he's going to make you want to get right out in the street and swing your partner right and left."

All San Francisco accepted this unique invitation.

The opening number was a song written for the occasion by Ben Black, entitled "Howdy Folks," sung by a very pretty girl, in full farm regalia. The song asked everybody to throw care to the winds and join the crowd in the fun. After the song two comedies were shown, "Haunted Spooks" and "The Doughnut Lifter." They were followed by a prologue to "Down on the Farm" the setting of which was a scene of a farmyard at dawn with all the live animals from chickens to pigs roaring all over the stage, giving it a realistic and humorous touch which went over big, it is said.

Directors Roth and Partington, of the Imperial, converted the Severi's Imperial orchestra into one of the Hickville variety and one of the tremendous hits was the "yap" band and the manner in which it was led by Gine Severi. Soulfully it played discordant tunes in a setting designated on the program as "Si Scudder's Barn" and the audience at each and every performance couldn't slap hard enough to show their appreciation so they stamped. The entire orchestra was dressed as farmers and gave the most perfect imitation of a rube band at a village festival.

The "Funny Week" program at the Imperial contained nothing but comedies. Even the "news" and the customary "travel" or "scenic" were omitted, and the best portion of their advertising was confined to the bill-boards and newspapers.
California Theatre Originates Presentation Novelty

When the Imperial theatre of San Francisco played "Down on the Farm" a prologue and stage setting that was a good running mate for "The Old Homestead" was presented as a part of the entertainment. The stage setting is shown in the larger illustration. Miss Evelyn Francour sang a prologue song for the number.

Two-Reelers for First Nat'l by H. Lehrman

Things are booming again at the Henry Lehrman studios in Culver City, where Mr. Lehrman is beginning work on a series of two-reel comedies under the business management of C. L. Chester, producer of Chester Comedies and the well-known travel pictures, Chester Outings and Scenecines. The company has taken over a contract with the First National Exhibitors Exchange to supply twelve of the Lehrman Comedies to this organization during the coming year.

Operations began last week on the first picture of the series, which has received the temporary title of "Springtime." Albert Mayer, a juvenile who worked with Mr. Lehrman in Sunshine Comedies, and Charlotte Dawn, a seventeen-year-old ingénue, are being featured.

"Up in Mary's Attic" Wins Approval

"Up in Mary's Attic" beats Mack Sennett at his own game," says the New York Review of May 22 in connection with the comedy-feature, which is now being distributed by Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., on the independent market. "This facially melodramatic, human-interest picture has about all the elements necessary for a hilarious thrilling screen hour—a triumph for Eva Novak, Harry Gribbon and Elmer J. Moughan," adds the New York Review. "Up in Mary's Attic" is something new in five-reel comedies and should be looked by every exhibitor because it is novel and artistic.

Cosmopolitan to Make Another Hurst Story

"Just Around the Corner," said to be one of Fannie Hurst's greatest stories, is now being put into scenario form for Cosmopolitan Productions. In view of the success Miss Hurst's "Homormesque" has achieved at the Criterion Theatre, New York, this news item carries with it a particular interest to exhibitors and picture lovers alike. Frank Borzage, who is responsible for the direction of "Homormesque," Albert also direct "Just Around the Corner."

Live News From The Producers

Mayer Produces "Old Dad"

Mildred Harris Chaplin, Star of Woman's Home Companion Serial

"OLD DAD," the Eleanor Hal-howell serial, which appeared in the Woman's Home Companion, is soon to be given to the public in motion picture form. The story was purchased by Louis B. Mayer, and Mildred Harris Chaplin is the star. George Stewart, brother of Anita Stewart, appears opposite Mrs. Chaplin, and the cast includes Myrtle Stedman, Irving Cummings, John Sampoli, Hazel Howel and a number of others.

The picture is now in the course of production and is being directed by Lloyd Ingraham, who recently directed the comedy, "Mary's Ankle." Ingraham is being assisted by O. C. Cline, with Play Good Friend at the camera.

The Chaplin-Mayer Pictures Co. has the following to say concerning its newest acquisition:

"The story is one of the most gripping girls' school romances ever penned, and is filled with dramatic settings and comic situations. The sets have been designed on the most elaborate plans, and such homes as that of Vice-President Gertz of the Rock Island Railway are being used as locations. This picture will be the charming star's third First National release and is to follow "Polly of the Storm Country." Mrs. Chaplin's fourth production of the season is being supervised by John M. Stahl, and is to be released until fall, and will then be released in the best theatres throughout the country. So successful is this picture that Louis B. Mayer has expressed his options with Stahl for two more super-productions."

"Trumpet Island" Coming

Vitagraph Announces Big Special Production by Governor Morris

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, announces this week that "Trumpet Island," by Governor Morris, will be the next special of that company. The first of this series, "Fame of Marge O' Donoe," has been booked at New York's Capitol Theatre. Final scenes of "Trumpet Island," requiring the Hudson River as a background for airplane scenes, will be taken in New York, and Director Tom Terriss and several members of the company will shortly leave for the east.

This is believed to have been the first picture ever made in which airplanes supplanted trains and automobiles in transporting players and technical staff from the studio to locations. This air communication service was maintained between Vitagraph studios in Hollywood and Catalina Island, Long Beach, Palm Springs during the course of the production and while these locations were being used.

The use of the planes in this service was not designed merely to be spectacular. Six were used almost constantly in the picture, so the double duty of transporting people to locations was a logical and modern idea.

This special production will introduce Marguerite De La Motte in the most important part she has had, and one that she fits admirably. Before appearing in this picture she played important leading parts in "The Sagebrush," "The Hope" and numerous other big productions of the past year.

The production cost on this picture is said to have already exceeded the $300,000 mark.

New England Rights on Canyon Films Sold

Mr. A. Hirsch, of the Lightning Photoplay Service of N. E., 20 Melrose Street, Boston, Mass., has just closed contract with the Canyon Pictures Corporation for twelve two-reel western pictures, starring Franklyn Parrum, for the territory of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont. The Lightning Photoplay Service intend to exploit these two-reel pictures in the same manner as some of the large productions they now control.

Sidney Franklin Starts Editing of "Athalie"

Sidney A. Franklin, who recently completed the filming of "Athalie," the Robert W. Chambers' story, for Mayflower, has abandoned his vacation plans and will start to work cutting, editing and titling the picture. William Shea has been engaged by Franklin to assist him in the cutting room. Franklin believes that "Athalie" will be ready for shipment to Mayflower's New York offices within the next three weeks, it is stated.

Universal Exchanges in Spring Sales Drive

Universal is going to cut another melon among its leading salesmen, it has been announced by H. M. Lehrman, general manager of exchanges for the big film company. The leading salesman in each of the Universal exchanges now participating in its Spring sales contest will receive $100 as a bonus. An individual record is a new feature of the Universal's $7,000 sales contest.

Famous Players Opens Albany Exchange

Plans made by Al Lichtman, general manager of the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, call for the opening of the new Famous Players exchange at Albany, by June 7. The new exchange, which will be a model of exchange housing and facilities, will be at 33 Orange street. Joseph H. Seidman has been appointed exchange manager.

Pioneer Dallas Office Opens for Business

The Parker Film Company, beginning a Pioneer Distributing System, began business last week at their new exchange at 1810 Commerce Street, Dallas, Texas, under the management of Tom N. Parker.
Sunshine’s Special Thrills
Daring and Fun Said to Be Mixed in New Fox Five-Real Farce

WHILE still withholding the date for release of the special comedy in five reels, the advance guard of Fox Film Corporation’s Sunshine Comedy Brigade continues to forward choice of information regarding this super-comedy. Little has been published regarding the exact nature of this production—which is still without a title—except that it will be interpreted by a big cast, including all the Sunshine comedy artists on the Fox lot in Hollywood; that a bevy of beauties has been recruited for the picture; and that the continuing will be of a character unusual for a five-real farce. Hampton Del Ruth is supervising director.

The Fox Film Corporation has the following to say about its forthcoming production:

“As an example of the type of thrills with which the comedy fairly bristles, Del Ruth is laying special emphasis upon the scenes in which Miss Allen, the attractive little leading woman, faces almost certain death to obtain the realism demanded by the character.

“The producer’s representatives claim that nothing ever has been done by darder in pictures to equal the sensational work by the Fox players in these scenes. The action was photographed at Pomona, near Los Angeles, and in neighboring territory, and for this purpose a special spur of the railroad was scored by the concern.

“Further co-operation was received from the executives of the Mercury Company, a prominent air-transit company from which the Fox director obtained the use of several racing planes. One of these planes, which plays the most important part in the big scene, was driven personally by Lieutenant Thompson, an army flyer. Chester Conklin, famous Sunshine comedian, is the daring hero who saves Miss Allen from the clutches of Jack Cooper by use of the plane.

“Cooper has kidnapped Miss Allen and escaped with her in the cab of a locomotive attached to a four-car train. Couldin goes to the rescue in the airplane, overtaking the train. Then occurs the stunt that will force cold chills up and down the spine of the biggest iceberg of ‘em all. The Fox folks in Hollywood are all excited over it and have passed the word to headquarters in New York.”

DeMille in West Gets Back to Work

Cecil B. DeMille’s return to Los Angeles from New York, following the signing of his latest five-year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, marked renewed activity on the final work of whipping “Something to Think About” into shape for release. The latest Cecil B. DeMille special production was completed some weeks ago, but the task of cutting and tiling the picture has required weeks of intensive labor, it is said.

Alice Brady Deserts Stage
Realart Star Will Devote Entire Time for One Year to Pictures

A LICE BRADY has decided to discontinue temporarily her work on the speaking stage and to devote her entire time and energies to the making of pictures for Realart. The decision comes after two seasons as the star in Owen Davis’ successful play, “Forever After.”

Miss Brady is now in Chicago where in addition to playing at the Princess Theatre in “Forever After,” she is working on her third Realart picture, “A Dark Lantern,” under the direction of John S. Robertson.

As soon as her stage engagement is finished and the final scenes for “A Dark Lantern” taken, Miss Brady will return to New York City, and will take a rest before starting work on her next season’s productions for Realart release. For several seasons, Miss Brady has devoted almost her entire time to the stage. Her return to the screen, therefore, for a year at least, during which time she will appear solely in Realart Pictures, will be of considerable interest to exhibitors who in past years have built up large Brady followings, which is not heard definitely decided whether Miss Brady will produce her pictures on the coast or in New York City, but it is believed that the latter will be the choice. This will enable the star to have the range of the country’s fashion center and to maintain her reputation as the best and most stylishly dressed woman of the screen.

Progressing on Star Series
Universal Has Already Completed Two of Series; Three More on Way

U NIVERSAL is well launched into the production of its Star Series, the new schedule of feature releases for the 1920-1921 season, word comes from Universal City, California. This series, announced several weeks ago, contemplates forty-eight five-real specials, turned out by six popular stars, each star to produce eight high-class photoplays.

The stars are Harry Carey, Edith Roberts, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran (working together), Frank Mayo, Carmel Myers and Anne Cornwall. Two of the new series already have been completed. They are “The Girl in the Rain,” featuring Anne Cornwall and “The Red Lane,” with Frank Mayo.

“The Girl in the Rain” is an adaptation of Varick Varady’s popular novel, “The Girl by the Roadside.” It was put into continuity form by Doris Schroeder, and directed by Rollin Strongen.

“The Red Lane” is a picturization of Holman Day’s novel by that name. It is an action story of the Canadian border. Lynn Reynolds was the director.

Three other Star Series pictures are under way. Edith Roberts is doing “Marama,” a South Sea story by Ralph Stock. Every indication points to an unusual picture, says Universal. Norman Dawn is directing it. Lyons and Moran are producing “La La Lucille,” a film version of Fred Jackson’s roaring stage success of last season. “La La Lucille” was a hilarious musical farce. Harry Carey is working on “Fightin’ Job,” an original screen story by H. H. Van Loan, the author of The Virgin of Stamboul, and other highly successful photoplays.

The first of the Star Series to be released will be “The Girl in the Rain,” with Anne Cornwall, which is scheduled for July 12. “The Red Lane,” with Mayo, will be released July 19, and “Fightin’ Job,” with Harry Carey, on July 26.
Summer Drive by Paramount

WHEN summer begins to exert a depressing influence upon the show business, the New York Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will have a remedy ready, according to H. H. Buxbaum, manager of the exchange, who has proclaimed July to be Paramount month for his territory. Mr. Buxbaum's theory is that the final falling off of business at the theatres during the summer months can be counteracted if exhibitors will make the period a profitable one for the best pictures producers have to offer.

"The idea that summer is a good time to work off poor films on the public, with indifferent patronage as the excuse, is entirely outworn. Our experience last year, when live wireless exhibitors responded to the appeal to play first class pictures at this time, and made a good profit during these months in doing so, was convincing," he stated.

During July, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's New York Exchange has planned an intensive sales campaign to bring Paramount pictures to every house in New York City and the eastern and southern part of the state covered by the exchange as well as eastern New Jersey. One of the prime objectives will be to give exhibitors a chance to make up for skipped bookings and to play specially big productions that were obliged to pass up earlier in the season because the pictures had been previously booked by another house. Among some of the big specials which will be available for exhibitors during Paramount month, are: "Cecil B. DeMille's Male and Female," "Everywoman," "The Copperhead," "George Fitzmaurice's 'On the Dance," "Treasure Island," John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "George M. Cohan and the Sea Wolf" and "Cecil B. DeMille's Why Change Your Wife?"

In response to the first Paramount month campaign inaugurated by the New York Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation last year, the business of falling off showed a marked increase for the New York Exchange to Start Campaign Under Buxbaum hot reason. The number of houses at which Paramount pictures were exhibited also increased materially and the exhibitors who took advantage of the sales campaign ran big pictures in the summer months and kept their theatres in a proper state.

PRELIMINARY reports to date have indicated, Mr. Buxbaum declares, that an even larger number of exhibitors are preparing to follow this course during the coming summer. "My one suggestion to aggressive exhibitors," he said, "is to keep their theatres clean and wholesome, to have them cooled with air fans, to serve refreshing lemonade and to advertise their facts. It's a lot more cheerful to sit in a cozy, comfortable theatre watching a good picture than to stroll around the phone booths and carelessly throw away the half of the afternoon. Motion picture patrons will respond to this line of reason if it is only presented to them in a decent fashion."

Carpentier Press-Book Out

Robertson-Cole's Campaign Book Available in All Branch Offices

ROBERTSON-COLE announces the publication of a press-book for the Wonder Man and other films. U.S. picture, a complete set of display advertising, a page of press comment made upon the campaign by the press of the country following its arrival in America, lobby displays, eight pages of exploitation, program copy, a list of posters available for the exhibitor and a twelve-page newspaper publicity insert accompanied by a complete line of cuts.

The Robertson-Cole Company has issued the following statement concerning its campaign book for the Carpentier picture:

About two months ago, while the "Wonder Man" was being filmed at the Solax studio, Ft. Lee, N. J., a publicity campaign was outlined which included the following ideas: "The Sea Wolf" publicity ideas and Cecil B. DeMille's "Why Change Your Wife." This is the first of fifteen Sir Louis Tracy novels, rights to which were purchased by Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., to be completed for Gibraltar Pictures.

"Silent Barrier" to be Released in Summer

"The Silent Barrier," first motion picture play by a member of the British aristocracy to be produced in America, is now titled and ready for early summer release by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. This is the first of fifteen Sir Louis Tracy novels, rights to which were purchased by Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., to be completed for Gibraltar Pictures.
Pathe Releases Commented

Letters Lauding All Classes of Releases Arrive Daily, Is Report

In a statement recently issued, Pathe announces that a great many letters, reflecting favorable exhibitor comment on the character of the recent Pathe releases, are being daily received at headquarters. These expressions of favor are not restricted to any particular class of pictures, states Pathe, but include serials, comedies, the Pathe News and the big features now being distributed.

One letter submitted comes from K. Moreland, general manager of the Morland Circuit in Nebraska and Iowa. He writes as follows of Edgar Lewis' "Other Men's Show":

"We have just completed showing this wonderful production over our circuit. This is the only feature that has ever grossed over 50 cents per cent picture. I have ever seen. It pleased every one who saw it in any of our theatres. It will be shown in all our houses again, and I want to tell you now that this will be the only picture we ever thought worthy of a repeat showing."

Writing of Harold Lloyd's two-reeler, "Haunted Spooks," A. C. King of the Empress Theatre, Zumbrota, Minn., says:

"'Haunted Spooks' which I showed Saturday and Sunday is the best comedy I have played, and it brought in more money than anything I have given on Saturday and Sunday, with one exception. That was a $750 special. I raised my prices and I believe I have more satisfied patrons than ever before."

William F. Kuschke, manager of the Royal, in Caddo, Okla., doubled the drawing ability of Jack Dempsey in "Daredevil Jack," states Pathe, but here's what he writes of the opening episode:

"I wish unqualified to express my appreciation of your wonderful series, 'Daredevil Jack.' I broke all attendance records. In fact, I opened to capacity business and paid for my entire fifteen weeks on the opening night."

The Pathe News wins a boost from Lowell V. Calvert, manager of the new Garrick Theatre, St. Paul. "On the Pacific" of Pathe News, No. 37, was the subject of the following:

"It is an unusual piece of work and a Reprint and every- thing connected with it is so exceptional that it stands out like a shrewd sight. It is this kind of stuff that makes Pathe News what it is."

Rosalie Ashton Writes for Eugene Spitz

Rosalie Ashton, continuity writer and playwright, is now engaged on a series of special stories for Eugene Spitz, independent producer, with studios at 361 West 125th street and 219 East 124th street. According to Spitz's announcement, Miss Ashton is writing a special production, which he will produce in the near future, and is also preparing material for a series of short productions.

THE recent discussion concerning communication with Mars, started when the claim that dots and dashes caught on Marconis wireless apparatus in London were signalled from the Markens to Mother Earth, has caused unusual public interest. Ever since, scientists have been racking their brains to attain elucidation of the signals through the 50,000,000 miles of ether that separates the earth from Mars when those two planets are closest together.

A captain in the United States Army recently volunteered to be shot to the planet in a projectile propelled by a huge cannon, provided it was previously demonstrated to his satisfaction that a being had been successfully landed on the planet.

Furthermore, one of the most ingenious suggestions that has been made up to date is realistic in form in "A Trip to Mars," a special production of Towe Film Corporation is about to be released on the Independent Market.

"A Trip to Mars" has been produced under the guidance of a group of some of the greatest scientists in the world. It is as scientifically accurate as is possible in view of our limited knowledge of our nearest neighbor among the planets.

It is a fascinating and an intensely interesting tale-drama—with thrills from beginning to end. It tells the story of a daring party of explorers making the trip through almost limitless space in a specially constructed airship, showing their thrilling adventures before a project has opened on the planet. The love element is not neglected and a dramatic romance runs through the story.

Clara Kimball Young Feature Has Trade Showing in Hotel Astor

AFTER a wait of many months, during which time a score of technical and production experts worked, this week the world première of "For the Soul of Rafael," the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor, New York, Wednesday, May 26th. Much interest is attached to the "For the Soul of Rafael," Marsh Ellis Ryan's romance of early California life, since its first edition, published in 1905, more than two million copies of Mr. Ryan's book have been sold, and according to the estimates of the publishers, there is a copy of "For the Soul of Rafael" in every fifth family in the United States.

"For the Soul of Rafael," in addition to boasting Clara Kimball Young in the important role of Maria Raquel Estavan, announces as members of the supporting cast some of the best known stage and screen players. Miss Young's work surpasses anything she has done in the past, and she brings to the screen a role that will live forever.

Mr. J. Frank Glendon, in the part of Keith Bryton, brings to the screen a noteworthy contribution. The remaining members of the cast—Bertram Grassby, Eugene Besoret, Juan de la Cruz, Ruth King, Helene Sullivan, Paula Merritt, Maude Emery and Edward M. Kimball—compose a cast of more than ordinary excellence.

"For the Soul of Rafael," will be seen at a prominent Broadway theatre and will tour the country in sixty-three cities throughout the country.
Realtor Star Growing in Popularity

Dan Michalove, director of theatres for Southern Enterprises, Inc., declares that when "Nurse Marjorie," and "Jenny Be Good," have concluded their run over that circuit, Mary Miles Minter "will be second to none in drawing power in our territory." He has proved his faith in this by scheduling the pictures for the maximum play dates for the circuit.

M. L. Finkelstein of Finkelstein and Ruben, managers of the Twin City Amusement Trust chains, personally viewed the two pictures and considered them the best Mary Miles Minter had ever made. Finkelstein and Ruben recently signed a record exploitation campaign for "Anne of Green Gables," Miss Minter's first Realtor picture, and are planning to follow through with the stars' latter pictures.

Private Showing for "The Restless Sex"

A special private showing of Marion Davies' latest starring feature, "The Restless Sex," by a Metropolitan production released by Paramount-Artcraft, will be held Wednesday evening, June 2nd, in the grand ball room of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York. A representative audience of well-known feminists, jurists, and artistic and theatrical people will be invited.

"The Restless Sex," is by Robert W. Chambers, and appeared in Metropolitan Magazine. The star is supported by Ralph Kellard, Carlyle Blackwell, Corinne Baker, Charles Lane, Robert Duvall, Etna Ross, Stephen Carr, and Vivian Osborne. Robert Z. Leonard is the director.

Author Witnesses Showing of "Silent Barrier"

Sir Louis Tracy, author of "The Silent Barrier," witnessed a private showing of the feature production just finished by Gibraltar Pictures for W. W. Hodkinson before his departure from New York a few days ago, and expressed himself as being delighted in the pictorial results achieved by Director William Worthington.

expects ovation for premiere

A S has already been announced, "The Wonder Man," which stars Georges Carpentier, the French pugilist and war-veteran, will be presented by Robertson-Cole in the Grand Ball-Room of the Hotel Astor for one week, beginning May 29th. The premiere of the Robertson-Cole production is made the subject of a lengthy statement just issued by that organization. The statement follows:

"The showings are under the auspices of the American Legion of New York City, and American Legion men throughout New York City are exerting every energy to make the affair something that will go down in the history of their organization. Carpentier is extremely popular with the Legion not only because of his war record—he was decorated three times and wounded twice—but for other reasons. Therefore, the American Legion of New York County intends that the French fighter, a stranger in a strange land, shall receive a send-off that will be heard across the water.

"One week before the initial showing on the evening of the 29th every seat for it was sold out, and the advance sale of seats for the other performances was progressing satisfactorily. Exhibitors will be interested in knowing how enthusiasm for the picture was worked up and the way paved for the heavy advance sale at prices ranging from $1 to $2.

"It is estimated that 4,000,000 ex-soldiers, and their friends and families, aggregating several more, all want to see Carpentier. This is one of the strongest angles of exploitation on which the exhibitor can dwell. Here is the way the Robertson-Cole home office in New York put over the premier showing of "The Wonder Man."

"First, when the New York County Committee of the Legion decided to hold the world's premier Carpentier showing under its auspices, Henry Buxton, president of the County organization appointed a committee of representative business men to take charge of the affair. This committee is composed of Col. Nicholas Engel, chairman, William K. Doggett, Edgar H. Felix and S. G. Compertetz. Members of the committee proceeded to work in co-operation with Robertson-Cole, which is distributing 'The Wonder Man,' and which has just signed Carpentier to Robertson-Cole, which is distributing 'The Wonder Man,' and which has just signed Carpentier to"
Three Men Govern Universal

MANAGEMENT of Universal activities hereafter will be directed by a committee of three high officials of that organization, it is announced by Carl Laemmle, president of the corporation. The commission form of management, inaugurated recently at Universal City, has proved such a success that Mr. Laemmle decided to install a similar body in the Universal home office.

The newly formed committee consists of Abe Stern, treasurer of Universal; E. H. Goldstein, secretary to the president, and H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges. Their word will be final in most of the general affairs of the film concern. By the formation of this committee, Mr. Laemmle hopes to unburden himself and his chief aid, R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, of much of the routine details of the business. Hereafter these two officials will confine themselves to important questions of policy and picture betterment.

The formation of this commission was possible by reason of several important changes just announced in Universal's executive staff. Daniel B. Lederman, formerly assistant to the president, has resigned, and E. H. Goldstein has just been appointed to a newly created executive position, secretary to the president. Among other activities he will assume the duties formerly shouldered by Mr. Lederman. Mr. Goldstein has been sales manager of Universal for two years. Previous to this he was manager of the Big "U" (New York) Exchange for several years.

Commission Formed by Laemmle Will Distribute Work

Another important change in the Universal organization is the appointment of Samuel Sedran as purchasing agent. Sedran also is the head of the Universal supply department. The new appointment consolidates the co-functions of the two positions and is expected to be a far-reaching step towards maximum efficiency. Mr. Sedran's appointment follows the recent resignation of the former purchasing agent, Albert Tischman.

Mr. Laemmle believes that the commission form of management is the only efficient way for handling the affairs of an organization of the magnitude of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. "Trial of the commission form of government for Universal City has convinced me in less than a month that it is the ideal method for handling the many phased activities of a film company," explained Mr. Laemmle in a recent interview. "For years I had difficulty at Universal City. Manager after manager had to give it up. The absolute rule of the vast studio plant was too much for one man. When I established a commission of three there this Spring, I must confess that I was skeptical. The three Commissioners, Isadore Bernstein, Sam Von Ronkle and Louis Loch, assisted by my personal representative, Irving Thalberg, have accomplished wonders, however.

Production is now at high tide and what is more important, everyone is contented and enthusiastic.

"Naturally such a state of affairs caused me to consider the same plan for the Universal exchange offices. There are too many matters of more or less importance coming up continually for one man to pass upon effectively. That is why I have created this new triumvirate for Universal.

"I have taken many steps to improve the standing of Universal in the last few months. The first, of course, was the acquisition by R. H. Cochrane and myself of the Universal stock held by E. P. Powers, my former associate. That gave me the power to put my plans for Universal into effect.

"The second important step was the reorganization of the management of Universal City and the placing of the studios on an efficient and harmonious basis. The third step was the building up of the scenario department and the assurance that Universal will put out the best possible stories by the best writers."

Dwan Fits Continuity to the "Location"

Fitting the continuity to the scenes on "location" rather than seeking "locations" that fit the continuity is the scheme that Allan Dwan has adopted in the filming of his new production for Mayflower, which features Mary Thurman and Niles Welch. The "shooting" schedule was worked out more than two weeks before the picture was started.

Montagu Love Signed for Farrar Picture

Montagu Love has just been engaged by Edward Jose to play an important part in Geraldine Farrar's first Associated Exhibitors production, "The Riddle: Woman," which will be distributed by Pathé. Coincident with this announcement, Associated Exhibitors reports that Miss Farrar has returned from her Southern operatic tour and that preparations have been completed for her to begin work on "The Riddle: Woman."
Goldwyn to Distribute New Comedy Series

A new series of twenty-six two-reel comedies, produced by the National Film Corporation of America, will be released through Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, according to an announcement received from Goldwyn this week. The first film, "The Road to Ruin," "The Husband and "In and Out" and "Knocking 'Em Cold" have been completed and prints will be in the hands of Goldwyn exchange managers.

Colorado Man Acquires Rights to Features

Charles F. Schwerin, general sales manager of Fine Art Pictures, Inc., announced this week that Will Kent, head of the Quality Pictures Company of Denver, Colorado, had purchased rights to "A Dream of Fair Women." Mr. Kent also purchased "Up in Mary's Attic" for his territory, which consists of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico.

Joe Brandt Terminates New York Visit

Joe Brandt, director general of the National Film Corporation and eastern representative of the Marion H. Kahn Productions, is now well on his way from New York to the coast, for conferences with his company officials.

It is understood that the National Film Corporation is about to inaugurate a new series of five-reel westerns.

"Iliterate Digest" at New York Strand

With the endorsement of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, still held by Joe Brandt, general representative of the Marion H. Kahn Productions, now reports that the "Iliterate Digest," by Will Rogers, has been booked for a run at the New York Strand theatre, for the first showing of this Kahn Novelty weekly in New York.

Preacher Signs Contract with Paragon

Rev. George L. R. Clarke, the preacher-actor, has signed a year's contract with the Paragon Pictures Corporation, with studios at Long Beach, Cal. The minister's first venture in motion pictures was of a "free lance" nature, with considerable financial backing if his productions were a success. The minister's first seven pictures will soon be released by Paragon.

Kent Buys Rights for Fine Arts Picture

Charles F. Schwerin, general sales manager of Fine Art Pictures, Inc., announced this week that Willis Kent, head of the Quality Pictures Company, had purchased rights to "A Dream of Fair Women," for Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico. He has also purchased "Up in Mary's Attic" for the same territory.

"Humoresque" on Broadway

Fannie Hurst Story at Criterion in New York City

"Humoresque," Fannie Hurst's story of mother love of that done in motion picture by Cosmopolitan Productions, will be shown for the first time at the Criterion theatre, New York, beginning May 30th, where it opens for an indefinite run.

Humphrey Kines, managing director of the Criterion theatre, who selected "Humoresque" as his next attraction, made the following statement:

"If everybody feels as I do, they will like "Humoresque." As a portrayal of a fascinating part of New York and America's life, as a portrait of the spirit of the rhochet, it surpasses any cinematic description of that field that I have ever seen."

"The sympathetic drawing of the Jewish character with its strength, its meekness, its idealism and its great spirit is all that is left of the family, interpreted by the actors with a skill that makes me believe they have lived and breathed in that race."

"As I sat and watched Miss Hurst's effort on the screen, I felt that I was seeing my own youth reactivated; the never-ending struggle for an education, in my case musical, as in the case of the hero of this picture, the recurrent sacrifice of the Jewish mother that her child may have the place denied to her and the cruxy old father who prods against these sacrifices and labors even more than the to see that the sacrifices are made possible."

"As I saw myself in the photo, so will thousands of others see themselves. The picture is great because it reflects reality."

Hailed by some critics as the logical successor to "The Miracle Man," "Humoresque" was originally published in Cosmopolitan Magazine where it was read by more than 5,000,000 people. In the screen version, Alma Rubens, the featured player, is supported by some splendid cast of players including Vera Gordon, Fred Davidson, Gaston Glass, Miriam Battista, and Bobby Comodly. Vera Gordon, who plays the role of the Jewish mother, will be remembered for her fine work in Vitagraph stage productions as "The Gentle Wife," and "The Land of the Free." Don David has been an interpreter of Slavonic roles and other dramatic parts for more than a quarter of a century, and Gaston Glass has had wide experience in the playing of juvenile roles. Miriam Battista and Bobby Comodly are among the best known child players in the country. Miriam even now is in "Frudora" in New York. The scenario was done by Frances Marion, famous for her Mary Pickford screen scenarios, and Frank Borzage is responsible for the direction.

Albert Smith Returns East

Especially Pleased with Interest Shown by Famous Authors in Screen

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, has returned to New York after a ten-week's' stay in Hollywood, where he combined a rest with work in the production for his company's western studio. Mr. Smith also completed "Hidden Dangers," new serial, in cooperation with Cleveland Moffett, famous fiction writer, who went West at the same time. This serial is now being produced with Joe Ryan and Joan Paige in the leading roles.

Mr. Smith's plans for Vitagraph include the production of specials from books by well known authors for release at regular intervals, "The Courage of Marie O'Brien," by James Oliver Curwood, has just been completed by Director David Smith, who is now preparing another Curwood story for the screen. Another special adapted from "Trumpet Island," by Governor Morris, is being completed at the Hollywood studios under the direction of Tom Terriss. Marguerite De La Motte and Wallace Mac Donald head the all star cast. Earle Williams will continue to make his home in Hollywood, while Mr. Smith announces, under the direction of Chester Bennett.

In interviews granted to newspapers on the coast before leaving for New York, Mr. Smith spoke chiefly of the problem of obtaining stories for the screen—something which is a serious obstacle to Vitagraph because of its large purchases of rights to standard fiction classes and plays, it is stated.

He says that the altered attitude and growing interest shown by famous authors with motion pictures offers a promising future to the industry. "They are learning to write action, not merely words," said Mr. Smith. "Authors of the greatest art and skill have now discovered that a thousand words of description can be duplicated in a few seconds on the screen; also that characters must be doing something all the while in front of these beautiful backgrounds."

Mr. Smith has written nearly a score of serials and numerous other works for the screen and has had as collaborators some of the best fiction writers. And he thinks that the new attitude of standard writers is the best step forward in motion pictures of the past year.

Roland Serial Will be Finished on Time

Despite several days of practical idleness imposed upon the Ruth Roland Company by the recent railroad strikes, which made it impossible to film a number of railroad scenes called for by the script, production of "Ruth of the Rockies," the fifteen episode serial in which Ruth Roland is to make her seventh appearance as a Palace star, is still up to its time schedule and it appears certain that the picture will be completed before August.

While the Ruth Roland unit is working at the Astra studios, in Glendale, Pathe's other West Coast producing company, making the serial in which Charles Hutchison is to star, is at the Brunton studios.

Hope Loring Has Man-sized Job on Coast

Hope Loring, a slip of a girl, has one of the hardest, man-sized jobs in the entire motion picture industry. She is production manager of serial, western and short reel features at Universal City and has complete charge of six of the most important producing units at the big studio. Her job entails the selection of stories for six stars, the arduous task of keeping six directors "shooting" on schedule, and the thankless business of passing final judgment on the films when they are ready for the screen.

Metro Changes Its Schedule

"The Best of Luck" Will Be the First Out of Drury Lane Plays

Under a rearrangement of its releasing schedule, Metro Pictures Corporation returns to its original intention of issuing "The Best of Luck" as the first of its five all star picturizations of famous Drury Lane melodramas. The Best of Luck" was the first of this quintet to be put in production, but suffered a slight delay in the making by reason of the extra time required in shooting a series of submarine scenes.

These scenes underwater, photographed with the aid of a diving bell, sub-surface lights and other elaborate paraphernalia, have been finished to the entire satisfaction of Richard A. Rowland, president, and other officials of Metro, who, after viewing "The Best of Luck" at a private projection declared it in every respect worthy of the distinction of being the first of the Drury Lane plays to reach the public.

Kathryn Adams, Jack Holt, Lionel Stander and Fred Malatesta are featured at the head of the all-star cast interpreting "The Best of Luck" for the screen. Miss Adams was selected for the role of Leslie MacKendrick, an intrepid Scottish girl because of her willingness and ability to undertake a number of thrilling stunts which placed her in grave peril more than once during the filming of the production, it is stated by Metro in the following announcement.

"Of course, in the course of the unfolding of the plot of 'The Best of Luck,' Miss Adams makes several airplane flights; she rides a high-powered motorcycle at night at breakneck speed, winding up by dashing madly across a narrow suspension bridge that spans a chasm; she submerges in an undersea craft and engages in a terrific physical conflict with Fred Malatesta in one of the tremendous scenes of the melodrama."

Holmes Sails to Take More Travelogues

Burton Holmes, author, lecturer and creator of the Paramount Travel pictures bearing his name, sailed recently on the Royal George for Cherbourg, as the initial step of another film expedition. Mr. Holmes' first destination is Jerusalem. From Jerusalem he will travel to Constantinople and possibly Spain, Italy and Switzerland.

Robert F. Roden Resigns from Universal Staff

Robert F. Roden, assistant to John C. Brownell, Universal's scenario chief, has resigned to devote his time to the writing of original stories, continuities and reconstruction work. His resignation was reluctantly accepted.

Lewis Gasnier Directs "Kismet"

FOR the first time since organizing his own company, Lewis J. Gasnier, head of Gasnier Productions, will take the stage and assume personal direction of the coming production of "Kismet" with Otis Skinner in the leading role. Announcement of Mr. Gasnier as director for "Kismet" is made by Robertson-Cole, which will distribute the picture.

Mr. Gasnier, who was schooled under French masters of the motion picture before he left France, and who later directed American stars, has been in New York in conference with Mr. Senara, who appeared for three years in "Kismet," in which he had the central role of "Hadjii." All arrangements have been made, and the director and the famous stage star will soon begin work.

Exhibitors who were interested by the Robertson-Cole announcement that it has engaged Mr. Skinner to appear in "Kismet" will feel a further satisfaction in the contract obtaining the services of Mr. Gasnier as personal director. They can sense the personal approach, a production personally directed by Mr. Gasnier from the artistic successes of such pictures on the studio as "The Beloved Chalet" and "The Butterfly Man."

"There has never come to my attention a stage play more adaptable for motion picture purposes, than "Kismet,"" says Mr. Gasnier. The story with its delirious blending of light and shadow, its wealth of delicious humor, and the whimsical figure of "Hadjii," the role played by Mr. Skinner, has tremendous screen value. Then, too, the rich, picturesque atmosphere of the land of the Arabian Nights, and the premise that the hero may take his pick on the screen finding an expression that will enhance the dramatic value of the film, is an unfulfilled dream of the author, and again united with the magic power of the motion picture.

"In producing "Kismet" every care will be taken to give only the best. Players of unquestioned ability will support Mr. Skinner, and if necessary we will send to New York for those who appeared in the original play."

Great attention will be paid to the detail and we have already secured the services of Mr. Frank Capra, one of the leading art directors in motion pictures, who is now on his way to New York with a view to securing some unusual material for settings to be used in "Kismet."

"Every way possible, the main purpose in transferring this beautiful play to the screen, will be to retain the spirit and the soul of its "Kismet."

Mr. Gasnier has scored the greatest triumph of any actor on the legitimate stage," concluded Mr. Robertson-Cole.

Mr. Gasnier is declared to be peculiarly fitted to supervise the filming of "Kismet" because of his knowledge of both stage and screen technique.

Lloyd Starts on Second Series

HAROLD LLOYD has started on his second series of multiple-reel comedies for distribution by Pathé. The inauguration of this new series by its star comedian, under the auspices of the Pathe Film Company, is made the occasion of the publication of a lengthy statement by Pathé Exchange, Inc. The statement which follows announces the title of the first of the new series as being "High and Dry." "Having risen to a preeminent position as the leading exponent of the better type of comedy, in two reel productions, through the sheer merit of high ability and the big financial outlay for production by the Kalem Film Company, Harold Lloyd has embarked on his second series of multiple reels for distribution by Pathé. High and Dry is the title of the Lloyd production that will inaugurate the second series of short malapropisms. His return to leadership in the field of comedy is needed, it will be supplied by "High and Dry," which, from all reports, has received from the Kalem studio, where the picture has just been completed, is the best comedy Lloyd has ever made."

"While the books for the second Lloyd series have virtually just been thrown open, it is a foregone conclusion that almost every prominent exhibitor in the United States will be playing them. Already such outstanding names as the following are subscribed among the exhibitor patrons of the new Lloyd series: the Strand, Bowes, and Loew's, of New York; the Bijou, Keith's, of Philadelphia, Harris of Pittsburgh, Gurney, of Cleveland, Show of New York, Theatre of Denver, Keith of New York, and scores of others as representative in their territories as are exhibitors just named."

"This list is growing daily, and the thousands of exhibitors who have marked among their number such impressive comedies as Bumping into Broadway, Harriet Spook, Captain Kidd's Kids, His Royal Sneaks, From Hand to Mouth, and An Eastern Westerner, will be augmented by other thousands."

"Lloyd has reached the stage in his career wherein his comedies are being featured in one after another. His definite value as a box office attraction has been established, and exhibitors through their enthusiasm are substantiating this fact. The reason for this definite box office value is set for in a remarkable distinction Lloyd in the following editorial comment appearing in the New York Times of Sunday, May 9th."

"Those Harold Lloyd comedies—a word about them. Spectacles have seen His Royal Sneaks, Harriet Spook, and last week An Eastern Westerner. There has been more laughter and better laughter on Broadway because of them than would have been otherwise. Because they are funny. Every one must admit that, who are bored by the usual slapstick as well as those to whom horse play is the final word. Some parts of them may be a little too full of the rough and tumble stuff for some spectators, and some parts may be too subtle to provoke the guffaws of another, but take them all, and just as soon as it becomes too silly to be amusing for some, Mr. Lloyd will do something really original, and they will laugh in boisterous relief; and then, just as the comedy is becoming so desirable that people are beginning to ask what it is all about, Mr. Lloyd will smash something or break his neck and they will rear in blatan satisfaction."

A situation in "The Little Cafe," starring Max Linder, which is for Pathé distribution.
First Run Exhibitors

Book "Sagebrusher"

Frank L. Newman, Kansas City showman and general manager, Milton P. Held, have booked for immediate presentation at their Regent theater: Benjamin B. Hampton's "Emerson Hough" production, "The Sagebrusher," the W. W. Hodkinson release.

Ben Botsky, Hodkinson Kansas City manager, also contracted for a late May week's showing of "The Sagebrusher," with G. L. Hooper, managing director of Topeka's big first-run house, the Isis. Other big Kansas first-run bookings on "The Sagebrusher" are the Electric, Emporia, the Star, Newton, the Empress, Fort Scott and the Noveltie, Winfield.

Billie Burke to Star in Paramount Comic

Marking a departure from the type of plays in which she has been appearing, the first picture which Billie Burke will make when under her new contract for a series of Paramount Artcraft pictures will be "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," an adaptation of the comedy by Clyde Fitch, which, when it was first produced in 1902, was one of that season's successes.

"Movie Madness" Next Hallroom Comedy

The moving picture craze will be the basis of the theme for the next Hallroom Boys comedy, according to an announcement from Jack and Harry Coen, producers of these two-reelers. "Movie Madness" is the title of this picture.

Julien Josephson Signs Up

F. P.-Lasky Puts Scenarist of Past Successes Under Contract

JULIEN JOSEPHSON, one of the most successful scenario writers in the profession, has just been engaged under a long-term contract to write original stories for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Josephson will have his headquarters at the West Coast studio of the organization.

Those who have seen the Thomas H. Ince productions in which Charles Ray starred for Paramount Arctraft, will recall that many of the most pleasing of those pictures were written by Mr. Josephson. These include "The Hired Man," "Bill Henry," "Crooked Straight," "The Egg Crate Wallaby," "Hay Foot, Straw Foot," "Playing the Game," "String Beams," "Paris Green," and "Red Hot Dollars." He also wrote "Fuss and Feathers" for Enid Bennett.

Mr. Josephson declares that one of his strongest motives for becoming affiliated with Famous Players-Lasky organization was the assurance that the highest possible quality of production would be recorded in his stories. He came to the screen world from the marts of trade, and in the beginning he feared that numerous others had made in their early careers of trying to write on subjects with which he was unfamiliar.

"When," said Mr. Josephson, "I started writing about the small towns people, among whom I had been born and bred and with whose world I am so entirely familiar, I found that the producers and the public alike were willing to accept these stories. I intend to adhere to this original idea, though I will naturally broaden my scope, and the characterizations I will provide for the stars selected will be of the purely human type, always marked by droll comedy.

Metro Exchangesmen Meet

District and Branch Managers Convene in Annual Get-Together

THE annual get-together convention of the branch managers, district managers and special representatives of the Metro Pictures Corporation was held this week in New York City. The gathering met at the Hotel Astor on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 26th, 27th and 28th, for a discussion of the company's plans and to render reports on the year's business, while for the leisure hours of the visiting film salesmen, Metro provided an elaborate schedule of entertainment designed to appeal to every taste.

Metro's announced determination to maintain its high place in the industry this year was the keynote of the convention. The company's production policy and general expansion will also be outlined to the visiting exchange managers, and subjects such as the contemplated new booking arrangement and adjustment of the first rental versus percentage system of releasing pictures was threshed out in detail.

Joy Comedy Company

Busy in Florida

According to a statement just received from Nathan Hirsch, president of The Aywon Film Corporation, the various members of the Joy Comedy company are busily engaged in Florida completing the series of fifteen two-reel Joy Comedies which the Aywon organization is state righting. In addition to working on the series of two-reelers Mr. Hirsch is having made what seems destined to be a decided novelty in the way of films. His players are now making a five reel travesty on a well known film drama that has recently created a sensation.

Von Stroheim Ready to Start on Another

Erich von Stroheim, Universal director, has returned to Universal City after a month passed in New York supervising the final editing of his latest screen production, "The Devil's Pass Key," and immediately upon arrival at the post he will begin work upon a new picture, the third under his contract with Universal.

Although he had not made public the details of the projected picture, it is known that it will be laid in Europe.

Louise Glau Picture

Ready This Week

The Louise Glau company under the direction of Wesley Ruggles has just returned from a week's location trip to Coronado, where excellent scenes for the Glau's latest shot J. Parker Read Jr. production were "shot." The company are back at the studio finishing the remaining interiors. The picture, it is expected, will be completed this week.

Walter Long Is Cast

in Character Part

Walter Long, one of the most talented character actors on the screen, makes his debut in Marshall Neelan Productions, in the third independent production of the young director. Mr. Long, according to the Neelan offices, has one of the most unusual characters in this picture, ever disclosed on the screen.
Lillian Gish Leaves D.W. Griffith

Star Signed by Frohman Company for Three Years

Lillian Gish, who, during her entire screen career appeared under the direction of David W. Griffith, has severed her relations with the Griffith organization and signed a contract with the Frohman Amusement Corporation, to star in productions to be supplied to exhibitors by that company for a period of three years. This announcement has upset a tradition which was considered inviolable, namely, that Miss Gish would, during the balance of her screen career, appear solely under the Griffith management.

The severance of her business relationship with the Griffith organization was determined only after numerous conferences between Albert Gray, representing both Mr. Griffith and Miss Gish, and William L. Sterritt, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, in face of the liberal attitude of Mr. Sterritt and the advantageous terms of the contract. Mr. Griffith did not feel that he was justified in standing in the star's way.

Miss Gish was born at Springfield, Ohio, in 1889, and inaugurated her stage career at the age of six. It was Mr. Griffith who engaged her for the Biograph studio and went with her to Reliance-Majestic Fine Arts. Here was the featured part in every big Griffith production and exhibitors and the public associate her extraordinary ability and marked service with "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World," "The Great Lover," "The Greatest Thing in Life," "Romance of Holy Valley," "The Heart," "The Greatest Question" and "Broken Blossoms."

The Frohman Amusement Corporation will probably only special productions in which Miss Gish is to be starred, and the entire investment will be in keeping with her stature. Indeed, there will be no more than five productions a year; the first production to be commenced between August 1st, and August 15th, 1920, after the completion of Miss Gish's services in "The American" under the management of Mr. Griffith.

William L. Sterritt, President of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, waxed exceedingly enthusiastic concerning Miss Gish. He said: "I have been considering every available star in motion pictures and never have I come down to but three, and Miss Gish is the first one of the trio with whom I opened negotiations because of her sweetness, her unique and inherent dramatic ability places her in a class entirely above. Exhibitors and the public may expect that we will be exceedingly cautious in picking the vehicles in which Miss Gish is to appear, for the mind the necessity of dramatic productions that will permit the public to have the full benefit of her talents. Miss Gish possesses every qualification that justly stamps her as the most splendid dramatic ingenue in America and the world."

"This announcement is merely the first of several that we hope to offer the whole exchange system and each of them will be in line with our announced policy of 'Bigger and Better Productions' and a time in. We expect to have two producing units in the east and two in the west and whether Miss Gish will appear in a picture in New York or Los Angeles depends upon the story in which she is to appear."

New Exchange Opens June 20

Educational Films Corporation will inaugurate its own releases through its own exclusive short subject film exchange. According to announcement of E. W. Hammonts, vice-president and general manager of the company, the exchange will be opened by that date the various offices will be able to serve exhibitors.

Associated with Educational in these exchanges and participating in the ownership of the individual territorial offices are some of the most important exhibitor interests which, it is said, assures first run in the greatest group of theatres ever made available for a single company's short subject product.

Even greater stress is placed Educational on the fact that since these non-repurchasing leading theatres will be vitally concerned that the exchanges in which they are interested handle the best product, and that their association represents a careful study of the product to be offered and the soundness of Educational's financial basis. A number of the interests affiliated with Educational in its various exchanges supplies a list of theaters that, it is said, will be hard to equal. For instance, Robert Leiber, chief owner of the Circle theatres, is interested in the Indianapolis exchange. In Detroit, J. H. Kunsky, owner of one of the finest theatre systems in the whole country, is the partner of Educational in the Michigan exchange and is ready to control the theatre situation in the twin cities area. The Educational exchange in the Minneapolis territory.

Pittsburgh's leading theatres are represented by Rowland and Clark. In Chicago, Balaban and Katz, who have in the past few years built probably the finest group of motion picture theatres in the whole world, are participants in the exchange ownership, and a great share of the releases will be seen in the theaters, Central Park, and other fine houses. In Des Moines and Omaha, A. H. Blank, who has invested millions in new houses in the past few years, will be interested. In Louisville, Col. Levy is part owner of the exchange, which Mr. Whiteside, Philadelphia, Harry O. Schwallie is devoting a considerable portion of his time toward Educational's short subject exchange.

On the coast Sol. Lesser will share the exchange supply with Pan-American, southern California and Arizona. Mr. Lesser now conducts the Niles, Los Angeles, and will direct the new three-million-dollar theater. In San Francisco Turner and Dahnke, one of the largest exhibitor organizations in the entire country shares in the ownership. The northwest territory will have the participation of N. L. Van Herberg. As a matter of fact recital of the names of those having interests in the various territories continues to list leading names in each territory.

While all of the signed contracts have not yet reached New York, it is from the great Klaw & Erlanger legitimate success of the same name.
Original Title to Be Kept
To Retain "The House of Toys" as Name of American Film Production

DESPITE some pressure brought to bear for a change of title for "The House of Toys," the American Film Company has decided to retain the title given by its author, Harry Ross Miller. It was argued that the name might suggest a story venturing on the juvenile, when in fact it is a dramatic portrayal of the vital, thrilling problems, which enter into every home founded by a young man and maiden who love each other.

"Is your husband true?" is the keynote of the plot, yet, according to the American Film Co., it is not the usual "other woman" or "vamp" story. "With searching analysis the director, George L. Cox, following the lead of the author, who, by the way, is a practicing lawyer in Pittsburgh, Pa., points to the season for the first divergence between husband and wife," states the American Film Company, "and shows how and why the chasm widens between them. The drama shows how a good woman with eyes that see not and ears that hear not, works steadily toward her own disillusion and the loss of love and home and husband. It shows how a good man, not a profligate nor a sensualist, fellowing the flight of restlessness in his soul, builds, not for the girl he swore to keep and cherish, but for another who understood and met his longing for sympathy and home in its highest sense."

"One critic said, Folks who like to see baskets of blood will not like "The House of Toys". True, in it there is nothing of the melodramatic, nothing scolding, nothing undeveloped that might start rending emotion, with the tragedy of a broken home avowed by a hair's breadth, a hair's breadth which is sufficient, however, for a happy ending."

"A special which all women will want to see," says S. S. Hutchinson, President of the American Film Company, "but just as surely it is a special which all men will want to see, for the problems presented are questions of humanity and not of sex, though sex plays an important part in the beginning and development and ending. It is a constructive drama which holds the audience in tense interest."

Metro Promises Many Laughs in New Farce
Metro's all-star picturization of "Parlor, Bedroom, and Bath," the boudoir comedy by C. W. Bell and Mark Swin, which ran on Broadway, promises to develop far more laughs than did the original stage production, according to reports from Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, where the production is being made.

Finishing touches are being added to the picture this week. It was prepared for the screen by Miss Mathis and A. P. Younger. W. M. Esmond is the cameraman, and Sidney Ulman designed and executed the special art interiors.

Among the cast are Eugene Paullette, who played in "Faith and Wrong," and Ruth Stonehouse, who plays a dealer in society scandals for a daily newspaper, and Kathleen Kirkham. Both these young ladies, according to reports from Metro, will surprise the fans with a variety of elaborate costumes. Edward Dillon is directing the production.

Mon Randall to Draw Universal Stars
Mon Randall, noted pen and ink artist, whose sketches of motion picture stars are familiar to many fans, is now confiding to reproducing the features and characteristics of Universal players. All future Universal advertising will be illuminated by Randall's drawings, and some unusually brilliant work may be expected from this artist now that he is at work at the studio and able to sketch the Universal stars from life.

Foreign Studio Is Ready
Famous Players Expects to Start "Shooting" in English Studio Soon

The London studio of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., is ready for the beginning of production activities, according to advice received from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. No announcement has been made as to the first story to be filmed, but it is expected that work will be begun in the near future.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has the following to say about its new producing plant:

"The new studio in which Paramount pictures will be filmed is brassied by London experts as one of the most complete and best equipped studios in the world. In size it compares very favorably with the largest English pictures in its sufficient room having been provided on two stages for the filming of five large productions at one time. A modern electric lighting system is used which will provide a strong under the direction of Hugh Ford will find many features in studio equipment not duplicated on this side of the Atlantic."

"The transformation of an old and disused structure in Islington, which served for many years as the central power-station of a large London electric power company, is generally acknowledged as accomplishing the almost impossible. The work of converting the power plant into a modern studio was in charge of Major H. H. Bell, a prominent London engineer, who is said, found the task of transformation one of the most difficult engineering feats he had ever attempted. This task was made doubly difficult when the London County Council ruled that the work of reconstruction should be conducted under the regulations required for theater-building instead of those applying to factories. This ruling was at variance with other decisions handed down by the council and an enormous burden to those already carried by the company."

One of the characters who appears to unusual advantage in Metro's "Burning Daylight" is Helen Ferguson.

Pathe Product Sold in Latin America
Francisco di Domenico, senior partner of Domenico Hermanos and Cia of Bogota, Columbia, S. A., has contracted for the Pathe productions for several years to come in the territories of Colombia, Venezuela, Central America, Panama, including the Canal Zone, Jamaica, Guiana, the Lesser Antilles and Hayti.

Mr. di Domenico said that his organization is already in control of a chain of theatres in Colombia and work would soon be started on several new theatres. The great theatre of the company in Barranquilla has a seating capacity of 6,000, and it is the intension of the owners to increase it to 12,000.
Christie Comedies for Educational Release

Scores of congratulations were received during the past week by E. W. Hammons, vice president and general manager of Educational Films Co., on acquiring distribution rights of Christie Comedies, which was announced last week in the Motion Picture News. Many of these hailed the deal as the first release.

“Miss Caroline” will be released by Hal Roach. However, the feature player who played the lead, Ann Blyth, is the featured player while the cast includes Basil Rathbone, James Cagney, and Bert Lahr. The picture has been generally well received by adult audiences.

Helie Berc, one of the leading female stars of the industry, has been cast in the lead in the new picture, “The Woman’s Club.” The story is a romantic comedy and is the first picture in which she has appeared since her marriage.

Bert, the leading male star of the industry, has been cast in the lead in the new picture, “The Man from Nowhere.” The story is a romantic comedy and is the first picture in which he has appeared since his marriage.

Goldwyn-Bray Acquires Wild Bird Pictures

A recent visit to New York by William L. Finley, nationally known as a naturalist, has resulted in the Goldwyn-Bray organization acquiring 16,000 feet of Mr. Finley’s motion pictures of wild bird and animal life. The pictures represent the work of Mr. Finley and his wife for the past three years. The work of Mr. Finley is unique, as he is an accomplished painter and photographer who has traveled extensively in the world. Through his painting work, a careful record has been compiled on the motion picture screen of the actual conditions under which wild birds and animals live.

Unusual Exploitation for Brentwood Film

Some unusual angles of exploitation have been mapped out by Robinson-Cole on The Heart of a Woman’s. The Brentwood Film Co., soon to be released, featuring Zasu Pitts, the distinctive little actress of quantities of motion picture parts. The exploitation section of the campaign book which has been issued on this picture shows a dozen ways in which exhibitors can exploit the picture, with a minimum of expense, and exhibitors who give consideration to the plans outlined will glean a little extra dollars into their pockets, say the producers.

Bebe Daniels New Realart Star

MORRIS Kohn announces another leading woman for Realart under the Realart banner. This time it is Bebe Daniels, who has attracted considerable attention lately in leading roles for Cecil B. DeMille productions and with Wallace Reid in several of his most recent pictures.

The new star is the fifth in the Realart gallery. The announcement that she has been signed comes within a few months of the deal by which Wanda Hawley was added to the Realart list and just as the company’s sales force had concluded the largest of the formation’s successful campaigns of motion picture history in behalf of Miss Hawley’s first picture.

Announcement of the new star was made by Morris Kohn, president of Realart, to the managers at their recent convention in conjunction with the Los Angeles Record and Sid Grauman to obtain material to be cast in forthcoming Thomas H. Ince pictures. This innovation has given marked impetus to the exhibitors that have been incensed with the announcements that have been made for the star of the year. Hal Roach has been cast in “The Man from Nowhere,” and the new star of the year is expected to be one of the top stars in the industry.

Bebe Daniels, who will soon be elevated to stardom in Realart pictures, is a naturalist, with a gentle style of acting. She is the type of girl who is attractive to all ages, and her picture will be a hit with the public.

Metroites Arrive In New York

WITH the arrival of Bert Lytell, star and June Mathis, leading lady, Metro has completed its roster of leading stars. The girls have arrived in New York from Hollywood, where they have been working for the past six months. The two stars have been working together for several years and have become very close friends.

Miss Mathis heads the scenario department and Metro generally regards her as the one to go to in the selection and adaptation of plays. She has just completed the scenario of “Hispanic Alice Trumps,” the latest of the Drury Lane melodramas by Cecil Raleigh, which is under production in California.

Mrs. Zellner was met at the station by her husband, Arthur, who came to New York in April to assist Maxwell Karger. The Zellers had just bought a house in Hollywood when Mr. Zellner was called to New York. Now the Zellers will be permanently in New York. They came to New York from the South several years ago and started work together in motion picture advertising. Since then each has done more than a score of motion picture stories.

Mrs. Zellner’s last picture was “A Misfit Wife,” an adaptation of Julie Herne’s drama. Mrs. Zellner expects the first picture she will supervise here will be “Polly with a Past,” the George Middleton-Guy Bolton drama which scored such a success in the Relache production starring Ina Claire on the stage. The Metro production of “Polly with a Past” will be presented and the signature Ina Claire’s screen debut.
Ray's Choice Pleases Cohan

George M. Predicts Success of Film Version of His Stage Play

GEORGE M. COHAN, the actor-playwright, expressed extreme gratification over the picturization of his well known comedy-drama, "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," in a letter this week to Charles Ray, who is now engaged in Los Angeles adapting the famous stage piece to the screen. The Cohan play is the first of the new series of big photoplays in which Arthur Kane is presenting the star for First National release.

"It is with the greatest pleasure," wrote Mr. Cohan to the First National star, "that I learn you are now working on the picture version of my play, 'Forty-five Minutes from Broadway.' As one of the most popular of my dramatic pieces to reach the screen I am gratified to find the play in such capable hands, with every prospect of reaching the public in a form which does credit to the traditions of the piece and to the favor it has enjoyed.

"I have no doubt that your final result will give to the public one of those distinctly different and high-class film characterizations which do so much to raise the plane of the cinema art in the estimation of intelligent people. It seems to me that the story and action of 'Forty-five Minutes from Broadway' are eminently suited to an entertaining and high-standard photoplay production."

"It is particularly gratifying to know that the leading role of my play is being undertaken by a screen actor who enjoys the affection and confidence of his audiences. I can think of no other man now in the films to whom I would rather entrust this stage character of my own creation, which has become, through long theatrical association, very dear to me. Allow me to extend my very best wishes on the photoplay production of 'Forty-five Minutes from Broadway."

Serial Is Making Progress

Pathe May Advance Release Date of Juanita Hansen Production

PRODUCTION of the fifteen episode serial in which Juanita Hansen will appear as a Pathe star has made such rapid progress at the Seitz Studio, where scenes for the thirteenth episode are now being stage under the direction of Bertram Millhauser, that it is probable the picture will be advanced on the release chart, and may be issued in August instead of October as originally intended.

"The Phantom Foe" is the finished title designated for the picture, which was written for the Hansen by George B. Seitz. The scenario was done by Frank Leon Smith, who wrote "Bound and Gagged" and other Pathe Serial plays.

Juanita Hansen started work on "The Phantom Foe," the first week in January, but though everything was in readiness at the Seitz plant, there was considerable delay at the beginning of the producing because Warner Oland, who heads the cast, had not completed his work in "The Third Eye," at the Astra studios in California. However, Mr. Oland more than made up for time lost, and soon caught up to the rest of the company, which had already made many scenes.

Information from the Pathe Home Office, where some of the early episodes have been shown, is to the effect that the Juanita Hansen vehicle is a mystery romance of the type popularized by George B. Seitz at the outset of his career as a Pathe serial producer.
“Chet” Withey in Ranks of Masters

GRiffITH pupils" were at one time numerous and had his enough in the motion picture ranks. And while "Griffith pupils" loved the old master well enough to recall the description, at the same time there was always the hungering desire to be recognized and appreciated for the work they had done in contributing to the advancement of the screen art.

To "Chet" Withey the task of being a "Griffith pupil" was made especially trying. "Chet" gained his early directorial experience on the Griffith lot; absorbed the Griffith art, became a favored member under the Griffith wing, and added his share to the productions that were being praised for their art and succeeding because they were also under the supervision of David Griffith.

And then "Chet" reached the point where his name alone was sufficient to guarantee the production that bore it. But here's the rub—and the reason why "Chet" had his enough in the motion picture ranks. "Chet" went there was certain to be someone who strode up and down the stage repeating what compliment you on your work in such-and-such a picture. Mr. Griffith, I am a devoted admirer of your art.

It didn't happen only once or twice. But day in and day out in Los Angeles and on Times Square, father to being quiet and take the praise intended for Griffith and hear good words for himself only incidentally, or else make explanations that only enfused the person talking to him.

For "Chet" Withey's physical resemblance to David Griffith is uncanny. But with the passing of time the similarity of features has been supplanted by a resemblance of a different sort. "Chet", while following his father in the world of the professional field, has been establishing a new link of association with the immortal Griffith in the high order of products that he has been turning out until at the present time the resemblance between these two mastered for some a similarity in achievements rather than a likeness of countenance.

A glance at the pedigree of the well-known "Chet" Withey shows that his rise to the foremost ranks of the megaphone artists was not a case of one projected into fame overnight. "Chet" missed none of the runs in his climb to the top of the ladder, and by the same token he has established with greater security his superiority over some of his less talented fellows whose names have flared into prominence one brilliant stroke and have as quickly been snuffed out by the effects of subsequent mediocre work. With a working career as a miner in Arizona, Measure pay and ambition to enter fields other than the drama, Withey, at the tender years of a "Chet" dissatisfied with his surroundings and accordingly he threw up his job and started out. He landed in Los Angeles and here began his theatrical activities which were eventually to lead him to his present position of prestige.

Like so many others who have achieved success in the picture game, "Chet" served his apprenticeship on the stage. He took a job as an actor, his specialty being the role of "heavy." "Chet" liked it better than mining, but he was on the alert for something else. The chance came, and he turned to the writing of scenarios. This was more than ever to his liking, and he made considerable success at it. Then Fine Arts-Triangle pictures at Hollywood were the scene of his earlier efforts. Next he was assigned to do some directorial work. He made good, showed evidences of marked skill and went to it with a vengeance under the guiding hand of Griffith who was then supervising Fine Arts productions. "Chet" had found his sphere at last and to the perfection of his work he devoted all his talents and ability.

Besides Fine Arts some of the older concerns with which "Chet" was associated in the earlier days were the American, Keystone and the Reliance-Majestic. His initial effort, as a director for Triangle was "The Devil's Needles" which starred Norma Talmadge and cast Tully Marshall in the opposite role. "The Old Folks at Home" followed and is still recalled by the voters as a "wallaper." Among the other productions of this period which "Chet" Withey directed were "The Wharf Rat," "Mr. Goodwin, the Samaritan," "The Village Prodigal" and "Madame Bo-Peep."

He next joined the directorial forces of the Vitagraph company and among his pictures under the Vitagraph banner comes "An Alabaster Box." Then followed his masterpiece, " little best known work under this auspices is "The Hun Within." This picture won universal praise and added another "Chet" Withey's reputation more than ever. His work for Paramount included "Maggie Pepper," "Little Comrade" and "The Teeth of the Tiger." More recently he directed First National in Deal with British Company

As a result of negotiations which have been in progress for several months, the productions of the First National Exhibitors Circuit will be distributed in the United Kingdom by the Walthard Company, Ltd. A contract has been entered into between David P. Howells, Ltd., foreign representatives of First National and Walthard whose First National Attractions for two years go to the Walthard Company for distribution in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales. It is said that the contract aggregates in excess of $2,500,000.00.

Joins the Unity League

Los Angeles Branch Established Includes Prominent Picture Men

Anglo-American friendship was yielded in Los Angeles last week by the organization of a Los Angeles chapter of the Unity League, in which more than 100 prominent professional, literary and film men were enrolled, it is stated. Arthur Levy, chairman of the national executive committee of the league, announced at the meeting, which was called by Arthur Letts of Los Angeles, that a Unity League publication and news film would be launched to further the "friendship propaganda" of the two nations.

Through the courtesy of R. V. MacFarland, west coast manager of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, scenes at the luncheon and meeting of the organization were filmed for the new film weekly. Cameraman Harold Lipstein of the Mayflower studios was placed at the disposal of the league chairman.

Mayer Snyder of Los Angeles, former Lieutenant-Governor A. J. Wallace of California, Dean MacCormack, Rl. Rev. Joseph H. Johnson, Congressman Joseph Martin, Senator Frank Flinn, managing editors of the Los Angeles dailies, representatives of the Los Angeles Ad Club, film studios and American Legion, were among the notable guests, according to the Mayflower announcement.

Allan Dwan, director-producer, whose features are being presented by Mayflower, has in course of production, an allegorical film, "Friendship," produced on behalf of the Anglo-American movement, which is to be exhibited free throughout the United States and parts of the British Empire.

Chairman Arthur Levy has announced that the Prince of Wales, Lord Northcliff, Frank Vanderbilt, Melville Stone and the executive committee of the Motion Picture Industry of America have signified their approval of the plans and purposes of the Unity League.

Quick Trip to Get Contract

From New York to Los Angeles and Back on Next Train to Buy Story

J. R. Grainger, eastern representative of Marshall Neilan Productions, left Grand Central Station, New York, Wednesday evening of last week, to spend a few hours in Los Angeles and take the next train back to Manhattan, says the Marshall Neilan office.

Mr. Grainger goes to the West Coast to consult with Mr. Neilan and obtain his signature to a contract which involves the picturization of one of the most famous stories of international prominence, it is stated. This is made necessary by the stipulations in an option on this story held by the Neilan organization and which expires May 29th. The demand for this story among film producers is said to be so great that should the Neilan company fail to take advantage of its option, the rights would be closed within a few hours thereafter, according to the Neilan headquarters. Arriving in Los Angeles on Monday afternoon, Mr. Grainger takes the next train back to New York. He will spend seventeen hours in Los Angeles and return to New York on the morning of the 29th, traveling 184 hours out of 201.

Although the title of the story is not made public, it was stated at the New York offices of the Neilan organization, that the subject is a famous novel of international popularity which has had several elaborate stage presentations here and abroad during the past twenty years. Mr. Neilan plans to produce the story in the very near future, taking scenes in several eastern localities in the United States and then staging the major part of the plot abroad when he arrives there next August. Marion Fairfax will prepare the script and has already begun to lay out the work of adapting the plot to the screen. This work in itself is expected to take over a month. As soon as the deal is closed, Harry Ham, Mr. Neilan's foreign representative, now in London, will be cabled instructions to start making arrangements for the taking of what are expected to be the most elaborate sets since "In Tol-tolerance."

Free Booklet to Exhibitors

Hodkinson Analyzes Industry in Pamphlet Issued for Showmen

W. W. Hodkinson has published for free distribution to the exhibitors of the country a pamphlet which he calls "An Appeal to Common Sense." The pamphlet deals in a brief and lucid manner with present conditions in the industry. Mr. Hodkinson's contention is that many of the evils which now beset motion picture theatre owners arise from the fact that the same financial interests control producing and distributing.

Mr. Hodkinson says that under the system now followed by producer-distributor all the picture failures are charged as a debit against the exhibitor, thereby saddling him with the cost of unfortunate experiments. An independent distributing agency forcing the producer to bear the cost of failures on his own shoulders is one of the remedies proposed by Mr. Hodkinson.

"I hope," said Mr. Hodkinson, "that the exhibitors of the country will read the booklet, for it embodies the observations and experiences of many years together with the sincere desire to help the exhibitor out of his present difficulties."

Saturday Openings Popular

Exhibitors Find Change from Sunday Openings to be Beneficial

Saturday openings for the exhibitors running pictures in week-end localities will become popular among exhibitors, according to Marshall Neilan, who has discussed the matter with some of the most prominent exhibitors in this country. Such exhibitors as the Sackner Amusement Company in the South and the New York organization on the West Coast have adopted the policy of opening their shows on Saturday with notable financial results.

In discussing the matter recently, Mr. Neilan said: "I do not wish to be quoted on anything that would indicate that I am telling exhibitors how to run their business. I am a producer and do not pretend to be able to give advice in connection with the exhibiting branch. "At the same time, I have wondered often why the policy of opening week-end motion picture shows on Sunday has remained such a universal practice throughout the country. I am convinced that the time is not far distant when the Sunday opening will cease to be such a fixed policy."

THE SECOND OF THE SENSATIONALLY SUCCESSFUL TWO REEL
The remarkable newspaper tie-up has given to these comedies a unique and tremendous drawing power. There's a newspaper in practically every section of the country that features the inimitable comics. That means great publicity and ready-made audiences. Those who have shown the first have found it so. Ask the nearest Pathe exchange to show you this comedy.

There seems to be a vogue of five red comedies which the exhibitor may view as a fashion not failing to exist any great length of time. But while the fashion is popular opportunities are offered for casing in with these novelties by presenting them in a novel manner.

"Everything But the Truth" is broad comedy, leaving the way clear to all manner of extravagant humor with free use of "hokum" stunts advisable. The stars, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, are well known to your patrons and you therefore do not need to dwell on their names further than to announce in all your advertising who the featured players are in the film, directing your selling argument to the end of convincing your patrons that the film is of unusual value, with emphasis laid on the fact that it is of multiple reel length. Your attempt should be to bring the production up above the stars in the minds of the public, whereas in any ordinary two reel comedy the thing to feature would be the stars themselves. To do this will require more than the average advertising in all lines. If you run a dramatic subject on the same bill perhaps advisable since many patrons of theatres are not satisfied with an all comedy program devote all your energies to the comedy, relegating the dramatic subject to the inevitable of being given a comedy. Since a comedy appeals almost entirely from the incident and stunts contained, with its story of small value, you should, therefore, play up the business which in your mind will go over at your theatre. It will be necessary to advise your public to some extent concerning these scenes. For this purpose you should pick out the sequences occurring after Billy and Annabelle have been detained at the "lunatic asylum," making sure that your selling talk, whatever form it may be in, makes clear that two sane people are kidnapped by a lunatic who thinks he is the prior of a madhouse. Give your people a pretty accurate idea of the sort of trouble your characters get mixed up in through this episode.

For secondary advertising angles you can dwell on the reputation achieved by the stars in the five years they have been presenting comedy pictures, mentioning some of their two reel successes that you think will be remembered by your fans, recall by statement that these players are the originators of the "Hokum" stunts used by you on the screen, suggesting that they have never been successfully imitated, mention the fact that this is their first multiple reel feature and give people a chance to define the quality of the production by referring to the other five red comedies, such as "Tillie's Punctured Romance," "Down on the Farm," etc; call attention to the well known players in the cast, among whom is Ann Cornell, who is being touted as one of the finds of the year and promise many human touches which are not often found in any low comedy and which give "Everything But the Truth" class and distinction.

Mention may be made of the fact that the picture is presented by Lyons and Moran and that the story is by Edgar Franklin, a well known writer for the screen. If you care to take advantage of it, there is opportunity for the use of some snappy subtitles which would attract attention and have double meanings, and are intended to get their laughs on this basis.

You may promote the good photography, lots of action and good direction.

SUGGESTIONS FOR OUTSIDE ADVERTISING

Since nothing you may do within reason will attract attention to the dates you will play this picture will be out of place, the devising of stunts to get your theatre and the forthcoming showing in the public eye is advisable. How far you want to go depends on how well you stand in with the people and whether or not you figure it is good business to put something over on the newspapers.

Complications and everything but the truth makes the picture a comedy hit for the full five reels.
Comedy scenes in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are past masters are herewith shown.

Lyons—Moran Five Reeler Good Exploitation Bet

However, a "demented" man stunt would be sure fire so far as publicity goes. Suppose you were to engage a good character actor who could make up as does the "nut" of the picture bringing him in on the train with "trimmings" enough so he would be noticed at the station and on the street. If you have a body of water in your city which is navigated with any sort of craft larger than rowboats, you might send your "nut" down to the wharf to pretend that he imagined he owned all the boats in the world. He could walk about view each vessel critically and talk to bystanders about his possessions, etc. If such a stunt is to be pulled good judgment should be exercised in estimating how far he should be allowed to go so as not to get yourself seriously in complications with the police. It perhaps might be extremely dangerous unless you can fix it with the chiefs or some one in authority. If you think you couldn't "fix things" in the ordinary way there would be opportunity in trying to put the story over on one newspaper alone, since as a rule in most cities at least one of the dailies is "in Dutch" with the police and any chance the department would have to show the paper up would be considered a great joke. In this case frame your stunt with the police for the sole benefit of the one newspaper with the other papers tipped off not to use the story. Of course, if the paper which is "framed" does fall all the other publications will carry the story of the "slip" and you will get the publicity.

Another "plant" which would be almost sure of success would be to send your man (not made up as the "nut" of the picture) around the offices of the various newspaper plants. He assembles a familiar-looking person who thinks he has purchased a newspaper somewhere and is looking for advice and information how to conduct it successfully. Arm him with enough technical knowledge about presses and linotypes, etc., so he could talk intelligently for a few minutes and instruct him to play his part so he would be "spotted" as a "nut" very soon after getting into conversation with the reportorial force which is where should go to get into action. It would be well to frame his story along comedy lines and instruct him to play for the funny side all the time, since this sort of a yarn is always good reading. (Note—Lunatics who did exactly the stunts suggested in both instances have been used before in the writers' newspaper experience and therefore these stunts can not be called original.)

If you have a lunatic asylum in your city you could probably be the means of getting some stories across from interviews with the superintendent who could relate the queer delusions his patients have, all of which can be tied up with your picture and its crazy character.

For window displays the grocery stories with the idea of the picture suggest some possibilities although they really would be rather far fetched.

In the matter of lobby decorations plenty of stills showing scenes from the production with your paper driving home the fact that the production is a five-reel comedy, etc, offers the best possibilities.

NEWSPAPER DISPLAYS AND COPY

For your newspaper displays the novelty of a five-reel slapstick comedy, promising action, and a laugh test is essential. Your catch lines and selling talk should be written in a semi-comedy vein with an attempt to conceive clever wording. A hint of the spice in some of the titles may be used but with discretion. It might be well to note that the offering has no batting girls and that all the players wear clothes. For cuts we would select those in which the "inn" appear and therefore have an opportunity to tie-up the lunatic and his "asylum" to the selling talk of our display. If you select cuts which may be obtained from the exchange, two of which are reproduced for your inspection, you will, of course, follow out the angle of exploitation suggested by the cuts themselves. A lesser campaign would not be out of place on this subject based on the "lunatic" idea. For instance if you were to run small cuts with the word "Asylum" engaged in a scraggly hand it would get attention. Later a line saying "told everything but the truth" could be added. Later your display ads could carry the title of the picture "Everything But the Truth" in big type with the word "Asylum" as a catch line.

Readers and text matter for the movie page should emphasize the five-reel part of the comedy, with reference to the lunatic and what he did to the characters of the story which led to the telling of everything but the truth with the general angle used in the display matter to the fore.

BILLBOARDS AND PAPER DISPLAYS

There has been prepared for your use an exceptional lot of good paper for this production. Liberal use of this paper is advised with the selections of style varied. If you use slides begin running them well in advance of your showing featuring the five-reel part of the offering.

PRESS NOTICE STORIES

The apparently necessary press play when the truth seems not plausible and a lunatic who thinks he is the proprietor of an asylum threatens to destroy the happiness of both a married and engaged couple in the Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran five-reel comedy feature "Everything But the Truth" to be shown at the — theatre for a next — days engagement beginning, but it also furnishes more genuine amusement for theatre goers than anything released for a long time. Eddie Lyons, as the young president of the oil company, about to be married to a pretty blonde, and Lee Moran, as a newly married young business man, are said to give comedy portrayals of which their past performances have been merely a promise.

They have surrounded themselves with a splendid company, chief among whom are Anne Cornwell as the young wife, Katherine Lewis as the jealous fiancée, Nelson McDowell as an escaped lunatic, Willis Marks as a faithful bookkeeper, and Elizabeth Witt as a meddling aunt.

"Everything But the Truth" is the title of one of the season's feature comedy successes, a five-reel production in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are appearing at the — theatre for a next engagement.

Lyons and Moran would rather keep an audience chuckling throughout a picture than giving way to an occasional laugh and then lapsing into a quiet state of boredom. The plot of the coming comedy is built around a young married couple living next door to the suburban bungalow which a prospective Benefict has prepared for his bride.

The unmarried man gets into what seems like a hopeless tangle when an escaped lunatic holds him and his neighbor's wife prisoners, all night in a deserted farm house. The truth of the whole matter is so unusual that they are afraid to tell the truth even when it is discovered what really happened when they escape the next morning. The difficulty with which the situation is cleared up is the basis for many laughs. The two stars are supported in the photoplay by Anne Cornwall, Katherine Lewis, Nelson McDowell, Willis Marks, Elizabeth Witt, Nelson McDowell, and other capable comedy artists.

"Everything But the Truth" is the alluring comedy title of the five reel feature picture which is being released by the studio for a long day's engagement.

Marriage and laughter are the only things to consider if you see this picture which comes heralded as one of the few really funny multiple reel comedy pictures ever made and clasping with "Tillie's Punetured Romance," as entertaining, "Everything But the Truth" is not slap-stick.

The stars of the picture are Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran who are supported by Anne Cornwall, Katherine Lewis Nelson McDowell, Willis Marks, Elizabeth Witt, and other popular screen players.

The story concerns two young couples, one of them engaged and the other already married. The bride and groom have a little suburban love next door to the musical comedy picture, and the bride has prepared for her future wife. Their affairs seem hopelessly tangled when the unmarried man and his neighbor's wife are held prisoners all night in a deserted farm house by an escaped lunatic. The true story sounds so improbable that they invent another. It is a comedy story and the two newlyweds have to be told. There are many laughable incidents in the mix-up before everything is satisfactorily explained.

Short Readers For Program and Papers

Anne Cornwall, the petite comedienne who scored such a success in support of Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead," is playing the leading role in "Everything But the Truth," the comedy feature starring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. The world premiere of the picture will be at the theatre at — the next —

In "Everything But the Truth," coming to a theatre near you — Eddie Lyons plays the part of a young man about to be married, while Lee Moran appears as a newlyweds to be separated from his bride for the first time. The story is by Edgar Franklin and tells of the type of comedy feature which has so many favorites among photo comedies produced in some time.

The names of Lyons and Moran, to the audiences are synonymous with laughter and good cheer. They have starred in one and two-reel pictures for years. Now they have begun the production of big comedy features. The first of these, "Everything But the Truth," is announced for never count a man on circumstantial evidence," supposed your wife because appearances are against her. In "Everything But the Truth," the Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran comedy now being shown at the — theatre, there is an occasion for every married couple. The production is frankly intended to provoke laughter, but it also succeeds in teaching a lesson.

Although Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are sufficiently capable of carrying a success, they do not depend on their own efforts entirely to make "Everything But the Truth," at the theatre an unmissable hit. Surrounding them are such competent players as Ann Cornwall, Katherine Lewis, Nelson McDowell, Willis Marks, Elizabeth Witt and many others.

The many admirers of Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, creators of "Comedies of Class," whose first feature showing "Everything But the Truth," is now being given at the — theatre, are finding these clever players more amusing than ever in their now starring vehicle. Clever acting makes the comedy a decided success.

To celebrate the 50th anniversary of their first appearance in screen comedies, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, a pair of fun flingers have produced a comedy feature, "Everything But the Truth," in which they appear at the picture, at the theatre, and in their roles, are making an interesting story with good acting and clever direction.

One of the amusing comedy types seen in a motion picture picture this year is Nelson McDowell, who plays the role of the insane detective with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in their language feature, "Everything But the Truth," at the — theatre. According to the management, the actor is a real physician, who has received his degree at the Northwestern University of Chicago.

"Everything But the Truth," the offering at the — theatre, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran demonstrate that laughter can be created in immediate quantities without resorting to laughable ones. In this story by Edgar Franklin the comedy stars provoke mirth by legitimate means. They are supported in their feature by an excellent company of fun makers.

Kohn Representatives Attend Convention

D. J. Chatkin of the Marion II Kohn Productions, Inc., has left for New York to attend a convention of film men. Releasing arrangements for the Kohn Productions, which include, "Smiling," starring Grace N poetic, Polly Moran and "Smiling," will be announced after Mr. Chatkin returns to Los Angeles. The Kohn pictures will probably be sold on a state rights arrangement.

Special Pictures Gets Burrard Scenics

A series of scenes to be filmed by "Dick," Burrard, the well-known photographer of nature, will be released by Special Pictures as soon as they are taken. "Dick" Burrard has started with his party from the Mexican border, it travels through Alaska, leaving Vancouver for the snow country about June lst. None of these pictures have yet been announced, but the Northern objective of the expedition.

The Sunset Magazine and the Special Pictures Corporation are joint sponsors of the scenic expedition. It is stated that 1,500 newspapers have contracted to reproduce the photographs of the scenes shot by the party. Stewart Edward White and Wallace Irwin, the Sunset Magazine and Western writers, are expected to join the Burrard party at Seattle.

Three New Christie Comics

Bobby Vernon, Vera Steadman, Jim Harrison and Dorothy Devore Star

Three new Christie comedies, dealing with leap year, matrimonial massacres, spring home cleaning and college fraternities, present a variety of plots among the new offerings of the Christie studios.

The first of the new comedies in one-reel presents Bobby Vernon with Vera Steadman in "Marry Me." This takes care of the usual leap-year event with Vera in the role of the young lady who drags her reluctant loved-one down the street to the license bureau before he has time to say "No." It was directed by Bill Beaudine.

"Next But Not Gaudy" is the title of another Christie one-reeler with Dorothy Devore and Jimmie Harrison. It deals with the difficulties of a young man who has to masquerade as an interior decorator in order to case his way into the home of his beloved. All goes well till a couple of amateur paperhangers mess up things till the house is far from neat and very gaudy.

"Eat-a-Bite-A-Pie" ushers Bobby Vernon into a college fraternity with the typical naysage of such life. Bobby is disclosed, breaking away from the lancers in a suit of pajamas, carrying an umbrella and alarm clock on the main thoroughfare. In such guise he reaches the house of his college sweetheart. Lucky for him the girl's father belonged to the same fraternity and saved the day for Bobby. This comedy was written by Jack Jervis and directed by William Beaudine.

Benny Leonard Serial Near Completion

Word comes from the Coast that the last episodes of the Hallmark serial "The Evil Eye," by Roy L. McCardle, starring Benny Leonard, lightweight champion of the world, are now nearing completion and that the company, which includes Supervising Director Wally Van, Director J. Gordon Cooper, Stuart Holmes, Ruth Dwyer, Mme. Maratini, and others will soon return to New York.

The company left for the coast last February, after filming the Wall street scenes in New York city, and has been there ever since, filming the remaining episodes.

Allied Productions Co. is Organized

The Allied Productions Co. was recently organized for the purpose of acting as distributors of independent productions and to finance the production of pictures and featuring of which are first indicated by independent exchanges, as being their choice and which they will purchase immediately. Just recently, general manager of the Allied Company, completed a visit of all the exchange centers in the United States and tongue. At the time state rights buyers were consulted relative to the character of pictures they desired most and in connection with which they were willing to enter contracts for their respective territories and as a result of this the company has now ready for release five different series of pictures, details of which will be announced at a very early date. It is the intention of the Allied Production Co. to act as medium of supply of good pictures for the independent exchanges.

Foreign Publicity Department for Goldwyn

In view of the fact that the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has within the past few short-distributed all the spectacular sales records in its Foreign Sales Department, under Arthur Zehn, it has been found expedient of late to make additional appropriations for the purpose of maintaining efficiency in handling the exploitation and publicity matter for its customers throughout the world.

Accordingly a Foreign Publicity Department has been formed whose business it will be to comply with requests of the cinema trade publications in the various countries, for special news and feature stories, and supply exploitation and advertising material to its customers. Edgar M. Schoenberg has been appointed manager of the new service branch.

Two States Sold by Capital Film

Capital Film Company have just disposed of the state rights for Illinois and Indiana for its new feature, "Witch's Gold," to the Superior Screen Service of Chicago, of whom Harry Weiss is president. This new feature which was produced by M. A. Dodge, introduces to the screen Davide, a new star, who is supported by an all star cast including Edward Coon, Gene Gauntier, Charles Mailes, Spottiswood Aitken, Augustus Phillips and Teddy.

Frohman Seeks Variety of Screen Stories

The Frohman Amusement Corporation announces that they have signed four authors to write a series of four stories for screen adaptation. The authors are F. W. Cole, William Hurlburt, Antony Paul Kelly and Richard Le Gallienne. It is believed by the company that a concern's releases must be along different themes, if they are to prove popular. For this reason they have contracted four widely different writers for the four mentioned above.
G.W. Schaefer Manages Merit Film Corp.

The Merit Film Corporation, one of the leading independent exchanges in New York, has increased its sales forces in its three branches at New York, Buffalo and Albany. Mr. George W. Schaefer, who for five years was general manager of the New York offices of the World Film Corporation, has been put in charge of the general management of the Merit Film Corporation.

Thirty Brady-made pictures, featuring Clara Kimball Young, Alice Brady, House Peters and Kittie Gordon, have been acquired from Masterpiece by Merit Film for New York state north of Greater New York, it is stated.

Big Demand for Radin Short Features

That there is a demand by state right buyers for short-length subjects is evidenced by the amount of business Radin Pictures report they are doing in "Real Star Dramas" and "Zip Comedies," which they are distributing on a territorial basis.

The "Real Star Dramas" are two-part features starring Grace Coolidge, Francis Ford, Ruth Clifford, Mary Fuller and Ruth Stonehouse. Chris Ruth and Florence E. Turner are the chief film-makers in the single reel "Zip Comedies," appearing in separate stories comprising the twelve monthly releases.

Kellerman Completes "What Women Love"

Word has been received from the Coast that the Amelie Kellerman company has completed all shooting for "What Women Love," the special production to be distributed and exhibited by Sol Lesser, and that it is now being cut and edited.

Mr. Lesser has assembled a complete editing, cutting and editing staff, which includes Reed Huestis of the Los Angeles Evening Herald staff and Vincent Bryant, the well-known song writer. Both are working under the personal direction of Bernard McConville, who wrote the story and scenario of the play.

Hammond Closes Big South American Deal

Guy R. Hammond, who has recently taken charge of the foreign department for the Arrow Film Corporation, has just concluded a deal that is said to be one of the biggest South American deals ever closed in the picture business. The pictures included in this deal are not only practically all those handled by the Domestic Department of the Arrow Film Corporation, but the various subjects that the Arrow is handling only for foreign distribution.

Lauds the Garson Picture

Nat Robbins of Utica Views "Up in Mary's Attic"; Gives Approval

"Up in Mary's Attic" is the biggest showman's picture I have ever seen. It stands as the one best bet of the year.

This is quoted as the statement of Nat Robbins, head of the Robbins Film Company of Utica, New York, who this week completed a deal whereby he takes over the rights of "Up in Mary's Attic" for all of New York State except Greater New York.

"Up in Mary's Attic," Mr. Robbins continued, "contains everything that a feature should contain. There is rollicking comedy without any slapstick, and in addition, considerable dramatic situations, pathos, and heart appeal which will register big with every audience. Besides its many vital selling points, it contains a bunch of the prettiest and most charming beauties known on the legitimate stage or motion picture screen.

Mr. Robbins is quoted as having said that in his opinion "Up in Mary's Attic" would eclipse all the productions at the rate of one a month, allowing four weeks for each picture, giving the producing unit ample time to complete a series of pictures suitable for presentation in every theatre in America.

Distribution will be through the Reelcraft and allied exchanges throughout the United States. Each release will be handled as a feature, although it is only a ten-reel length. There will be a complete line of advertising accessories, paper, folders, advertising sheets. A national trade paper advertising campaign will be prepared for each picture, and due publicity given to each release.

The date for the first release will be early in the fall and further announcements will be made later.

Bigger Production for Hallroom Comedies

Plans are now under way to make the present Fred Hallroom Boys comedies more costly in their production. The Cohen's state that the Hallroom Boys pictures will not, despite rumors, be made in five-reel features, but will be continued in the regular two-reel length as heretofore.

Production, however, according to the Cohen's, will be on a lavish scale. While the sets and accessories used in the previous Hallroom Boys comedies were entirely new, the future special sets will be constructed to give the picture a unique appeal.

Associated Exhibitors Add to Office Space

Rapid expansion of business has necessitated the taking over of additional office space by Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Space has been obtained on the ninth floor of the office building at 25 West 45th street. The executives of the Association will remain in the offices on the eighth floor of the same building.
Franklyn Farnum to Do
Series for Canyon

Supplementing the announcement that Franklyn Farnum is to be starred in a series of five reel productions to be produced at the Selig studios, for release by the Canyon Pictures Corporation, Jack Weimar, president of Canyon, has received word from the Coast that a prominent leading woman and director have been engaged for the first picture, on which preliminary work was started last Monday. The names of the director and leading lady cannot be divulged at this time; says Canyon Pictures, due to the fact that both are working on a big production, which will be completed very shortly.

The first picture will be based on an original story by William F. Wingo, who also wrote many of Mr. Farnum’s other successes. Mr. Wingo is now busily engaged preparing the second story. Mr. Farnum will not stop between pictures but will complete the entire six features in succession.

Buds Open on Screen
in New Pictograph

“A Springtime Miracle” is the poetic title given the first subject in the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph No. 7011, distributed by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Nature’s slow process of unfolding her blossoms is speeded up by the camera as a trip is made through a garden in springtime. Lilies, dandilions and cherry blossoms open before the eyes of the spectator in this interesting and beautifully photographed nature film.

Arrow Reports Recent Territory Sales

The Arrow Film Corporation reports several new sales of “Love’s Protege,” the Orna Carew feature, as well as the newest New England territory, New York, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, on “Woman’s Man.”

The Arrow also reports sales on “Daughter of the Don” for the New England states and the Pacific coast and Northwestern states.

Jans Picture Ready Soon
Rolfe Editing “Madonnas and Men”; Trade Showing Next Week

B. A. Rolfe is now busily engaged in editing and assembling the Jans Pictures, Inc., special feature production “Madonnas and Men.” It is expected that “Madonnas and Men” will be in shape for a private showing for Jans officials and reviewers of the trade press within the next week or ten days.

“Madonnas and Men” is claimed by Jans Pictures, Inc., to be the greatest box-office attraction since “The Birth of a Nation.” This is the statement made by one of the officials of the organization recently when talking of the company’s forthcoming special production to a newspaper representative.

One of the many though minor features of “Madonnas and Men” is the fact that titles modelled in day will be used throughout. The idea throughout has been to make every endeavor to have “Madonnas and Men” not only different as to story theme and production but also in the manner of presentation and those little details that do so much to make a motion picture stand above the ordinary so-called features.

“Madonnas and Men,” which was written by Carey Wilson and Edward Goulding with the continuity by Violet Clarke, is said to have been made at a cost of a small fortune. It has been slowly and carefully made and the Jans Company claims that it is destined to draw picture off the box office any other motion picture production that has been made within the past year.

Arrow Plans Big Campaign
Will Advertise Two Features and Muriel Ostrich

THE Arrow Film Corporation is planning a big advertising campaign on the following subjects that are now being offered to Independent State Right Buyers, “Woman’s Man,” featuring Romaine Fielding, and “Love’s Protege,” featuring Orna Carew, a five reel story with splendid scenery and photography. In addition to the two features, the campaign will include the Muriel Ostrich two reel comedies. Gilstrom is directing Miss Ostrich and Bide Dudley has written several of the stories. These two reel comedies are being offered to the Independent Buyers for release beginning about June 15th.

Romaine Fielding, who stars in “Woman’s Man,” will be remembered as one of the best known stars in pictures several years ago. “Woman’s Man” is said to be a big picture with some splendid dramatic situations. The story starts in Arizona and travels across the desert into New York society circles. In New York there are some big scenes and settings.

Special Pictures Busy on Short-Depths

Special Pictures Corporation has started four comedy companies at work at the Special Picture studio at Long Beach. All four companies are producing under the supervision of Ward Lasselle, director general.

President Louis W. Thompson is allowing each director four weeks in which to make a 1,400 foot comedy to be used each week as the Comedyart release of Special Pictures, it is said.

Present plans for expansion indicate that within a short time the Special Pictures Corporation will be issuing three releases of short-reel subjects weekly.

Title of Fannie Ward Picture is Changed

J. A. Ferrand, New York, representative for the Delac and Vandal Company of France, announce that Fanny Ward will be in the stellar role of “She Played and Paid,” the newest DeLas andVandal picture, to reach the market, instead of “Storm-Swept,” as announced last week. The story is a screen adaptation of Henri Bernstein’s masterpiece. The opening on the title of “Storm-Swept” was originally given this picture during its production period in Paris. Upon bringing the picture to the American market, however, the producers changed the title to “She Played and Paid” which they consider a more apropos and fitting title for this story.

Big Business on “Love Without Question”

Fred C. Cross, manager of the Goodwin Theatre, Newark, N. J., recently put over “Love Without Question” in exceptionally big business for a four weeks run at his popular playhouse, reports the Jans Pictures, Inc. Mr. Cross reports that “Love Without Question” was played to large crowds and received the highest praise from both the press and public of the New Jersey theatre. On Sunday was the biggest in history of the Goodwin Theatre and business increased during the week.
Brockliss, Simplex Distributor, Is Expanding

When men in the motion picture business hearken back to 1910, it is equivalent to men in older industries looking back twenty-five (25) years, for so quickly has the motion picture business grown and so significant have been the events marking each milestone of the progress of the industry, that to speak of men who were outstanding figures less than one decade ago, is like speaking of yesterday's fashions. Even though the men in question are still comparatively young and in their prime.

During the year of 1910, when Edwin S. Porter, together with others, specialized in making films under the Rex banner, Mr. Brockliss was already a well-established film distributor, with general offices in London, and branches in Berlin, Vienna, Moscow, Petrograd (known as St. Petersburg in those days), Barcelona and Milian.

At that time, he had the foreign rights to the "Imp," "Powers" and other American films, as well as the German Minton, Le Lion films of Paris, and the Aquila of Italy. It was upon Mr. Brockliss' first trips to the United States that he met Edwin S. Porter and the latter's associates in the affairs of the Rex Film Company, which meeting resulted in the foreign rights to the Rex pictures going to the House of Brockliss, which continued to market them. These popular productions continued until the formation of the Universal Film Company, whose foreign rights would not permit the continuation of this foreign arrangement, with the result that the Brockliss Company took over the entire foreign rights of the Lubin Company's product, which at that time was at the height of its popularity, producing some ten thousand feet of negative weekly.

It was at this time that Edwin S. Porter, in a statement to the trade press, spoke of the highly efficient manner in which the Brockliss Company distributed the Rex product and incidentally paid a tribute to the general efficiency of the Brockliss enterprises.

It will be remembered, too, that in 1912, Mr. Edwin S. Porter delegated Mr. Brockliss as his personal representative to negotiate with Mina, Sarah Bernhardt for the picturization of "Queen Elizabeth," a play the German stage, in which she was touring Europe at that time. That Mr. Brockliss successfully handled this matter testifies to, by the fact that the "Divine" Sarah's appearance under Mr. Porter's direction was an instant success.

That these early satisfactory connections and associations were remembered, is well accounted for, in that at J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., is now the exclusive distributor for Great Britain, of the Simplex Screen Product, the complete product manufactured by the Precision Machine Company, of which company, Mr. Brockliss is vice-president. Negotiations for the exclusive distribution of the Simplex Product in Great Britain were effected during the latter part of 1918, and it can truly be said that the headquarters of the Brockliss Company represent today, the finest type of distribution headquarters and sales organization of any American machine in the United Kingdom.

The general headquarters of the Brockliss Company are located at Nos. 67-69 Wardour Street, London, which includes a five story building, situated in the heart of the greatest film market in Europe. In the basement of the Brockliss building are located two theatres used for review and trade showing purposes. Both of these Bijou theatres have well-equipped projection rooms, each of which contains a complete and up-to-date equipment of two Simplex projectors. Buyers thus have an opportunity of viewing the Simplex projectors in operation, and of judging the results on the screen. At the entire first or street floor of the building, houses the general offices of the company, which occupy the greater portion of this area, while the front portion of the first floor is devoted to the show room of all the latest models of the Simplex. In the large show windows facing onto Wardour street, are placed various exhibitions of the Simplex with special lighting effects and announcements calling the attention of the passer-by to the merits of this famous machine.

From time to time, reproductions of the striking, advertisements published by the Precision Machine Company in the American trade press are shown in these windows in much the same manner as are the popular new service photographs in this country and it is needless to say that public showing such installations as the "Capital," and "Newman" theaters, as well as other small Simplex achievements attract considerable attention and lend greatly to point out American efficiency, the progress being made in English projection room installations.

The Distribution of Brockliss, with its many connections throughout the United Kingdom, has been mutually beneficial in the distribution of the Simplex, many of the leading theaters in the territory having been equipped with them, with a view of securing showing such installations as the "Capitol," and "Newman" theaters, etc., as well as other small Simplex achievements being shown in these windows in much the same manner as are the popular service photographs in this country and it is needless to say that public showing such installations as the "Capital," and "Newman" theaters, as well as other small Simplex achievements attract considerable attention and lend greatly to point out American efficiency, the progress being made in English projection room installations.

Mr. Brockliss is highly gratified with the manner in which the leading theatre circuits of Great Britain are taking hold of the Simplex Product, and states that within a few weeks, he will make an announcement concerning Simplex installations and Brockliss activities, that will be particularly interesting to the American motion picture industry and should prove highly gratifying to certain American manufacturers.

New Policy for National

Representative of Releasing Film to Be Received at Studio

A new policy of production and release of high-grade features will shortly be announced by C. A. Willard, general manager of the National Film Corporation of America, who is formulating a plan whereby films bearing the National trademark will be available to any exhibitor in America. "Of course," states Mr. Willard, "we expect to line up with one of the great distributing organizations, but we expect to make a flexible arrangement which will assure us a nation-wide exploitation drive on our future productions. We have made a thorough survey of the present distributing situation and the only bone of the 'independent' producer, to my way of thinking, is the fact that the exhibitor has a choice of distributors in the United States. By making the National trademark available to any exhibitor in America, we believe we can take a step towards breaking the hold of the 'independent' producer, which is the real key to our success."

"Way Down East" to Be Elaborate Picture

According to advices from the D. W. Griffith studio at Mamaroneck, "Way Down East" is going to be a picture production of a most elaborate character in which the leading character of the story is to be played by New England life. Thousands of superannuaries are to appear, it is stated.

J. Sameth Buys Entire Corporate Stock

J. Joseph Sameth, President of the Forword Film Distributors Inc., has just purchased the entire stock of this corporation and intends to expand its operations to the state right market. Larger quarters have been taken at their present address, 30 West 49th street.
F. P. LASKY

FAMOUS Players-Lasky Corporation have purchased the screen rights for the Opie Reed story which was famous twenty years ago, "The Jacklins." This will be a George Metford production, and takes the place of "The Old Homestead," which the director was to make next. Monte Blue and Mabel Jurlaine Scott have been selected to play in this.

Agnes Ayres, Milton Sills, Jerome Canning, Robert Warshow, and a number of others have been cast to play in "Two Years," the film version of the Wun D. Taylor production, "The Furnace," from the story by the English author,胖, which has been adapted for the screen by Julia Crawford Ivers.

Roscoe Arbuckle is working in the last scenes for "The Life of the Party," and on June 7th is scheduled to begin work in "The Traveling Salesman" scenes for which has been prepared by Walter Wood.

Sam Woods is making the final scenes for the Ethel Clayton subject, "The City Sparrow," and preparations have been made for Miss Clayton to work in "Roseanne O'Zamne." This subject is to be directed by Tom Forman, and the scenario is being written by Arthur S. O'Connell, editor of the Famous Players-Lasky department. The cast selected includes Jack Holt as leading man, Mabel Van Buren, Clarence Emsell, Grace Morse and Frederick Malatesta.

Everything is in readiness for the filming of "The Charm School," which will star Wallace Reid; and "Wanted a Blemish," starring Bryant Washburn, Tom Gormally, is author of the screen version of the former play, and Sam Woods will direct Reid and company. It is possible there may be some delay in this, as Mr. Reid this week received a wire advising him of the critical illness of his father, Hal Reid, the famous playwright of New York.

William C. deMille is shortly to start work on the Cosmo Hamilton story, "His Friend and His Wife," and C. B. de Mille is doing the final editing on "Something to Think About," and plans to begin a new play early in June.

METRO

MORE definite information concerning the plans of Metro Pictures Corporation respecting stories of the future, as the result of the negotiations of Irvin S. Cobb, Henry C. Rowland, Arthur Somers Roache, George Kibbe Turner, Arthur Stringer, Donn Byrne, and Lucid Chamberlain, was given out this week by Bayard Veiller, who recently returned from New York after consummating contracts with the authors.

These six writers, in addition to Winchell Smith, Peter B. Kyne, Eugene Walters and Mr. Veiller as staff writers, will each furnish five stories during the year, making a total of fifty screen stories. In addition to this Mr. Veiller is said to have brought stories aggregating a cost of half a million dollars from New York.

The first of the big authors' series is to be put in the making and will be "The Five Dollar Baby," Mr. Cobb's other authors are all expected on the coast early in June, and then a definite program will be made out for future productions. Veiller's first specially written-screen play will be a sequel to his famous stage success, "Within the Law." No title has been given for this story.

Production work at Metro is going forward at almost capacity. Bert Lytell made the last scenes for the East India story, "The Price of Redemption," Saturday last week, and Sunday, May 10th, left for New York where he will remain for the making of several productions. Lytell has worked at the west coast studios of Metro for the past two years, or since he was first engaged by Metro, and among his successes are "Lombardi, Ltd.," "The Right-Of-Way," and "Alias Jimmy Valentine." While in the east he directed Lytell will first work in a speaking stage production produced on Broadway by Metro, and following this work in the film will be done. On the very day of his departure, the star was presented with a very handsome pig as a present by members of the Lytell producing company. So Polito, who has been cameraman for Lytell, accompanied the star east.

Director Edward Dillon is making the final scenes for "Parlor, Bedlam," with Eugene Palette, Ruth Stonehouse and an all star cast which includes Kathleen Kirkham, Josephine Hill and a number of others, and is leaving in a few days for New York where it is to direct Billie Burke for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Director Rex Ingram is completing interiors for the Drury Lane melodrama, "Hearts are Trumps," which has an all star cast; and the production have two or three week's work on "Billions," which is being directed by Roy Smallwood.

The Wellington Smith screen play, adapted from "The New Hectic," will be finished shortly when the remaining scenes, which are now being filmed, have been made. New York stock exchange, are taking "The Sun-Sender," as this play has been titled, co-stars, William H. Crane and Cuthbert Waddell has been made under the direction of Herbert Blaché.

VITAGRAPH

IT so happens that all of the Vitagraph Company are working at the big plant at Talmadge Street, Hollywood, this week, all having completed location work at about the same time.

A big setting for the final episodes of the William Ducan, "The Silent Avenger," serial, is now completed, while, it is working on the fourteenth and fifteenth releases. This setting, representing a town, requires half of the acres of the Vitagraph studio lot, and several acres of additional space leased for the period required for filming.

Directress Chester Bennett is making the final interior scenes of the Chinese interiors for the Earle Williams feature, "The Purple Hieroglyph." The company has been working nights only in an effort to secure some desired lighting effects. The story is laid on the Pacific Coast and Vola Vale plays the leading role.

Webster Callison, director of the Anthony Film Company, has finished exteriors for the second and third episodes of "The Veiled Mystery," and will make interiors at the studio as soon as Pauline Court, leading woman, recovers from slight injury sustained when struck by a falling stone at Catalina Islands.

Such progress has been made in the filming of "Hidden Dangers," directed by W. S. Van Dyke, that it is now assured the Joe Ryan-Jean Paige serial will be completed for the first episode is released. The complete show now at work on the seventh release.
The Tom Terris Company, consisting of an all star cast, making "The Girl Out of the Sky," are now making the final scenes for this production at the studio after three weeks on location at Long Beach and other nearby cities. The story for this is adapted from the Governor Morris story, "Trumpton Island."

A complete theatre with stage, boxes, proscenium arch, fly galleries, orchestra pit and auditorium, has been built for the coming Larry Semon comedy which is at present known as "The Stage Hand." Lucille Carlyle and a bevy chorus appear in this subject.

Director Jesse Robbins has begun the filming of a novel comedy featuring Jimmy Aubrey known as "The Paper Hanger."

UNIVERSAL

The scenic expedition sent to Bortico, New Guinea, and other lands in the immediate vicinity of these, returned to Universal City last week with thousands of feet of negative film taken during the past year by William Alder, serving as cameraman, and Edward Lammle, nephew of President Carl Lammle, who was business manager of the expedition. In addition to the great quantity of film, the party secured many valuable curios, relics and trophies for a Los Angeles museum.

Director Lynn Reynolds has completed "The Red Lane," with the filming of exterior scenes for this Canadian village story in Big Bear Valley. Frank Mayo is starred, and principals of the supporting cast are Lilian Rich, leading woman, James Mason, Jean Hersholt, James O'Neill, Paul Weigel, Frank Thorne, Harry Lamon, Frederick Herzog and others.

The actual filming of two feature productions was started at Universal City. One is the coming feature of Eddie Lyon and Lee Moreau, "La La Lucille," with Ann Cornwall as leading woman, and the other is "Fightin' Joe," by H. H. Van Loan, which will star Harry Gardner under the direction of Reeves Evans. The cast for this besides Carey includes Ray Hinkle, Roy Riley, Ruth Royce, Lillie Leslie, Little Reeves Evans, Charles Le Moyne and others.

Work will be started on "In Folks' Trill," a drama to be directed by Rollin Sturges upon the arrival of Carmel Myers.

Production work will be started shortly on "Out of the Sky," a romance to be directed by Philip Saint, starring Edith Roberts, and "Hitlin' Post," directed by Jack Ford with Frank Mayo as star. The latter is a Mississippi river story.

New short subjects in the making are "The Death Trap," a two-reel Canadian story which will be the third of the Lancet's famed series, "Hoot." Gibson is working in "The Boss of Blue River," and Leo D. Maloney and Dixie Lannon are principals in a short western under title "Counterfeiter." Magda Lane is being featured in a two-reel comedy, "Roofer, Fool, Fond!" and Harry Keaton and Maev Montell are principals in a comedy, "Twin Litzies," being directed by Joseph McDonald, and Horace Davey is filming "Has This Happened to You?" with Howard Austin and Bartine Burket. "Off His Track," is being directed by J. A. Howe and Thomas Bickingham is completing a series, "A Shady Woman," starring George Owy and the Century bathing girls. "A Bar Bed," "Chasing Chords," is being filmed by James Davis.

Serial companies now working are those making, "The Lightening's Eye," under the direction of Robert F. Hill, and featuring Elmo Lincoln; "The Moon Riders," directed by Albert Russell and featuring Art Acord, and Henry McAree is assembling the oriental made picture, "The Dragon's Net," which features Monty Malone. The last scene for the Eddy Polo serial, "The Vanishing Dagger," have been made.

READ

TWO J. Parker Reed, Jr. Productions are nearing completion. One of these is "The Girl Who Couldn't," starring Lafe Clark, which is being directed by Wesley Ruggles. This company has just returned from a week's trip to Coronado, where many exterior scenes were made. One of the features of this film will be a most elaborate garden setting which required 60 arce lamps to illuminate for night photography. In the picture made at this time, 400 extra people, including a powder puff halet were used.

The Hubbell Roswomth company has completed work at Santa Cruz Island and gone to San Francisco where water front scenes for "Bucko MacAllister" are being filmed. The final scenes for this play will be taken at Balboa Beach south of Long Beach.

The J. Parker Reed scenario department is now busy preparing scenes for new productions which will be started within a week.

INCE

Every attempt is in readiness at the Thomas H. Ince studios for the filming of the first Ince special, "Bean Revel," which is to be directed by J. Sarnoff Ray from scene version written by Luther Reed. Florence Vidor has been loaned to Thomas H. Ince for the King Vidor Productions, and she will play the leading role of this film. Louis Joseph Vaster specially written screen play. Others selected for this cast are Louis Stone, Lloyd Hughes and Kalithen Kirkham. At the studio it is said this production will have interior settings that begin to mark a new era of artistic developments. One in particular is that of Bean Revel's apartment, which the technical staff will try to make the last word in luxury. The script calls for a big ball held in the same old building at the rear of Carnegie Hall in New York. While no information is given out at the studio, it is whispered about that "Bean Revel" will be the first release of Product Inc. through the distributing organization of Associated Producers.

Goldwyn has been the target for most all of the rumors for the west coast colony for the past several weeks, but despite all of these, reports from those who have inside knowledge, Goldwyn organization is producing at the usual extent, eight companies being at work, leading to a production over previous periods, due to the management in the fact that they are far ahead on production.

will Rodgers is next to work in the story titled, "Old Dutch," by Clark Smith, which is to be directed by Clarence G. Badger. This story will be started at once, so that Rodgers can complete work by the time of the Democratic and Republican Convention in San Francisco and Chicago, for he has been engaged by a big news syndicate to "cover" these two political meetings giving the humorous angle of the convention in his individual style.

At Green has completed the making of "The Man Who Had Everything," and will next film the George Ade story, "Just Out of College," with Jack Pickford in the star.

Hazel Daly has been selected as leading woman for the Tom Moore production, "Stop Thief," which will be directed by Harry Beaumont; and Walker Wodell has completed the editing of the Governor Morris story of San Francisco, "The Peninsula," features Lon Chaney as the cripple.

Victor Schertzinger is working with the scenario department in the selection of the story to star Mabel Normand and Pearl White continues at work on "The Branding Iron," at Catalina Islands.

One of the big scenes for "Empire Builders," was made by F. Mason Hopper at the specially built South Sea Island village along the coast near Santa Monica this week in which little Calen Landsis was boiled to death by 500 negroes in the guise of South Sea cannibals. Invitations for viewing this bit of hokum were sent out by J. Stewart Woodhouse, head of the publicity department, and many of the trade paper representatives, local newspaper men and other invited guests watched the very realistic scenes filmed.

Clark Irvine of the publicity department is now doing the final editing and titling of a personality picture starring Brace Marriner made while the dramaist was at the coast, with the Goldwyn company. Madame Maeterlinck and Governor Morris also take part in this film.

GARSON

F I N A L scenes for the Clara Kimball Young production, "Mid-Channel," from the Sir Arthur Wing Pinero drama, which has been assigned to an Ethel Barrymore starring vehicle on the speaking stage, have been filmed, and Producer-Director Garson has, in the final editing of this subject before it is shipped to the Equity Pictures Corporation for release.

Clara Kimball Young goes to San Francisco in a few days to present the San Francisco Post No. 1 of the American Legion, a wonderful act of Post colors including the American Legion and National Standard. This post consists of about 6,000 men.

Miss Lytle Balscock, decorator and artist of San Francisco, was recently engaged by Harry Garson as art director for the Clara Kimball Young productions.

BRUNTON

R OBERT BRUNTON has made all preparations for the filming of a big special all-star production "Miracle Man." Ward title of which will be "The Devil to Pay." The players so far selected are Frittie Brunette, who has been playing opposite J. Warren Kerrigan; Joseph J. Dowling, who has been the featured part in "The Miracle Man"; Roy Stewart, featured in B. B. Hampton Productions; and George Fischer, who has been seen in a number of subjects made on the coast. The filming of this will be started shortly.

Harry Leon Wilson and William Allen White, authors of "The Spenders," and "A Certain Man," have arrived at the Brunton studios where they will work with B. B. Hampton in the filming of these two productions.

David Warfield, George Probert and Upton Sinclair were guests of Robert Brunton this week, and personally conducted through the big plant.

John Krog, for many years affiliated with the Lee NYMP and Triangle studios, and since the organization of the Brunton plant has been cashier, died this week after a short illness. No successor has been named as yet.

The last Robert Brunton production starring J. Warren Kerrigan for Hodkinson, "The House of Whispers," has been completed and shipped east, and the Dustin Farm production made by Compton, "Fireman," is in the final editing and titling department.

The Betty Compton Company which has been north for several weeks in the filming of water front and Chinatown scenes at San Francisco for "The Test," has returned to the studios for the making of the final interior scenes. Arthur Rosow is director of this initial Comp, starting the vehicle, and the featured player of "The Miracle Man" is supported by Roy Stewart, Emory Johnson, Ralph Lewis, Walter Kipps and others. This week starred, Kars, Kate Toncray, Betty Schade and a number of other well-known players.

FIRST NATIONAL

M ARSHALL NEILAN has completed all scenes for his third first feature, "The First Farewell," which was made under the working title of "The Harbor City Mystery," and the filming of the story featuring Little Wesley Barry, known as "Dinny," which is being directed by Jack MacDermott, will require two or three weeks more time for filming. Following the completion of this work, it is very probable that Mr. Neilan will go east for the making of one or more subjects, and has announced possible intentions of going to Europe.

The number of First National features that a first feature has been increased by the recently made contract with Mayflower Photography Corporation for release through the Exhibitors' Association.

Alan Dwan and company, headed by Mary Thurman and Niles Welch, are at work on location at Camp Keen in the mountainous south of Riverside.

The Sylvia Breamer picture, "The Fix," directed by Sidney A. Franklin, is now being edited and titled.

R. W. MacFarland, western manager of Mayflower, made the announcement of the First National affiliation this week.

HERE AND THERE

Ben Wilson, who is now producing serials for Selznick following the making of two for Halmark, has placed Jack Hoxie under contract to play a serial which is to be directed by Murdock MacQuarrie.

Maurice DeHaven has returned from the east after purchasing screen rights on "Twin Beds," and "The Girl in the Taxi," and is shortly to begin producing these at the studios at 4500 Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood.

"Bonnie May" has been selected as the vehicle for Bessie Love, and is to be co-directed by Joseph DeGrasse and Eda May Park for Andrew J. Callahan.

The D. N. Schwab producing company headed by David Butler and directed by Fred J. Butler, have been in San Francisco for the past week filming scenes for the second Butler release, "Smiling All the Way." The Betty Furness Joy will play the feminine lead.

The recently organized company to make Victor Potel Hosomecam Productions, has the first release almost ready for the screen. This subject, made under the supervision of Edward Marshall, will be titled "Slim Comes Back," Potel is using the name given him in "Slippery Slim" Comedies, made by Essanay several years ago, and the coming series will be of a type similar to those released through the General. The principals of the cast for this film are Ruby Kendall, Thelma Percy, George Cummings, George Ward, Jake Abrams and a number of others. The direction was in charge of Robert McKenzie, who has been identified with the industry as director and writer for a number of years.

Leon Kent, who has been affiliated with Col. W. N. Selig in the making of serials featuring Frank Furness and Mary Anderson, is shortly to leave for Honolulu with a company to film a historical pageant for an independent organization.

Special Attention Paid to Decorative Effects at the Strand Theatre

New Binghamton House Reveals Many Gems of Art Treatment

After nearly a year's work, interrupted by many delays due to the difficulty of getting materials, the Strand theatre opened in Binghamton, New York, on May 8. The theatre, which seats about 1,000, was constructed under the direction of A. E. Badley of Binghamton.

The ground dimensions of the theatre are 134x60 feet with a height from floor to dome of 50 feet. A stage opening of 32 feet has been provided with a proscenium arch 26 feet in height.

The new theatre is fireproof throughout, being constructed of brick, steel and concrete. Further safeguards are provided in a sprinkler system of the latest type in addition to two double-door exits on the ground floor and the same number on the balcony floor.

In its ventilating system the Strand is well provided for. The fresh air is drawn in and forced out by large fans into large ducts running along both sides of the auditorium. In the ducts are openings through which many thousands of cubic feet of air are forced into the building. By means of exhaust fans and domes the impure or used air is withdrawn as fast as it accumulates. By this means the air is completely changed every thirty seconds.

The lobby is exceptionally attractive. A tile floor in unique designs with a marble wainscoting and beautiful decorations on the walls accomplish the purpose desired. On the right of the entrance are the box office and check room. A set of doors across the middle of the lobby acts as a wind check and protects the audience seated in the back rows from being struck by draughts as patrons enter and depart.

From the foyer two grand staircases of marble lead to the mezzanine floor. Traffic through the foyer is made noiseless by heavy carpetings.

Back of the last row of seats in the auditorium is a balustrade on top of which is a wind shield of French plate glass for the further protection of the audience.

The auditorium floor aisles are carpeted with Wilton carpets in a golden tone. Doors and boxes are draped with blue velours trimmed with silver. All chairs in the orchestra and in the balcony are leather cushioned with leather backs. No steps are in the auditorium, the usual incline being used.

After leaving the foyer by means of the grand staircases the visitor comes to the mezzanine floor, heavily carpeted and equipped with resting places. This floor is to be used also as a promenade. There is a well in the center through which a view may be had of the foyer beneath.

On this same floor on the right is the men's smoking room, the manager's office; on the left, the ladies' retiring room.

There are no steps leading from the promenade to the balcony because of the fact that the entranceway is level. In the front of the balcony are three rows of boxes partitioned off from the remainder of the seats by brass railings. The chairs in the boxes are upholstered wickerworks. Similar chairs are used also in the furnishings of the twelve boxes on both sides of the house.

As would be expected in a theatre of this description, the lighting system was developed to suit its individual requirements. All the lights are concealed in boxes and connected to sets of dimmers in order that the illumination may be varied in intensity or coloring according to the program. More and more is the light system for the theatre being given the prominence it demands if the atmosphere is to be made attractive, restful and easy on the eyes of the patrons.

The projection room is situated in the back of the balcony. Its equipment consists of two Simplex machines connected to a direct current supply.

Decorations

The decorative work throughout the Strand was developed by Gustave Brand and Co., of Chicago. The treatment of the spacious lobby of the Strand theatre is very beautiful, the walls being done in a two-tone silk effect combining golds and creamy yellows, surmounted with an Acanthus ceiling in delicate coloring harmonizing perfectly with the side walls. The color scheme of the theatre itself is based on gray, ivory and rose, richness being obtained through the use of fourteen medallions in striking blue and mauve tints on the upper side walls, the subject of the paintings on the medallions being modernized figures of dancing nymphs, etc. The lower portion of the walls is in two tone silk effects.

In the area formed by the upper part of the proscenium arch is a magnificent ultra modern mural painting, "Spring of Youth," featuring dancing girls against the colorful background. The size of this artwork is twenty feet deep by fifty two wide.

In order to bring out the various effects sought for in the creation of these beautiful decorations, the lighting scheme was developed as an adjunct. For instance, directly in front of the mural painting is a battery of lights so arranged as to make the important points stand out in relief. The same idea was carried out in the lighting of the great dome above the auditorium floor.

The opening of the Strand was an event in the city of Binghamton. Very little was known about the structure until the opening night.

Forty Thousand Cubic Feet of Heated Air Per Minute During Zero Weather

Monsoon System as Installed in Proposed Wilson Theatre Designed for This Capacity

Of the many new theatres being built this year, few of them will compare with the New Wilson theatre, Baltimore, Md., in point of comfort. By this is meant not only comfortable seats and projection that is easy on the eyes, but perfect ventilation, winter and summer, with an even temperature during cold weather and a cool, breezy, enjoyable atmosphere during the hot months of the year.

The owners of the theatre knew what they wanted—and they knew where to get it. So they put their problem up to the engineers of the Monsoon Cooling System, Inc., New York.

To take care of the heating and ventilating in cold weather, Monsoon Engineers designed a unit of a No. 6 Monsoon Duplex Set, located in the attic space near the stage, and so arranged that in zero weather 40,000 cubic feet of fresh air can be heated to a temperature of 70 degrees and blown into the theatre through gridded openings in the proscenium arch.

As this large volume of heated fresh air is passed into the house, it settles like a blanket of even warmth over the entire auditorium, driving the cold or foul air out through the entrance doors and other openings at the floor level.

Due to the very slight pressure thus built up, the air movement is outward at the entrance doors. Consequently, when these are opened, there is no inward draft of cold air, but on the contrary, an outward movement of warm air. This is one point of comfort that will be much appreciated by patrons occupying seats in the rear of the house.

Equally necessary as winter heating and ventilating, is proper cooling in hot weather. Monsoon engineers have provided for this by placing three No. 8 Monsoon Breeze Makers in the attic near the (Continued on page 4668)

Development of the Mazda Lamp for Projection Purposes

A Series of Interests to All Projectionists

Field of the Mazda Lamp for Motion Picture Projection

The 30 volt 30 ampere 900 watt motion picture lamp with prismatic condenser and mirror will replace any A. C. Carbon arc in motion pictures where a high intensity arc is desired. The D. C. it will replace arcs up to 25 amperes and even larger arcs of higher amperage where those arcs are at present not properly manipulated.

With an ordinary painted muslin screen or plaster wall, a 12-foot picture can be obtained on throws not to exceed 30 feet.

With a first-class reflecting type screen, a 15 to 18-foot picture may be satisfactorily projected at a distance not exceeding 90 feet.

With a first-class reflecting type-screen and a No. 2 lens a 15-foot picture can be projected a distance of 110 to 115 feet. For narrow houses if the proper screen is installed longer throws can be used.

It must be remembered that first-class results cannot be obtained unless lamp and mirror are accurately focused and lamp is properly operated.

A smaller size Mazda Lamp for motion picture projection, the 30 volt 20 ampere 600 watt lamp, is about three-fourths as powerful as the 900 watt 30 ampere lamp.

The construction and appearance of the two are identical. The same size bulb is used for both. The only difference lies in the size of the filament wire.

The 600 watt lamp, of course, is not as powerful as the 900 and was designed not for large motion picture work but more to fill the need for small theatres, churches, schools, small auditoriums and halls.

Again, occasionally in a small town where there is only a limited supply of current, or where a theatre makes its own power, the 900 watt lamp may be too great a drain on the current supply.

Both the 900 and 600 watt lamps run at approximately 30 volts and thus can be run from the 32 volt country homelighting outfits providing proper rheostats be used to insure the lamp operating at exact amperage.

There are now on the market several types of small portable motion picture machines that will fit into a suit-case and are used by salesmen, lecturers, etc., for parlor entertaining. For this class of work, where the pictures are necessarily small and the throw comparatively short, a low voltage lamp is not an absolute necessity as such machines are usually equipped with 110 to 115 volt stereopticon lamps.

A 600 watt lamp in a round bulb is usually used. The round bulb is more compact but it does not allow the lamp to be placed so close to the condenser. Consequently, the amount of light picked up is decreased over that that could be obtained from a lamp in a tubular bulb and a condening lens designed for a short back focus.

There has recently been developed a small low wattage low voltage lamp for use with small portable motion picture machines. It takes only 100 watts, is of 25 volts, and 4 amperes, and when used with the proper condensing lens system will put more light on the screen than a 400 watt 110 volt stereopticon lamp used for this purpose. The increased light that is obtained is due to the fact that the lamp is placed in a very small tubular bulb and the bulb placed very close to a specially designed condenser thus, a large angle of light is picked up.

For slide projection in a commercial motion picture theatre, a 1000 watt 110 volt lamp is available. The standard (110) lamp is well adapted for this sort of work since the projection of slides does not require such a high intensity as is necessitated with film.

stage and two 6-ft. fans on the roof over the balcony. The No. 6 Monson Duplex Set, used for heating and ventilating in cold weather, is arranged with bypass dampers so that its capacity is doubled for hot weather cooling. The combined equipments, blowing in, sweep fully 2,300,000 cubic feet of pure, wholesome air through the entire length and width of the auditorium every hour—a total of 23,000,000 cubic feet every ten-hour day.

The result may easily be imagined. No matter where a person might take his seat, he will feel cool and comfortable. In Baltimore's hottest summer weather, it will be a pleasure to enjoy a show in the New Wilson theatre, and the summer receipts will prove that it pays to cater to the public's comfort.

In laying out a system of this kind, a material economy is effected by eliminating underground trenches, sheet metal ducts and also much of the steam piping necessary with the ordinary heating systems. Due to this saving, ventilating and cooling costs no more than the ordinary system of heating alone.

Work on the Wilson theatre is progressing rapidly. The site is practically cleared and the foundations have already started. Mr. E. G. Blanke, the theatre architect, looks for an opening date some time during September.

Airdome Queries
A letter was received a few days ago signed only by "A Long Island Exhibitor." This letter, printed below, requests information which we would be pleased to give the writer if he will communicate with us by name.

"I have noticed large tents erected every year in neighboring vicinities used for religious purposes, and as I have idle property in Long Island, I intend to erect a large tent, to be used as an airdome.

"These tents are large enough to seat about five hundred people. I would be very thankful if you will advise me on the following things:

"Where can these tents be hired from (I believe they are made of tarpaulin) and where is this company located?

"Where can the folding benches be hired from (each bench seats about eight people), and where is this company located?

"How can I arrange for an operator's booth in said tent (and can a booth be hired by the season)? Are there any portable booths, or ones that can be erected with little trouble and expense?

"How can I arrange for the electricity to be installed and is it necessary to have electricity, or is there any substitute? Will it be expensive to install electricity?

"I have been a reader since 1917, and have noticed your straightforward answers to questions exhibitors ask you. Kindly give me an answer in this issue of your magazine, as I will look for same."

Reply.—If the writer of the above will kindly send in his name to the Equipment Service Department of Motion Picture News we will give him a list of manufacturers who are either making or handling the material he asks about. It is not the policy of The News to publish names of manufacturers in its columns unless the article is handled exclusively by one firm.

Primary Batteries Contd.

The average shelf-life of a high grade battery is from 10 to 12 months, and is increased by storing the cells at a low temperature.

Since the terminal voltage of a dry cell falls off more rapidly on continuous duty than on intermittent duty, they are better adapted for work which does not require a continuous flow of current, such as phonograph and ignition use.

The energy of a battery depends on the amount of active materials. A dry cell contains a definite quantity of chemical energy which may be transformed into electrical energy, so that a battery can give a definite number of watt-hours, or a definite number of amperes-hours at normal voltage. This energy may be taken as a small current for a long interval of time or as a large current for a short time. Thus while the total energy in the battery is fixed by the weight of the active materials the power of the battery (volts times amperes) may vary over a wide range.

Series and parallel arrangement—Cells are in series when the positive or plus pole is connected to the negative or minus pole of the next. The circuit is completed through a resistance connected to the plus and minus poles at the ends of the series. The total e. m. f. for a series connection is the sum of the e. m. f. of the N cells, or is equal to N x E, where N is the number of cells connected in series and E the terminal voltage of one cell. The internal resistance of the battery is N x r, where r is the internal resistance of each cell. If the resistance of the external circuit to which the battery is connected is R ohms, then the current flowing will be: 1 equals N x E divided by (R plus N x r).

Example—Three cells each having an e. m. f. of 1.5 volts, and an internal resistance of 0.6 ohms, are connected in series, with a resistance of 10 ohms. What is the current in the resistance when the circuit is closed?

Solution—By substituting in the above equation, 1 equals 3 x 1.5 / (10 + (3 x .6)) or .382 amperes.

Cells are connected in parallel when all the positive poles are joined together and connected to one lead and all the negative poles joined and connected to the other lead. Fig. 40 shows three cells connected in parallel to an external resistance. The cells are then equivalent to a single cell with an internal resistance of r/N, and the e. m. f. is equal to that of a single cell. If the external connected resistance is R ohms, then the current in the external circuit will be given by the equation:

\[ I = \frac{M E}{R + \frac{M r}{N}} \]

Problems to Be Solved

32. Twelve primary cells each having an e.m.f. on no load of 1.5 volts and an internal resistance of 0.25 ohms are connected in parallel to an external circuit which has a resistance of 0.5 ohms. What is the current in the external circuit?

33. Ten cells each having an e.m.f. of 2.2 volts and an internal resistance of 0.07 ohms, are connected in series to a circuit whose resistance is 4.3 ohms. What current exists in the circuit?

34. If the cells of problem 32 are connected six in series, two in parallel, what would be the current in the external circuit of 0.5 ohms?

New Transatlantic Projector

BARELY a week passes but that a new portable projector makes its appearance on the market. Although somewhat similar in general layout, yet each machine usually has one or more unusual points that are worthy of special mention. The new Transatlantic Projector recently placed on the market by the Transatlantic Film Corporation falls within the category of those worthy of a description.

The Transatlantic Portable Projector is very similar to the customary "suit-case" type in dimensions and general make-up. It is motor-driven and may be attached to any lamp socket.

Gentlemen:

It may interest you to know that during the past eleven years which we have been conducting moving picture laboratories, we have used every make of moving picture projector except one.

At the present time we have in constant use every day three Powers 6B machines for use in screen examination of our product.

For all round service where hard constant work is required, we consider the Powers machine in a class by itself.

One of its features is the manner in which the gear mechanisms are enclosed. A compact die-casting, oil tight, houses all the gears and makes the operation of the machine quieter.

Another one of its features is the water-cell built into the projector on the principle of an automobile radiator. The cell is fed with the liquid from a storage tank attached to the top side of the casing. As the water becomes heated by the passage of the rays through it, it rises into the storage tank and is replaced by water which has been cooled. As showing how efficient this water-cell is in keeping down the heat on the film, a test was made with a piece of standard inflammable film in the aperture. After allowing the light to remain on the same frame for several minutes the piece of film was removed and it was found that the temperature rise was negligible. A thermometer placed in the light beam at the aperture plate showed a rise of only a few degrees after several minutes exposure.

The operation of the machine is exceptionally smooth and free from undue vibration. This is due mostly to the enclosed gears running in oil.

A picture size of 9x12 feet at a distance of 70 feet is claimed for the machine by its manufacturers.

Looking to the Future

In conclusion, many new flame lamps have been invented and developed in the last year or two, and now varieties of flame carbons for special effects are available for a multitude of simple or complex artistic effects. However, only a small beginning has been made as to the artistic effects counting merely the minor factors of control such as direction of light, its diffusion, change of intensity and the power by proper color and environment to greatly aid the motion picture artist. There is the subject of “catch-lights” in the eyes of the players that represent the reflection of the light sources. If the light sources are rectangular in shape, then the catch-lights will be rectangular or triangular, and with sharp curve points. The bad effect of not using round or oval light sources is easily appreciated. It is well recognized that curved lines convex to each other tend to give a sorrowful, depressed look. Curved lines concave to each other tend to give a pleasant, agreeable, smiling look. By attention to the shape of the diffusing screen for the light sources, it would seem possible to vary this element so as to be in harmony with the ideals of the play. All the recent motion picture play-plays of the best companies show the power of white flame arc lighting to give fine definition, splendid half tones, luminous shadows and favorably shaped “catch” lights.

In some portrait studios the light of the flame arc is thrown upon the ceiling (Fig. 26) or a reflecting screen, and in this way some very beautiful pictures have been photographed. The possibilities of indirect lighting with the flame arc have only been touched upon. By suitable lamp design, it seems practical not only to get more diffuse light, but also greater candlepower delivered to the working plane. Again in the matter of regulation, the shunt control (see Figs. 15 and 16) is one of the important future developments that will enable the artists to secure a wide variety of new effects.

The experiments with multiple trim lamps, Fig. 17, show how long life (long period between trims) can be secured for the flame arc.

On alternating current efficiency can be greatly increased with the flame arc by reactance control.

In the matter of studio lighting, the writer believes with Mr. Allison, that interior rooms lighted entirely by artificial light have splendid advantages, because the lighting can then be entirely controlled by the artist, and the extremely hot atmosphere of sunlight glass studio is entirely done away, and a nice cool, comfortable studio can be maintained throughout the year. The director can then obtain all diffuse light, all direct light, or any proportion and direction of diffused and direct light under perfect control, and old King Sol with his changing position, will be entirely unnecessary for all interior scenes. In conclusion this article has pointed out many new developments, and has indicated the promise of many others in development of different colored flame carbons, and a great variety of motion picture flame lamps.

I am indebted to Mr. P. P. Bethea for aid in many long experiments on the flame arc, to Mr. A. Broggin for assistance in securing many of the photographs, to Mr. Ross, master mechanic of Vitagraph, and Miss Anita Stewart for pictures from the Vitagraph Co., to the Edison Co., and to Mr. Beckwith of the Reserve Photoplay Co. for pictures, to Mr. Max Mayer (of Wohl & Co.) for friendly suggestions, to Mr. Allison, Mr. J. E. Brubec, and to many others who have so materially contributed to the value of this paper.

The advantages of EASTMAN footage numbered negative film will immediately assert themselves in the final cutting and assembling of successive scenes.

An Improved Formula for Dye Toning with Ferricyanide and Chromic Acid Bleach

A Recent Communication from the Philadelphia Laboratory of F. E. Ives

DYE TONING WITH FERRICYANIDE AND CHROMIC ACID BLEACH.
IMPROVED FORMULA.
Potassium Ferricyanide, 10 grains
Chromic Acid, 22 "
Water, 16 ounces

The positive to be dye-toned must be thin and superficial, as obtained by full exposure and short development from a negative of average density. It is advantageous to fix with acid hypo. Wash thoroughly. The image will bleach completely in the above bath in from two to five minutes. It should then be washed in running water to remove yellow stain from the whites. Ten minutes in gently running water is usually sufficient for dye positive film. Too much washing reduces the mordanting power of the image, and washing directly under the tap is to be avoided. As soon as the whites are quite free from stain the positive can be immersed in the dye bath, in which it will dye up to the limit in a few minutes. The dyed dye is then washed out in gently running water, or by standing, with occasional rocking, in water made slightly acid with acetic acid. If the color is too dense, it may be slowly reduced by soaking in the acidified water. If deeper coloring is desired, the finished dye print can be put through the process a second time, thus doubling the depth of color.

The finished dye image is very transparent, but like the mordant-dyed copper-toned image, it dries matt, and can be made more transparent for projection by varnishing or oiling, which, however, is seldom desirable.

The formula given for the bleaching solution is unsuitable for dense positives because it hardens the gelatin so much where there is a heavy silver deposit that it resists the absorption of the dye. For such positives, the percentage of chromic acid should be reduced, and the resulting dye print will then be less transparent. In case the dyeing does not proceed normally in the deeper shadows, very prolonged immersion will often secure a perfect result.

Among the most active dyes for this process are methylene blue, fuchsine and chrysoidine, the solutions of which should contain considerable acetic acid. Saffraine, auramine and malachite green work well with less acetic acid in the solution. From 20 to 50 grains of the dye stuff may be used in making a gallon bath, and glacial acetic acid from a few drops to half an ounce.

Interesting and beautiful results, including various qualities of black can be obtained with mixtures of these dyes.

A New Studio Lamp

Evolved from the every day experience and demonstrated needs of the big motion studios of Southern California a new studio lamp has been invented by two Los Angeles electricians.

The inventors are C. P. Chamberlain and D. W. Reynolds, electrical engineers who made a practical study of the studio lighting process for several months before perfecting their product.

The new lamp bearing the trade mark CRECO was an instant success even the lordly motion picture director who rarely descends from a contemplation of human emotions to the material indicating a strenuous desire for the latest lighting development.

It is said that the principal virtues of the CRECO lamp are their adaptability to the variations of voltage, their simplicity and lightness.

According to the Chamberlain-Reynolds Electric Company their lamps will maintain an unwavering illumination at all times. A large order for these lamps was received recently from the Carroll Baker Co., of Sydney, Australia.

McGinnis Goes to Speer Carbon

Mr. J. Belmont Mosser, sales manager of the Speer Carbon Company, announces the addition of Mr. F. J. McGinnis to the sales force of the Speer Carbon. Mr. McGinnis was formerly connected with the United Theatre Equipment Corporation of Pittsburgh, and is a practical projectionist of ten years' experience. He will commence immediately to call on exhibitors throughout the country.

Prominent in A. S. C.

L. Guy Wilky, second vice-president of the American Society of Cinematographers, graduated as a mining engineer from the University of Arizona in 1913. Throughout his college course he had been a big factor in athletics, being active in all branches from tennis to football. Parallel with this scholastic and physical education he had been pursuing a course of self-education in photography, starting at the age of ten when he earned his first kodak in the harvest field. This enthusiastic hobby led to employment in various photographic studios and helped him to see the possibilities and opportunities in the new industry developing in Hollywood.

For three years he was associated with Lulan Company, and one year each with American Film Company, Louise Glann, Inc., and Bessie Barriscale. Among the most important productions photographed were: "A Man's Man," with J. Warren Kerrigan; "The Goddess of Lost Lake" and "An Alien Enemy," with Louise Glann; "The Woman Michael Married," and "Joslyn's Wife," with Bessie Barriscale; "The Tree of Knowledge" and "Jack Straw" and "The Prince Chump" with Wm. De Mille.

Mr. Wilky is an enthusiastic club worker, being a member of the Elks, Masons, Knights Templars and Shriners, and a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon College Fraternity. He was one of the charter members of the A. S. C. and is an active member of the organization.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released.

"Up in Mary's Attic"
(Five Reel Comedy—Fine Arts Pictures)

IT looks as if the five reel comedy has come to stay. Mack Sennett experimented beyond the show's limits some time ago and earned his reputation to some extent, although the subject matter of his ideas belong in pieces of two reel length. "Up in Mary's Attic" is the newest five reel comedy and it is surely going to be heard from because it is based primarily on life-like action, the burlesque incident being only secondary in capitalizing values. There is nothing of the slapstick about it. The humor is not gained by pie-slicing methods but by a homogeneous group of grotesque comedians giving chase to one another. Its mirth-provoking qualities are founded on an incident of life that is reasonably true.

You may call the picture a politic comedy—a satirical comedy—a melodramatic comedy and not go wrong on either count. Place a delectable type of femininity in a boarding school—bring out that she is married to the athletic instructor and will forfeit her inheritance and he expel the marriage. In politics was introduced to introduce a cute infant for unconscious humor and juvenile appeal—present a galaxy of the girls as the student body and you have an idea that spells comedy, and with a purpose. Take away the melodramatic trimmings and the bevy of "Bee-Vee-Dee'd" beauties and any good director could fashion the subject a matter a bright and merry farce comedy.

The high spot in this offering is the aforementioned baby who enacts her scenes in a fine spirit of playfulness. Extremely provocative of laughter is her mother's attempt to hide her away from those who are not "in the know." Mary finds a safe place for her in the attic of the dormitory where an intelligent dog acts in the capacity of nurse. There are a number of offbeat scenes like this one. But for the benefit of those who like their comedies dressed up with feminine pulchritude let us state that "Up in Mary's Attic" keeps to the standard set by Dr. Ziegfeld on the stage. They symbolize the comedy branch, cut up high jinks in the "gym" and give the comedy a good deal of its appeal. Eva Novak and Harry Gribble are the featured players and they give an excellent account of themselves, the former leading tone and quality through her charm and sincerity, while the latter furnishes fun in his droll buffoonery. It is a comedy of situations and surprises. Not forgetting the baby—LAURENCE REID.

"The Great Shadow" (Republic)

A NOther one of those pictures dealing with Bolshevism and its results upon capital and labor. Although this feature is better than the average run of its kind, it is hard to say whether it will interest those who view it.

The Russians, the bonds, the riots, the blow ups, the shipyards and the long subtitles denoting the Bolshevistic methods and their effects on mankind are all here and in good working order.

The story is fair and deals with the struggle of a union leader, John McDonald, whose men are determined to quit work because their unjust demands are not recognized by the capitalists.

They are encouraged in their wrongdoings by a gang of Bolsheviks whose object is to use their unorthodox tactics as an instrument in gaining their ends—namely, getting control of this country.

The American and British flags are about to be trampled upon by a radical leader who is addressing a meeting, when McDonald knocks him down. The leader thus gains the first step in settling an unseizable arrangement between the warring factions, capital and labor.

The cast is a good one and is headed by Tyrone Power, who plays the union leader with conviction. Direction and sets are up to standard and the exteriors show some good scenes in and about the shipyards. Length 5 reels—FRANK LEONARD.

"Modern Centaurs"
(Educational One Reel)

THIS Educational has a classic title which might indicate to the man in the street that it was mere-implementing. We hold the opinion that the offering fulfills the legend and because the average person would fail to be attracted if he was looking for scenes alone. The subject carries more of an educational quality than a scene one and there is no denying that it furnishes a full quota of thrills. The ordinary human being reacts to the spirit of competition in athletic endeavor. He loves to see the best man win. He will be fascinated in "Modern Centaurs" because it presents a body of expert cameramen each attempting to do the impossible in a more finished manner than the other.

The offering is one of the best of its kind. The men are expert in the middle and the horses are thoroughbreds. LAURENCE REID.

"Content"
(Herbert Kaufman—Editorial in Pictures—Released by Schonick—One Reel)

UNDER the title of "Content," the second of Herbert Kaufman's "editorial" writings reaches the screen to register as rather a novelty and with considerable meat contained in its filmic story. True, this story is primarily told in titles with the action following illustrating that which has been stated, but the reel, as a whole, is interesting, with a decided message.

"Content" concerns a fabled Chinese beggar, who appears before the Mandarin with his two children, complaining against his fate. The Mandarin offers to give him riches, many beautiful wives and all that the beggar would naturally desire; but only under the proviso that the beggar shall give half of that he already possesses to the Mandarin, that half including one of his limbs, half of his children's bodies, an eye, etc. The beggar declines the gifts on the terms imposed, and suddenly discovering that he has been rich all the time without knowing it, goes away rejoicing.—J. S. DICKERSON.

“THE SEA RIDER”
(Vitagraph)

Seafaring Tale Carries an Adequate Punch for Morey

They have found in vivid story and love story for Harry Morey's rugged personality that "The Sea Rider" is no exception from the rule. The Vitagraph star has been identified with the screen long enough to run the much abused "gummi of emotions" in every conceivable kind of character. But to our best recollection it is the first time that he has ever appeared as one of those honest, Godfearing fishermen of the New England coast. The theme is based upon disillusioned romance with the rugged hero shifting his time before the girl of his heart consents to marry him. He is a simple soul, ignorant of the subtlest and ornate ways of life. But with his own country and simple surroundings in the net of making himself adaptable. A character that arouses a fine measure of sympathy.

He trusts mankind and when he is absent for a year, having taken his brother's place in order to give the latter a rest from his arduous duties on the briny deep, he returns to find the glamour of his romance takes away. The trust in his bosom gives away to a man in a trap\\\r\\n\\n

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Sea Rider," which comes to the theatre on— of week with Harry Morey as the star, is a story of seafaring folk. The hero is a simple soul, ignorant of the subtlest and ornate ways of life. But with his own country and simple surroundings in the net of making himself adaptable. A character that arouses a fine measure of sympathy.

The story is written by Harry Dittmar and adapted by Fred Schaefer.

PROGRAM PREVIEW

An unusual feature is "The Sea Rider," the Vitagraph offering with Harry Morey, a novel inspired by the late G. Holland story. The star character—one of those perfectly transparent beings. He is the master of a fishing schooner. Nearly all the scenes are of scenes of romance, adventure, trills and the hero's human interest. Pathos is also a vital factor, and this note is given in action of genuine tragic conflict. The scenic backgrounds are appropriate, the director having spared no expense in making the story ring with reality. Mr. Morey's company consists of Webster Campbell, Van Dyke Brooke, Alice Calbon and Lillian Valentine.

"JES' CALL ME JIM"
(Goldwyn)

Rogers Has Rich Character Study in Story of Homespun Quality

Will Rogers has the faculty of making any kind of material look like first rate entertainment. His newest Goldwyn release, "Jes' Call Me Jim," may be rather weak on dramatic values, but there is no denying its human interest and heart appeal. But that is Rogers' forte. Being an everyman, full of heart and soul, he is able to reflect this human quality so that it enriches his characterization. His study is given a like-life quality through his brand of humor which is splendidly commingled with pathos. There is Rogers' art. He has a sense of balance.

The situation itself is a trifle old-fashioned in theme and treatment, the latter sequences being quite improbable. But one doesn't search too closely for flaws when there is such an abundance of human touches, such rich characterization, and so many pun-worthy subtitles and colorful scenes. It has been said that the star writes his own raptures and colorful scenes, and one is inclined to believe that they are characteristic of his own way. He appears again as the lonely son of the sea (this time the hunter and trapper) who holds himself in low esteem when it comes to matters of love. Sacrificing himself for the sake of another whom he believes to have first call with the girl of his affections, who is still in love toward bringing them together. There is a variation, however, from previous pictures since it quality of self-sacrifice in his favor. His invents some rare stories to express his romantic fervor.

There is a conspicuous vein of melodrama which has its theatrical string. But the director, in his interpretation, is incor- nerated in an asylum and it is Jim's idea to rescue him and bring his pres- sor to town. Which he does in his inevitable way. The courtroom scene is quite far-fetched and is saved through its humorous nu- nances. There is a touch of the farcical which is punctuated with scenes of contriving pathos. The backgrounds are well done, some of the wooded exteriors being exquisite. And they tune up the picture and add in giving it a spiritual quality. The picture is quite a par with "Laughing Bill Hynie" and "Jubilo."—Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Will Rogers, the most human of the screen, will come to the theatre opening— of his latest comedy entitled "Jes' Call Me Jim," adapted from the J. G. Holland novel, "Seven Oaks," for which the subject is peculiarly suited to the star's personality and talent and provides him with the vehicle for a knock-about, laid-back trapper. The subject is peculiarly suited to the star's personality and talent and provides him with the vehicle for a knock-about, laid-back trapper. The character of Jim Butter- worth, a millioner, and he believes to be in love with an inane inventor, Paul Benedict. Rogers brings out the pathos because of the sympathy he engenders since he is willing to sacrifice himself to make the young woman happy. In his various roles he is always entertaining.

Here he promises to rescue Paul and discovers that Belcher, the most influen- tial man in town, has rubbed the inventor of a machine on which he has made a fortune. With the help of Mike Conlin, so a trapper, Jim determines to force a concession from Belcher. The result is successful for the inventor. In this picture Rogers does not skip quite out of range. In fact the majority of scenes are forced by Mrs. Jim, and he almost spoils the ceremony when the minister starts to say the "Jes' call me Jim." The picture is crowded with dramatic moments which are interspersed with scenes of pathos and humor. The star's delivery is expressed also in the subtitles. Clare- nce Badger directed the feature, which is interpreted by a well-rounded cast.

PROGRAM PREVIEW

"Jes' Call Me Jim," the latest Goldwyn feature starring the incomparable Will Rogers, is the feature picture which comes to this theatre next.— Mr. Rogers has built up a large and enthusiastic following through his ability to par- ticipate the everyday, human spirit of folk. More than anything else in life, he is a trapper. That "Jes' call me Jim" presents him again in the role of a regular human being who loves a woman and believes in love with another. The picture is a rich study of the character of the star's personality, and it also provides an abundance of dramatic moments. The picture is an adaptation of J. G. Holland's story, "Seven Oaks," and was adapted by Will Rogers.

"THE HOUSE OF TOYS"
(American-Pathe)

Picture Lacks Moving Moments Through Its Overworked Theme and Dragggy Action

This American release might have been made into an entertaining picture, despite its having the distinction of being one of the first two pictures thrown into three reels and with less attention paid to irrelevant details. As it is, it travels in its obvious conclusion, selling out on the journey of an unconscious amount of highlights which become rather tiresome before the introduction of the principal character. The story presents the idea of domestic misunderstandings and characterizations which are nothing but a tedious repetition of the same thing. The sympathy is generated, it falters elsewhere also. There isn't a scene that carries any real dramatic quality, and too much of the story is given away in expository subplots.

Yet the greatest asset is that the figures are revealed standing out in groups of two and three with nothing of consequence accomplished. A "sweeter brained" girl marries what is to all appearances—a young man destined for big things. He lacks confidence in himself with the result that a year later finds him a failure. The interior decorations of his house show that his attitude of poverty. So they have a mutual agreement to disagree. He goes to a furnished room and finds employment with a good Samaritan, while the wife finds refuge with a wealthy aunt—a woman who had never approved of the marriage and sought to discredit the husband in the eyes of her spouse.

The latter, although presented as the principal character, are being given little pointing out the "whys and wherefores" of the disagreement. The players act as tired as the story, as if they realized that it lacked moving moments. A note of pathos is brought out to show the contrast between a woman who spent her life in a sick bed of roses, and the money-minded wife. The latter, although presented as the principal character also, is given little chance. This is a fault for two reels, while her husband is working to gain confidence. Eventually she has an awakening which is also felt by the aunt. And she returns to her husband with a fine spirit of humanity though her reconciliation looks too arbitrary. There are twelve or fifteen too many close-ups. The principal weakness of the picture is its characterization. The players do well with their few opportunities. Length, 6 reels.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A story which presents domestic misunderstanding is given real treatment. The story, which is played out in a single reel, is set in a cafe and is a study of love and marriage. It is the story of a young man and woman who have married, and the wife being given little chance. The story ends in a way that leaves the impression with the young man and woman who have married, and the wife being given little chance. The story ends in a way that leaves the impression that they are happy together. The young man and woman who have married, and the wife being given little chance. The story ends in a way that leaves the impression that they are happy together.

PROGRAM READER

She was a vain, pleasure-loving, money-mad girl, but being in love she didn't hesitate over marrying the ambitious bachelor. She thought that his talent would lead them to the heights of prosperity. But a year of married life brought home to her that he was a failure. So they agreed to separate. She couldn't sink to his level, it was so bad. She was reduced to poverty, and finally filled the last part of the experience. And the wife found out that her life was shallow and selfish. What did she do? What became of the husband and the other girl? Was there another man? See "The House of Toys," a picture of a slice of life. See it at this theater.

SUGGESTIONS

You haven't any outstanding high spot which you can exploit here. The best course is to make a variety of costumes of clothes that it teaches a good sermon without being preachy. Tell that it deals with domestic misunderstanding of how a young couple was to be that their life was a failure. THE UNKNOWN RANGER

(Awny Film Corp.)

A MILDLY ENTERTAINING WESTERN

This Western is not quite up to the average when compared with many of the up-to-date productions of its kind.

But this doesn't mean that it won't attract and interest those who are given to entertainment of this sort.

Chief faults lie in the fact that it is lacking in the thrills, the strong dramatic moments and suspense, which is necessary in pictures of this type.

"The Unknown Ranger" has all of these qualities, but they are not of the intensive variety and therefore are not impressive.

The story, which is neither realistic nor romantic, is still interesting and has some good points, and will hold the interest of the ordinary Western fan.

It is the story of a young ranger who has been made a ranger, to round up a smuggler, and who succeeds in doing so. He does not succeed, however, for the hero frustrates his plans, has a running fight with him among the cliffs and captures him in the home of the heroine, only to let the villain slip away in a very easy manner, a rather weak and unsatisfying finale.

The cast is an ordinary one, among whom are: Rex Ray, Roy Hill and Marie Newell.

The direction is of the ordinary variety if the action is taken into consideration, but it must be said that the selection of locations was up to standard and gave the picture an atmosphere which could not have been better.

Length, 5 reels.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Rex Ray is in the Awny Film Corporation's production, "The Unknown Ranger," which will appear at this theatre on... the story is of a Western adventurer containing the thrills, action, and tense dramatic situations which are sought by the Western fan, and is played by Rex Ray, the star, who is capable of playing the leading role, which calls for plenty of action, shooting, and daring stunts.

He is often seen in Westerns, searching for "local color" for his books. But it is not long before he begins to realize that this Western is not up to standard, and gives up shooting.

Rex Ray now proceeded to round up the villain and tracked him to his mountain hiding place where a terrific fight took place between our hero and the villain. The villain is captured, but manages to escape again and is discovered in the heroine's ranch by Rex, who recognizes the man she had been suspicious of as the villain who was shot by the hero.

Rex enters, brands him as a liar and proves to the young girl that he is a real man and... "The Unknown Ranger."

PROGRAM READER

Rex Ray, the star, plays a delightfully picturesque role, and is supported by a cast of clever character actors.

The story tells of the efforts of a young cowboy, who has been made a ranger, to round up a gang of smugglers who are determined to set up a traffic in the most deplorable of drugs, opium.

They are led by an unscrupulous villain who has been at nothing, even trying to entice away the young heroine, in his spare moments.

He is pursued by Rex, who after two thrilling fights, one in a mountain cave and the other among the rocky cliffs, succeeds in capturing him.

The latter is finally rounded up in the heroine's mountain home, by our hero, who succeeds in branding him a liar and proves to his sweetheart that he is worthy of the name of "The Unknown Ranger."

SUGGESTIONS

Your one best bet is to play up the name of this feature which is rather an attractive one.

As the story is not a strong one as westerns go, it might not be a bad idea to advertise it as "a drama of western life," featuring more the human element than the shoot-outs and turf fights, which are rather mild.

However, there is one scene which is worthy of mention. It is the scene in which the hero is fighting the villain, and is seriously hurt. These cliff scenes appear to be rather high and should furnish excitement as the actors go through the action.

Rex Ray is a fair actor in this type of picture and could be played up to some advantage in the role but he is far from the top in action and acting.

CATCH LINES

He said he was a story writer and was looking for "local color" for his book. How about finding out that he was not the man he pretended to be? See "The Unknown Ranger," it will tell you.

How did the villain escape from the hero after he was wounded in a desperate fight? See "The Unknown Ranger," it will tell you.

"LOVE'S HARVEST"
(Fox)

Dainty Star in Comedy Drama of High Order

SHIRLEY MASON, in her third starring picture for Fox, keeps up the pace that ought to enthrall her in the hearts of many fans.

"Love's Harvest" may not equal "Her Elephant Man" from a production standpoint, for there is nothing very elaborate about it; but for an interesting little story, with slightly humorous dialogue, and for good acting, not only by the star, but by the entire cast, it will rank among the best.

Howard Mitchell, the director, seems to have attained a happy mean by injecting sufficient, yet not excessive, smears of sentiment. For Shirley Mason is a star, and the tendency with the producers is to fill the picture so full of sweet little close-ups that it reminds one of a confectionary shop. But in "Love's Harvest" the star is allowed to impress her delightful personality without leaving the feeling that we are witnessing an unseemly characterization of guile, giggling girlishness. And, in the continue love-scenes, the star gets under the skins of some sympathetic acting.

As to the story, it is a romantic, clean comedy drama, which takes a rather long time to get started, but once the interest is aroused, it is held until the very end. Jane Day, played by the star, is fifteen when she runs away from home, and is taken in by an old bachelor whose lonely heart has been touched by her child-like charms. He is a theatrical producer and realizes she has an excellent voice, so after two years he sends her to Paris to study. There her romance begins, but she feels it her duty to continue her musical career in order to repay the man who has been so kind to her, rather than marry the one she loves. But Jane Day’s career and her final decision is marked by her sacrifice to the man she loves.

Raymond McKeen and Edwin Booth Tilson help a great deal to make the picture pleasing, and the star’s dog will get a number of laughs. The titles are on the intimate side, written in a conversational manner.

They prove to be a great deal towards the end. There are no big interiors, but a Parisian street scene, and good sunset photography, will leave an impression.

On the whole, everyone ought to come away satisfied. Such comedy dramas as this may be the cause of some emotional actresses looking for new jobs.

Length, 5 reels. Directed by Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Jane Day — Shirley Mason
Jim Atherton — Raymond McKeen
Alton Tilson — Edwin Booth Tilson
Eleanor Hamilton — Lulu Leslie

Story by Pearl Dales Bell. Scenario by Isabel Jordan. Directed by Howard M. Mitchell.

PRESS NOTICE — STORY

Shirley Mason, the dainty star, is the leading lady in "Love's Harvest," the successor to her hit, "Her Elephant Man," which will be the attraction at the — — theatre beginning —.

"Love's Harvest" is the third picture starring Miss Mason, and is the same author who wrote "Her Elephant Man," which made a tremendous hit whenever shown. The attractive little star will also be remembered in all the pictures she played the role of Jane Day.

Jane Day is a pleasing, human story, crammed with comedy, and with bits of pathos sprinkled here and there, while an absorbing love story runs through it. It is guaranteed to appeal to the star’s every opportunity to entertain and please you with its humor and its appeal. The story opens up the star’s new career and will have the public clamoring for her. Shirley Mason is the star, and her performance is outstanding.

In the cast are Raymond McKeen, an ideal leading man to play opposite such a star, and Edwin Booth Tilson, a talent that will be successful in any picture. Then there is "Buddie," a dog whose equal has seldom been seen on the screen.

PROGRAM READER

"Love’s Harvest," with Shirley Mason, is the attraction for —. Here is a picture that you will not want to miss any more than you would want to go without your deserts. It promises to be a big success as well as a box-office favorite. Shirley Mason is the star, and every one who has seen her in previous pictures will want to see her again. Shirley Mason is as popular as she is handsome, and she has a most attractive personality.

The story is about a young girl who wants to eat nothing but roast beef, and no one with her deserts. This means that you will want to see this picture, as well as the succeeding ones. Shirley Mason is the star, and you will be pleased with her performance. The picture is a big hit, and will be a great success.

Suggestions

Your booking of this picture will depend upon whether you have already shown, "Her Elephant Man," "Kathy," or "Treasure Island," to your patrons. If you have already shown these pictures, they will appreciate this new offering. If you have not shown any of these pictures, you may still do well with this one.

Remember that "Her Elephant Man" and "Treasure Island" are two of the most successful pictures of the year, and you may be sure that "Love's Harvest" will be a big hit. If you have shown "Kathy," you will want to continue it, as it is a very popular picture. If you have not shown "Kathy," you may want to consider it, as it is a very successful picture. "Love's Harvest" is a romantic comedy, not lacking in pathos, and overflowing with human interest. Shirley Mason is the star, and her performance is an adaptation from her own story. "Her Elephant Man" is the favorite of the audience, and the picture is a continuation of her previous picture. "Love's Harvest" is the star, and she is one of the most popular stars of the year. Shirley Mason is the star, and her performance is an adaptation from her own story. "Her Elephant Man" is the favorite of the audience, and the picture is a continuation of her previous picture. PRINT NOTICE — STORY

"Wolves of the Street," thrilling story of the West, and West street, the greatest money market in the world, will be the attraction at the — — theatre beginning —.

The story deals with crooked Wall street financiers and their attempts to penetrate it. In their villainy they have sought to entrap their victims through the use of all sorts of ruses and devices. The picture is a thrilling one, packed with excitement and thrills.

The story opens with the successful career of a young stockbroker named John Smith, who has made a fortune in the stock market. John Smith is a young man, ambitious and determined to make a success in life. He is visited by a mysterious man, who offers him a proposition. The man offers him a large sum of money if he will agree to carry out a certain scheme. John Smith is tempted by the offer, and he agrees to carry out the scheme.

The scheme is to use a group of crooks to manipulate the stock market, and to make a fortune for themselves. John Smith is agreeable to the scheme, and he agrees to participate. The scheme is carried out, and John Smith makes a great deal of money. However, the scheme is discovered, and John Smith is arrested. He is tried in court, and he is found guilty of fraud.

The picture is a thrilling one, packed with excitement and thrills. It is a picture that will be enjoyed by all who like stories of adventure and excitement. It is a picture that will be remembered for many years to come. It is a picture that will be enjoyed by all who like stories of adventure and excitement. SOLD ON MERIT ALONE

129 East 34th St.—New York
Mr. Watterson R. Rothacker,
President,
Rothacker Film Mfg. Co.,
Chicago.

Dear Mr. Rothacker:—

I am very happy to advise you that I think one of the things that has contributed so largely to the instantaneous success of “THE GUMPS” has been the exceptional work that has been done by your laboratory. I am looking forward with the keenest interest to the time that you open your laboratory in New York and Los Angeles, with the belief that when it does open we will be insured of good prints from every source that we buy.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) J. L. Friedman

A New Feature

Still another link has been added to the "NEWS" chain of service.

Turn to the Music Section of this week's issue and read the first of a series of articles by Charles D. Isaacson, under whose direction the Music Department will hereafter be conducted.

Mr. Isaacson has a following of two million music lovers he has created and developed in New York City. That means—he has shown results. Watch his work with Motion Picture News.

Another feature of this issue of the "NEWS" is a complete section of blue prints—complete theatre plans just as you would get them from an architect. They are part of the all-round service Motion Picture News is rendering to the theatre man and accessory manufacturer.

EXCLUSIVE FEATURES INC.
130 WEST 46TH ST., N.Y.
In the year to come, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will continue to produce and distribute the majority of the motion pictures that bring profit to the exhibitors that show them. The producing department, under the direction of Mr. Lasky, will deliver from studios in New York, in California, in England and in India, a quality of product perhaps even better than that which has marked the most prosperous year that exhibitors of Paramount Pictures ever have experienced.

We shall make about one hundred and twenty pictures a year, and will release at least two pictures every week.

A great many of these new productions are completed. To say that they are as strong box-office attractions as the best pictures of this year is to state a fact based upon actual observation of the finished product.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation enters the new year with more friends than ever before. It has made these friends by delivering a consistent supply of the most popular motion pictures at a fair price. It will keep these friends by continuing to supply the demand for productions of genuine quality.

These new Paramount Pictures will be booked on any plan that suits the convenience of the exhibitor.

SEPTEMBER

Adolph Zukor Presents a

GEORGE FITZMAURICE PRODUCTION

"THE RIGHT TO LOVE"

with Mac Murray and David Powell

Photoplay by OUIDA BERGERE Adapted from the play by Pierre Frondaie and Claude Farrare

A Paramount Picture

A picture as rich in setting and costuming, as strong in appeal, and as tremendous in box-office value as Mr. Fitzmaurice's "On With the Dance"

Adolph Zukor Presents

ELSIE FERGUSON in "LADY ROSE'S DAUGHTER"

Directed by HUGH FORD

By Mrs. Humphry Ward Scenario by Burns Mantle

A Paramount Picture

Mrs. Humphry Ward's famous novel provides the best vehicle that Miss Ferguson has ever had. Like "His House in Order" it is another triumph of Hugh Ford's directorship

Thomas H. Ince Presents

CHARLES RAY in "A VILLAGE SLEUTH"

Directed by Jerome Storm Photographed by Chet Lyons A Thomas H. Ince Production

A Paramount Picture

Charlie's the hired man in a sanitarium—and a correspondence school detective! That makes a story head and shoulders over any of his past stuff. Like "Greased Lightning" and "The Girl Dodger," but funnier

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

THOMAS MEIGHAN in "CIVILIAN CLOTHES"

Directed by HUGH FORD

From the play by Thompson Buchanan Scenario by Clara S. Beranger

A Paramount Picture

Thomas Meighan has become famous for his work in "The Miracle Man," "Male and Female" and "Why Change Your Wife?" Now a star in his own right, in a Broadway success of proven box-office appeal, he will be one of the really big money-makers of the year

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION
RELEASES

Adolph Zukor Presents

DOROTHY DALTON in
Sir James Barrie's Famous Play “HALF AN HOUR”
Directed by Harley Knoles
Scenario by Clara S. Beranger

A Paramount Picture
A luxurious and magnificent production of the great play by the author of “Male and Female” and “Peter Pan”

Cosmopolitan Productions

“HUMORESQUE” Featuring ALMA RUBENS
Story by Fannie Hurst
Scenario by Frances Marion
Directed by Frank Borzage

A Paramount Picture
A story of mother love— with all the comedy of “Potash and Perlmutter,” all the pathos of “The Music Master” and all the heart appeal of “Madame X”

The New Art Film Company Presents

DOROTHY GISH in “LITTLE MISS REBELLION” by Harry Carr
Scenario by Wells Hastings
Directed by George Fawcett

A Paramount Picture
Here's something out of the ordinary for Dorothy Gish. Now she is a Princess who in the whirligig of revolution becomes a flapjack artist in a lunch room. There's excitement, comedy and romance in every minute of it

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

WALLACE REID in “WHAT'S YOUR HURRY?”
by Byron Morgan
Directed by Sam Wood
Scenario by Byron Morgan

A Paramount Picture
Wallie Reid's best pictures were his automobile stories— "Double Speed" and "Excuse My Dust." Now in "What's Your Hurry?" he drives a motor truck. It has the same zip and pep, and it beats them both in power and speed and box-office appeal OCTOBER

Cosmopolitan Productions
“THE RESTLESS SEX”
by Robert W. Chambers with MARION DAVIES Directed by Robert Z. Leonard
A Paramount Picture
A sure-fire box-office title, a famous author and a wonderful cast make this a genuinely great money-maker. It is an ultra-luxurious production of Chambers’ story which ran in the Cosmopolitan and later in book form, fascinating millions of readers.

Jesse L. Lasky Presents
GEORGE MELFORD’S PRODUCTION
ROSCEO [FATTY] ARBUCKLE in “THE ROUND-UP”
From the play by Edmund Day Scenario by Tom Forman
Roscoe Arbuckle in a full length drama! That’s all you need to get the crowds. The play was a sensation on the stage, and on the screen, with Arbuckle in his first straight comedy role, it combines every element of success.

Thomas H. Ince Presents
DOUGLAS MACLEAN in “THE JAILBIRD”
A Thomas H. Ince Production
A Paramount Picture
Douglas MacLean was unanimously pronounced the brightest star in the film firmament last year. Exhibitors who cleaned up on “23½ Hours’ Leave,” “What’s Your Husband Doing?” and “Mary’s Ankle” don’t have to be told that this is a winner.

WILLIAM S. HART in “THE CRADLE OF COURAGE”
A William S. Hart Production
Directed and Adapted by Lambert Hillyer
A Paramount Picture
William S. Hart has been producing the best pictures of his career under his own management. First “The Toll Gate” and then “Sand!” And this one is on the same big scale, as human, as original, as thrilling as the others.

Jesse L. Lasky Presents
CECIL B. DeMILLE’S PRODUCTION “SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT”
by Jeanie Macpherson
A Paramount Picture
Elliott Dexter, Gloria Swanson, Theodore Roberts and other DeMille favorites interpret the roles of this magnificent production, which is rich in human interest, and carries in every scene the artistry of the producer.
RELEASERS

Jesse L. Lasky Presents
“A FULL HOUSE” with BRYANT WASHBURN
Scenario by Alice Eyton
Directed by James Cruze

A Paramount Picture
An adaptation of the popular comedy by Fred Jackson. Genuinely funny, with a unique and extraordinarily entertaining plot

MAURICE TOURNEUR’S “DEEP WATERS”
from F. Hopkinson Smith’s “Caleb West, Master Diver”
A Paramount Picture
A thrilling story of hazard and courage, and of the struggles and triumphs of love. A wonderful cast interprets the deeply human characters

Thomas H. Ince Presents
CHARLES RAY in “AN OLD-FASHIONED BOY”
by Agnes Christine Johnson
Directed by Jerome Storm Photographed by Chester Lyons A Thomas H. Ince Production
A Paramount Picture
The title alone tells the story. It is a typical Charles Ray subject, and in it he has done what is considered as some of the best and most appealing work in his remarkable screen career

Jesse L. Lasky Presents
ETHEL CLAYTON in “A CITY SPARROW” by Kate Jordan
Directed by Sam Wood Scenario by Clara Genevieve Kennedy
A Paramount Picture
One of the most human and appealing parts ever played by Miss Clayton. The story is one of splendid heart interest and is filled with humor

Jesse L. Lasky Presents
“HELD BY THE ENEMY” with Jack Holt, Agnes Ayres, Wanda Hawley and Lewis Stone
From the play by William Gillette Directed by Donald Crisp Scenario by Tom Forman
A Paramount Picture
NOVEMBER

Jesse L. Lasky Presents a

GEORGE MELFORD PRODUCTION

“BEHOLD MY WIFE”

from the novel, “The Translation of a Savage” by Sir Gilbert Parker. With Mabel Julienne Scott

The magnificent natural scenery of the Northwest, and the richness of modern England form highly contrasted backgrounds for an engrossing story of a man's sacrifice for love, and of an Indian woman's development. This production is as rich in box-office possibilities as it is in power and beauty.

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

ETHEL CLAYTON in “ROZANNE OZANNE”

(Working Title)

by Cynthia Stockley

Greater than "Poppy" this tale marks the highest art of Cynthia Stockley and the main character is perfectly fitted to Miss Clayton's talents. It is being produced with a wealth of investiture worthy of so strong a story plot and every effort will be made to make it the Ethel Clayton picture de luxe, the best thing she has ever done.

Adolph Zukor Presents a

GEORGE FITZMAURICE PRODUCTION

“IDOLS OF CLAY”

with Mae Murray and David Powell

By Ouida Bergere

A picture that extends over every phase of life—the glamour of the South Seas, the gaiety of London's Bohemia, and the vice of the lurid Limehouse District. More spectacular than "On With the Dance."

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

WALLACE REID in “THE CHARM SCHOOL”

by Alice Duer Miller

Directed by Sam Wood

Scenario by Tom Genghry

From the famous "Saturday Evening Post" story of the young man who inherited a girl's boarding academy and turned it into a "charm school." One of the most original and entertaining plots ever devised and filled with humor. Wallace Reid is given a chance to play the real lover again and the supporting cast will be virtually all-star.
RELEASES

Adolph Zukor Presents

DOROTHY DALTON in "A WINTER CITY FAVORITE"
(Working Title)

By Charles Belmont Davis Scenario by Rosina Henley Directed by Harley Knoles

A Paramount Picture

The winter city is, of course, New York and the favorite is a young woman of just such charm as Dorothy Dalton possesses. The story allows for elaborate and thrilling scenes and provides Miss Dalton with a characterization of beauty and gripping dramatic power. The author, brother of Richard Harding Davis, is one of America’s greatest short story writers.

Thomas H. Ince Presents

ENID BENNETT in "HER HUSBAND’S FRIENDS"

Directed by Fred Niblo By Marjorie Benton Cooke A Thomas H. Ince Production

A Paramount Picture

A picture about marriage—the kind of picture that rings true, with that human touch that made “Stepping Out” and “Hairpins” so popular. Enid Bennett gives a wonderful portrayal of the wife.

Jesse L. Lasky Presents

"BURGLAR PROOF" with BRYANT WASHBURN

By William Slavens McNutt Directed by Maurice Campbell

A Paramount Picture

A little different sort of picture from every angle. A story that is filled with real humor and heart interest and one of the best characterizations ever made by Mr. Washburn, who is supported by a cast de luxe headed by Lois Wilson.

Adolph Zukor Presents

BILLIE BURKE in "THE FRISKY MRS. JOHNSON"
(By arrangement with F. Ziegfeld, Jr.)

Directed by Edward Dillon Scenario by Lawrence McCloskey

A Paramount Picture

The famous play by Clyde Fitch made into a captivating romance of humor, especially suited to Miss Burke’s personality. The story of a lively young widow who amuses herself with men, but who sacrifices her reputation and jeopardizes her chances for happiness to save the sister she loves.
FUTURE PRODUCTIONS

BESIDES the productions to be released in September, October and November, the following will be among the year’s releases:

“ALWAYS AUDACIOUS” from the Saturday Evening Post story by Ben Ames Williams.

JOHN BARRYMORE in “Amos Judd” from the well-known novel by John Ames Mitchell.

ENID BENNETT in “I Wonder If” and “The Incubus,” Thomas H. Ince Productions.

The Surface

A Paramount Arctraft Picture

N O V E L in theme, great in production and astonishing in originality of situation, "Below the Surface" strikes a new note in drama.

Here are a few of the amazing, breath-taking thrills that follow one another with lightning speed:

The daring plunge of Martin Flint (Hobart Bosworth) to the depths of the sea to rescue the submarine crew.

The luring of Luther Flint by the confidence woman, to dive for sunken treasure.

The hazardous descent to the sea bed, made by the infatuated youth, to please his bride.

The tragedy of the boy's return to his desolated home, after his bride has fled with her partner in crime.

The descent of Martin Flint upon the gaiety of the cabaret, where he seizes his daughter-in-law and takes her home.

The wreck of the liner, and the hair-breadth escape of Martin Flint.

The drowning of James Arnold and Edna Gordon on the wrecked liner.

The boy's dive to the wreck.

What he sees through the porthole.

His rescue when his father, without a diving suit, gropes down a cable under the water, cuts his son's fouled lifeline with a knife and swims with him to the surface.
"She's my daughter and she's coming home with me!"

THAT wonderful trio of master productions by Cecil B. DeMille, ending with "Why Change Your Wife?" established new standards both for screen art and for box-office receipts.

Your people have seen "Why Change Your Wife?"—It has broken records everywhere.

Now they want to see "Old Wives for New"—the first of the series, a picture as marvelous, as true, as deep as the last.

Those who saw it want to see it again. Those who didn't, want to see it now!

New Prints and a complete new line of Accessories ready.
MARY PICKFORD reached the pinnacle of her success in "Rebecca."

It is the greatest picture she ever made. It will stand forever as the crowning achievement of her genius.

Your people want to see it. Some of them saw it once and they want to see it again. The others always wished they had seen it.

New prints and a complete new line of accessories ready.

"The Greatest Love Story Ever Told"

Wins High Praise from Trade Critics

"One of the most successful and inspiring love stories that has been presented on the screen . . . . the screen play is no less absorbing than the stage play was and is free from that enemy of the good drama known as 'padding.'"—Moving Picture World.

"'Romance' is a picture of remarkable charm. It has been worth waiting for and unfolds on the screen a succession of maddening love scenes which positively thrill. It is the sort of thing to delight the discriminating and appeal to the masses."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"There is no doubt about the drawing power of 'Romance,' particularly in metropolitan quarters. It will bring out people that seldom come to the picture houses. The older ones, many of whom saw the original play when presented something over six years ago, and those who are familiar with the tragic yet beautiful character of the romance presented, will turn out en masse to see the picture. It is an unusual love story carrying a deep appeal and should appeal especially to the better class of audience."—Wid's Daily

"The verdict is sure to be 'an artistic production' . . . . The picture will certainly appeal to those in search of romance or those who have lost it in the days when love was young."—Motion Picture News.

"'Romance' is a drama in every sense of the word—a credit to the motion picture art."—Harrison's Reports.

"'Romance' is eminently fitted for the screen. It has all the elements of appeal for screen fans."

—New York Morning Telegraph

"'Romance' is a romance in every sense of the word, replete with pathos, comedy and tragedy, a story that delicately points a moral."—New York Dramatic Mirror.

Wid's: Should please all audiences—a worthy comedy feature for every exhibitor—has series of good complications handled with appreciative comedy sense.

Moving Picture World: The multitude of screen fans who have watched Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran for years in short comedies will be pleased with this five-reel production. Settings are pleasing and story moves smoothly.

Trade-Review: A lively comedy—is humorous—animated sub-titles afford much merriment—direction shows good comedy sense and ability to keep story moving.

Motion Picture News: Both stars will please—sub-titles do some novel tricks.

Plays opposite me in “Everything But the Truth”—Universal STARTING July 12th, Universal will release during the ensuing twelve months a New Star Series of Universal Special Attractions.

These new Stellar Productions will number forty-eight in all—you will remember them as "The Great Forty-eight"—one for every week in the year except for four omissions during July and August.

This is an increase of one-third over Universal's production of Special Attractions for the year past. And this increase has but one reason behind it—demand—in other words, the complete artistic and commercial success of Universal Special Attractions.

But we have done more than simply increase their number. We have improved the quality of Universal Special Attractions in a way that I, familiar with constant improvement tho I am, hardly believed possible. I feel that I can do you no bigger favor in return for past appreciations than to advise you to contract for this newest Universal Series in its splendid entirety.

Earl Faemmig
Eight heart-appeal features—some in character, some "straight"—all made captivating by Youth and Beauty and Personality that's the program for Carmel Myers whose return to the screen will be greeted by the heart-felt applause of millions of picture-goers. The first release of her eight in "The Great Forty-eight" will be August 26th—"In Folly's Train," directed by Rollin Sturgeon, from the story by Katherine Lister Robbins.

The man who shows big houses how little houses make money—nothing truer was ever said of that finest of all western character portrayers, Harry Carey. With eight big, vigorous outdoor productions of this hugely popular star coming up you will look forward to the coming year with at least that many weeks picked out for certain success. A story by H. H. Van Loan, directed by Reeves Eason, is his first—on July 26th.
LOVE stories, pure but not simple—eight of them. Complicated by clever surprise twists—envigorated by the youth and personal charm of this beautiful young star—made delightful to eye and mind through perfect direction. Watch for EDITH ROBERTS and the first of her splendid eight—a gorgeously staged, tremendously absorbing drama of the southern seas made from a story by Ralph Stock, directed by Norman Dawn. The photography alone in this production will open your eyes.

VIGOROUS, but clean cut—virile, but a finished actor in either dress coat or mackinaw, FRANK MAYO comes to your audiences in "The Great Forty-eight" in eight productions packed with modern realism, action and red-blooded romance. The first of these is "THE RED LANE," directed by Lynn Reynolds, the same man who made "The Brute Breaker" for you, and will be released July 12th. Your whole year holds out no surer promise of splendid entertainment than these eight big Mayos.
THE day of the comedy drama a la mode is here. And LYONS & MORAN are here—in "The Great Forty-eight"—with eight hugely amusing, perfectly dressed, "young married folks" productions that are fifty-fifty thrills and chuckles. "LA LA LUCILE," from the well-known operetta, is their first release, on August 16th, directed by THEMSELVES.

ADDED to the forty NEW STAR SERIES UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS mentioned in the foregoing this Company purports to release a series of eight Prize Pictures featuring a NEW STAR. Bear in mind the fact that UNIVERSAL has, in its long, successful career, been the birthplace of more exhibitor-stars than any other concern in the business, and you will know without our telling you that UNIVERSAL'S new star in "The Great Forty-eight" can be booked without hesitation—for, in addition to her own charming personality and talent, she will have behind her the most complete support in the intelligent, artistic making of pictures which the industry affords today.

Carpentier Scores

"The Wonder Man"
Directed by John G. Adolphi

Has Smashing Premier in New York City at $2.00 Admissions.

The Grand Ballroom of the Hotel Astor seating 2000 people was packed to capacity.

S.R.O. Business the first four days of the run indicates "TURN AWAY" Business for the entire week.

This Triumph was scored in the face of a three day Holiday that caused an exodus to the country, that was unprecedented in the history of New York.

CRITICISM from

THE NEW YORK EVENING TELEGRAM

May 30, 1920

by JANE DIXON

"Last evening in the grand ballroom of the Astor Hotel, Georges appeared for cinema championship of the world. Beyond preadventure of doubt his is no one-track talent."

A BIG SURPRISE

"The Carpentier picture was one of the biggest surprises Broadway has had in many a season."

"We are wise to the ways of capitalizing celebrities—hundred-thousand-dollar name—ten-twenty-thirty scenario acting, scenery and support. It always makes us feel as if some one had sold us a toy balloon and then stuck a pin in it.

"Robertson-Cole have not so imposed upon a hero-worshipping public. They have made it possible for us to see one of the most popular athletes of the day in action. This we did expect, but what we did not expect was to find in Carpentier a real actor, an artist with the finish of a French gentleman and the finesse of an habitual stage star."

THE WONDER MAN

"Such is the name under which Robertson-Cole, promoters of the film, have chosen to introduce their boxing star to an already sceptical screen world."

"M. Carpentier not only lived up to the title. He did more. He topped it. Three frozen-faced critics who are wont to use these twilight picture hours for malevolent meditation, were seen to rouse from their stupor and blink their eyes unbelievingly at "The Wonder Man." When our hero caused the villain to kiss the canvas for the fatal ten, one of these three rascals actually committed the critical faux pas of clapping his hands in approval just like an ordinary ticket-buyer. The mistake was overlooked on the part of his fellows owing to the heavy barrage of applause being laid down by a wondering and well-pleased audience."

"MILLION DOLLAR SMILE"

The Carpentier smile is bound to cause the hearts of several million matinee maids to skip a beat every time it lights up his frankly winning face. His is a personality so accentuated as to overcome the silence of the screen, to reach out and make friends among those who have merely meant to pose in the role of onlookers.

The story? Why tell? Suffice to say it is good, substantial, thrilling, sustained, and that it has to do with the French and the United States Secret Service.

THE STRAND—New York City, week June 6th.
THE STRAND—Brooklyn, N. Y., week June 13th.

A Few Newspaper Criticisms:

The men like his serious scenes, especially when he is pitting his slenderness in scientific combat against a heavier opponent, but the women like the nice boyish smile that so attractively lights up his face. New York Morning Telegraph.

The most striking feature of the entertainment was the revelation of Carpentier as an actor. He has many opportunities for distinctive action, opportunities of which he takes full advantage. New York Tribune.

It is a splendid picture, aside from Carpentier's part in it and he is almost as good a screen actor as he is a fighter. New York Herald.

"His (Carpentier's) suppleness is a delight and he can act, too." New York News.

"Surprised his audience at the Hotel Astor by demonstrating real acting ability. The producers have supplied 'The Idol of France' with an excellent story and a competent supporting cast." New York Evening Mail.

Moe Mark says:—

"If the exhibitors have any doubts about "THE WONDER MAN" being one of the REAL BIG PICTURES of the year—have them wire me."

BILLIE RHODES IN
"HIS PAJAMA GIRL"

One of the very few pictures that stands out in State Right history, in a day of many good pictures, as a production that combines all the money-making value that an extraordinary picture can contain. Popular Star, delightful and entertaining story, quality production and a title that spells box-office value in its nth power.

And it contains in a big measure many highly desirable exploitation possibilities. Its selling angles are numerous. It abounds with possibilities for tie-ups and novelty advertising. It's a picture, which because of its many unusual angles will stand out as one of the most profitable state right offerings of the day.

The beautiful and original line of advertising matter which we have prepared for this production is an unquestionable asset in its promotion. The many who have already purchased this picture for their territory acknowledge not only its big selling possibilities but a big portion of them will present it with a chorus of Pajama Girls and more than double the value of this picture to themselves and the exhibitor.

TO THE FILM PRODUCER

A new field has opened up

A BY-PRODUCT has come to hand which means REVENUE TO THE PRODUCER which is only just beginning to develop.

REMEMBER

THERE is that Potential Audience of the Motion Picture, the non-theatrical public, which is being developed through the use of the Motion Picture in the Home, Church, Lodge and elsewhere by the use of the "SAFETY STANDARD" FILM.

Here pictures of education, science, entertainment, etc., are of the utmost interest—

To this audience a good negative years old may be as desirable as one made yesterday.

Therefore, by cooperation with the "Safety Standard," non-theatrical field, the Producer can:

1. Secure additional revenue from his old negative.
2. Create the interest of new audiences.
3. Increase the present audiences with new theatre goers.
4. Stimulate an interest in his new productions.

A Box Office Duet

THOUGH the piano and the violin differ widely they are alike in this,—that the same melody can be played on both. Between the business of the RITCHEY LITHO CORP. and that of the exhibitor there is a similar likeness and a similar difference. For instance we have a common interest in great posters,—we in their making,—he in their use.

A RITCHEY poster will cause a prospective audience to advance to the box office, whereas from an ordinary one they will retreat to the street. The RITCHEY poster will succeed because it is an instrument whose melody appeals to all. It plays a march, as it were, and to its rhythmic beat the public keep step,—on their way to the auditorium.

To our music the exhibitor should play an accompaniment, and his motive should be a demand for RITCHEY posters. He should raise a melodious din positively insisting upon having them. The one thing that matters is that he produces a sufficiency of sound.

In the end he will get the only kind of posters that will answer for his purpose,—

As the Dust Settles

JUDGING from the amount of dust being kicked up in advance, the Cleveland Convention ought to prove a humdinger. We can easily recall previous conventions over which the dust positively refused to rise.

That, we are sure, is all there is to the pre-convention squabble—dust, and nothing more. We have an idea that Frank Rembusch winks at himself as he shaves these mornings; that Sidney Cohen while piously depreciating the thunder in the air is secretly tickled to death over the interest it indicates. Each of these gentlemen believes too sincerely and unselfishly in organization for organizations' sake to let squabbles stand in the way of what is quite evidently the greatest opportunity that has ever fallen in the lap of National exhibitor organization. We have suspected those leaders, right along, of pulling a very successful publicity stunt on the trade press and have lent ourselves gladly to this end. As for Willard Patterson, he has, we imagine, long since decided that the Chicago meeting was as successful a prologue as could possibly have happened for his Independent Southern Exhibitors and their sturdy issue of self determination. He doesn't, as he says, give a rip what happens at Cleveland so long as a big National organization results. And we know that every other leader, state, national or local, feels—in fact, each one has got to feel—exactly the same way about it.

We only hope that the guns haven't boomed loud enough to some exhibitors to make them feel that Cleveland will give them ringside seats and little else. Nothing of the sort: witness the sane letter of Harry Kress, Chairman of the Committee of Three, in this issue.

This pre-convention shouting will have served some salutary and most practical ends. It will take the place of the speeches, which always precede a convention and thereby it will save much valuable time. It serves also to draw the fire, where any fire exists, and so lets the Convention open up all cooled off and clear-headed enough to see and see only the main issue ahead.

The main issue, of course, is National organization. National organization, embracing all national, state and district associations of exhibitors, must be arranged for, constructed and cemented up so that it can't possibly crack open. If this is accomplished the object of the Convention is achieved; if not, nothing whatever, perhaps even harm, will result. The Convention will have no right to adjourn until this is accomplished, and accomplished satisfactorily; never again, in exhibitor annals, will there be another organization opportunity like this. National organization is hammering at the door. No exhibitor, with strength enough to count, is going to throw his weight against the door.

The Convention viewpoint must be National only. We note with pleasure, in this connection, the appointment by Mr. Cohen to the arrangements committee of the Presidents or Secretaries of all the district organizations.

EVERY other issue is incidental to this one accomplishment—National organization. Producer-owned theatres, advance deposits, rental policies, adverse legislation—these are all mere bywords without National organization. National organization—and National organization alone makes, does or undoes things. You can speakify over these incidental issues till Kingdom Come, and still be speechifying—without National organization.

So if we may help a little and we do want to help, we offer this: Cut out the speeches and get to work—cool, efficient organization work. Take a tip from the Utica Convention which made history because it worked—quietly, efficiently and to the satisfaction of every single man present. The speeches have all been made. The curtain raiser is ended. The audience—and that means every exhibitor in the country whether present or not, wants to see the real show—the show of National Exhibitor organization.

We won't add: Cut out the personalities. That isn't necessary. No exhibitor will want it said that he put vain-glory or gain or self pride or any other motive whatsoever in the way of this one opportunity to organize nationally.

And Still They Come

A Few Words from Some of the Many Letters on Reviews Unanimous Opinion Shown By Brief Extracts That Space Permits

"I believe you are right when you insist that you are not to be hampered or restricted in your Reviews on all pictures. In that way you will deliver a very valuable help to the exhibitor."

Jewel Photoplay Co., Hamilton, Ohio.

John S. Scheidam, President.

"The Exhibitors Own Box Office Reports and your unbiased criticism are the only safeguard upon which the exhibitor can rely for his personal salvation in booking pictures."

C. B. Davis, Mgr., Norwood Theatre, Norwood, Ohio.

"In regard to the 'reviews' will say that they and the 'Box-Office Reports' are my 'safety values.'"

James H. Patterson, "Lo-Net" Theatre, Wellington, Ohio.

"Your service has been more than fair, it is 100 per cent and I think with your expert staff that you are more than competent to review pictures. Your magazine as a whole is the best in the country."

C. Paul, Mgr., Princess Theatre, Del Rio, Texas.

"If reviews merely reflect the amount of advertising offered a trade journal, exhibitors outside of large cities must of necessity seek other sources of information to guide them."

Jenkins Brothers, Lansdale, Pa.

"Motion Picture News has established itself solidly with Exhibitors because invariably the service rendered in various departments has been found to be reliable."

H. E. Cane, Mgr., West St. Theatre, Connersport, Pa.

"In seven years during which the writer has been connected with this industry, he has discovered that the trade papers are fair to both producer and exhibitor. We are now subscribing to just two trade publications, of which the News is one, and we regard the News as the leading trade paper in the field."

Grand Amusement Company, Johnstown, Pa.

"Do we exhibitors want the reviews? I'll say we do. If, I want to book a picture, how do I know if the advertiser is telling the truth? I have to depend upon the reviews out here in the tall grass to know if I want the picture or not. The quicker we are rid of producers who cannot stand reviews the better it will be for the whole industry."

"Go to it, I say. Give your readers the real truth and let the devil take the rest. And we will all live to see Truth and Square Deal triumphant."

"We certainly do want reviews on the photoplays we run. That is half the reason for getting a trade paper."

"The producer is all wrong when he thinks the exhibitor, as a rule, takes the adverse criticism of the picture to hammer down prices because there are too many good pictures on the market and I know that we will not buy a picture that is not up to the standard. We sincerely hope that the Motion Picture News will be as honest in reviewing pictures in the future as they have been in the past."

Silverman Brothers, Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pa., per J. Silverman.

"I prize your reviews very highly as they enable me to know what pictures to book and what not to book as it is impossible for me to view all pictures before I book them. I have always found your reviews to give a true and correct description of the picture."

G. R. Wright, Bluebird Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

"Keep up the good work, as long as the News is run as at present the exhibitors will back you up."

H. S. Wheary, Ammu Theatre, Greve, Va.

"In reply to your letter regarding my view concerning the Motion Picture News would like to say that I think your trade paper stands alone in the field and is used by me exclusively in making my bookings and buying my pictures."

Victoria Theatre, South Richmond, Va., K. E. Boyle, Mgr.

"In small towns such as ours we believe the reviews you give in Motion Picture News are good because we are not located so that we can personally see a screening of all the shows we book before we run them and it helps to give us a good insight as to their standing in the ideas of larger exhibitors and your reviews."

Lyric Theatre, Temperanceville, Va., P. P. Henderson.

"In conclusion will state you can publish this letter and I will go further to state that the class of pictures I am now showing have all been reviewed by the Motion Picture News and I now have a standing invitation to the ministers of the Churches here to come out at any time and review the class of pictures that I am showing."

H. A. Kempen, Mgr., Queen Theatre, Nixon, Texas.

"I use your reviews to know just what is in the picture and can then properly advertise same."

H. F. Lloyd, Mgr., Colonial Theatre, Post, Texas.

"We certainly want fair and honest criticisms on all pictures released from an exhibitor's standpoint and service. We value your publication."

M. W. Zimmerman, Cumberland, Wis.
Indications That Harmony Will Eventually Prevail

Exhibitors Voice Wish for United Action; Record Attendance Expected

As the time approaches for the assembling of motion-picture exhibitors from all parts of the country at Cleveland on June 8, 9, 10, and 11, indications point to an unprecedented attendance and even hold out some hope for the eventual organization of a single national association for all exhibitors in the United States.

The bickering has continued to some extent during the past week; but, despite their expressed differences, the leaders of the various prominent exhibitor bodies show an encouraging disposition towards uniting eventually for the inauguration of a single national organization.

Statements dealing with the various phases of the grand "get-together" continue to sweep in from all parts of the country. Some are in the way of official pronouncements issued by the different theatre-owners' organizations; others are from individuals, promising a whole-hearted cooperation with the movement to solve the problems of national importance that confront exhibitors in all parts of the country alike.

A considerable number urge the cessation of all petty quarrails and differences and the getting together of all exhibitor forces, so as to pursue as a single undivided body those objects of common interest to all.

The more important of the statements received during the past week are submitted in the following:

Cohen Anticipates Success

Unlimited support and a tidal wave of enthusiasm will characterize the coming convention, according to Sydney S. Cohen, whose statement is printed below.

"Coming events cast their shadows before," says Mr. Cohen, "and applying this old saying to the Cleveland convention, it will be the greatest event in the history of filmdom. The shadow of it is even now seen in every part of the country—North and South, East and West."

"Getting down to concrete things, one of the signs of the coming tidal wave of enthusiasm and unanimity is the line of responses that are coming in to me, as the temporary chairman, from many of the representative exhibitors who, in accordance with the request of the Cleveland Arrangements Committee, I have recently appointed on a Committee on Arrangements and Registration for the convention at the Hotel Winton June 8th. Already a 100 per cent acceptance has been received."

Among those who are expected at Cleveland, although no formal and definite acceptance has been received, is Henry B. Varner, secretary of the North Carolina Exhibitors' Association. Mr. Varner represents one of the strongest, most active and most successful exhibitors' organizations in the entire country.

The convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will be called to order at eleven o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, June 8th, at the Hotel Winton and will bring together the most representative gathering of motion picture exhibitors ever held in this country.

"Delegates are coming from all parts of the country in great numbers and the Cleveland committee in charge of reservations reports that everything will be done to see that the individual exhibitor receives proper accommodations and that his stay in Cleveland will be as pleasant as it is hoped it will be productive of results."

"The Committee on Registration and Arrangements, which represents every important film center in the country, comprising either the president or secretary of the exhibitor organizations representing these zones, will meet Monday, June 7th, at the Hotel Winton to complete detailed arrangements for the greatest convention that will perhaps ever assemble. Every exhibitor of the country who comes to Cleveland with the hope of bringing about a great national organization, will be given ample opportunity to lend his help and assistance towards creating an organization which will protect his investments in this industry."

"It is hoped that the interests which have been successful for some years in splitting the growing sentiment for genuine organization and keeping the exhibitors of the United States unorganized, and open to attacks from within and without, will at least be present to see for themselves the sentiment which they cannot stop, organized into a great permanent body. Six months of preparation, with all the work this kind of effort entails by the leaders of the various exhibitors' organizations throughout the country will be brought to a climax more successful even than the most ardent organized exhibitor ever hoped."

"The efforts of some for the past few weeks to create in the minds of the exhibiting branch of the industry that the exhibitors of the country could never get together has failed completely. The man who has put his money, his time and his ability into building up a clientele for his picture house is in no mood to see that investment swept aside by the onrush of the "interests" which have been set up by the millions which have been poured out by the Wall Street promoters."

"Exhibitors from all parts of the country realize that the convention at the Hotel Winton has been brought about by the men who have practically dedicated their life work to bringing their fellow exhibitors into a powerful body which cannot be stopped by the few who have been using organization—or the lack of it—for their own selfish interests."

"The screen of the country more and more today is being looked upon by our Government to safeguard the great institutions under which we are living, and we feel that every patriotic American exhibitor in the country who can possibly get to Cleveland will be there to swell the ranks, in order that he may be an individual part of building the foundation of a permanent national exhibitors' organization, offered by independent motion picture theatre owners, backed by independent motion picture theatre owners and financed by independent motion picture theatre owners."

Rembusch Tells His Side

In a letter to Harry Kress, of Pigga, Ohio, Frank Rembusch, chairman of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, fully explains his stand on the coming convention. The letter is printed in full:

"I am very sorry you misunderstood my saying pro-Cohen. I only meant that every one caught on at the Chicago convention that Mr. Van Prag was put in. You remember that he asked that Kansas be represented after the committee was already appointed, and that's all right. Furthermore, I mean no offense when I say pro-Cohen, as I was that way once myself, but got over it. This is not a question of personalities, except that Mr. Cohen has a film proposition that he is putting over, and I think as long as you mix anything else except big broad principles in a national organization we will have no end of trouble. That has been our history for ten years."
Cleveland Will Be Busy Place

Patterson Makes Strong Plea for Union

The following wire was received from W. C. Patterson:

"Committee of seventeen appointed at Chicago meeting was instructed to make report to original Cleveland convention. I do not doubt the sincerity of Rembusch, but think he is making a mistake in calling a second convention unless he has positive information that the Chicago committee would not be recognized on the floor. Independent exhibitors need men of the executive ability of both Rembusch and Cohen. For the good of the cause they should get together.

There are too many problems, both factions will agree, to split now. Let's bury the hatchet and build up one big organization along lines of honesty of purpose. Personally, I have no political ambitions, but will put forth every effort to bring all factions together and help formulate ways and means to protect the independent exhibitor."

"No Monkey Business to Be Tolerated"

Sam Bullock, executive secretary of The Motion Picture Exhibitors Association:

"Inasmuch as the necessity for real exhibitor organization is causing all exhibitors to turn their thoughts towards Cleveland from now on to June 8-10-11, it behooves every independent motion picture exhibitor to study well what practical plan of organization he will decide to support with his vote at the Convention, for it will be the first national gathering in many years where every bona-fide exhibitor will be his own free agent and as such treated absolutely 'on the level' regardless of the size of his theatre or his (or her) investment.

"We have proved by bitter experience that the various forces, both within and without the industry, have so far succeeded with their plans because of class distinction, self-asserted, within our own exhibitor ranks, that the fact remains that a compact organization of all classes, from 'first-runs' down to 'commercials,' will alone render the exhibitor immune from most of these attacks and impositions.

"The dominant question, therefore, is not merely organization, but, first, 'What plan of organization shall we adopt?' Second, 'How shall it be financed?' Third, 'How shall its finances be safeguarded against grifters and organization wreckers?'

"These three essentials have never yet been worked out at any national convention heretofore held, but the Cleveland convention offers the opportunity and the temptation of those exhibitors who have expressed their intention to be present and indicates that they will stand for no 'monkey business' nor camouflaged producer propositions.

"The writer, as chairman of resolutions committee, was primarily responsible for the adoption of the 'Delmonico' resolution when the Chicago Convention consented to merge the Exhibitors League with other producers—the N. A. M. P.—some years ago. It was not a merger. It was a 'submerger,' and we were submerged. However, organization pulmators have been working steadily and Cleveland's Lake Erie ozone will quickly restore those not altogether 'done for.'

"Let us guard against being 'Delmonicized' again by the 'Hungry Joes' of Broadway. Cleveland and the 'plan' and not the 'man' must count. There is no plan of financing by expositions, producer 'charity doles' or anything outside of the exhibitors' own personal financing should receive the least consideration."

"It is better for us to go to Cleveland divided and leave united than the opposite. I am smoking them out every day. Just stay with me and you will get a run for your money and the nigger will soon get out of the woodpile."
Sound Common Sense from Kress

THE following letter, received by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS from Harry W. Kress, of May’s Opera House, Strand and Bijou, of Piqua, Ohio, sheds further light on the convention wrangle:

“My Dear Sir:

“My attention has been called to the article on page 463, entitled ‘Factions Mince Harmony of the Exhibitors’ Get-Together’ at Cleveland.

“Now, I believe I am in a position to throw a little light on the situation in regard to the apparent differences that have arisen between the Independent Exhibitors of America and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America regarding their meeting on June 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th, at Cleveland.

“As you know, I happen to be on the Directing Committee of Seventeen of the Independent Exhibitors of America, of which Frank Rembusch is chairman. Before leaving Chicago a committee of three was appointed out of the committee of seventeen, namely, myself as chairman, with Mr. M. Van Praag of Kansas City and Mr. Farley of Montgomery, Alabama, to go to Cleveland to find out what the conditions were there before the convention took place on the above dates.

“After interviewing Mr. Henry Lustig, of the Cleveland Exhibitors League, who is affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, I was thoroughly convinced that the meeting that is being called by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at Cleveland was being done in good faith, and so wired my report to Mr. Rembusch.

“This squabble, which seems to have arisen between Rembusch and Cohan, reminds me of a heat lightning, and will have no effect upon the ultimate successful outcome at Cleveland. Everything is being done to have a perfect understanding between the two organizations that are now going to meet there, and I am fully convinced that harmony is bound to prevail in the end. Of course we will have our differences of opinion to start out with, but there will be too many big men in this meeting to allow any particular set of men to dominate the meeting and the detriment of the Independent Exhibitors as a whole. It is unfortunate, of course, that the Cohan and Rembusch factions have gotten into an unnecessary argument and are casting suspicion upon one another. Snap judgments in a matter of this kind are bad, and being the position that I am in regard to these two organizations, I think you should send your word out to the Exhibitors that harmonious action is bound to prevail at Cleveland. Personally I believe that this will be the biggest gathering of Independent Exhibitors of the United States ever held in any one place. I have the assurance of men interested in both organizations (that I have every confidence in the world in) that the ultimate outcome will be one big National Independent Exhibitors’ Organization.

“It will be impossible for one hotel in Cleveland to take care of the Exhibitors that will be present at this meeting, so no particular harm can come out of the fact of the Exhibitors meeting at two central points, namely, the Cleveland and Winton Hotels. It is better to have them centralized in these two hosteries than to have them scattered all over Cleveland.

“I have been in constant touch with Mr. Rembusch and Mr. Lustig, on account of being chairman of the Sub-Committee on Arrangements in Cleveland, and as stated above, think you are perfectly safe in assuring all of the Exhibitors that come to Cleveland that they will be attending one of the liveliest and most important meetings that they have ever attended in their lives. There are some very momentous questions to be decided at this time, and this will be the time and place to do it. A fair field and no favour of heat lightning, and will have no effect upon the ultimate successful outcome at Cleveland.

“Very truly yours,

“HARRY W. KRESS,

“May’s Opera House, Strand and Bijou,

“Piqua, Ohio.”

Hodkinson Talks on Exhibitors’ Troubles

On the eve of the great national exhibitors’ convention, to be held from June 8th to June 11th at the Hotel Winfield, Cleveland, Ohio, the entire industry seems to have focused its attention on the big questions which will absorb the attention of the assembled exhibitors. There is a wide-spread discussion among exhibitors and various remedies for the many undoubted evils are going to be offered.

The convention has attracted the attention of men in every branch of the industry, and one of these men is W. H. Hodkinson, the president of the W. H. Hodkinson Corp. Speaking to a reporter of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Mr. Hodkinson said:

“For some time past I have noticed considerable confusion in exhibiting ranks amounting to an almost panickey feeling. I confess that in spite of my intimate experience with all sorts of conditions in our industry, the exhibitor has always been a problem to me. His power to keep the producer out of the exhibiting field is clear. Indeed, the strength of his position is not doubted by anybody, but he seems more or less incapable of concerted action.

“The buying power of the industry is in his hands, and if he only knew how to exert it he could do the industry a lot of good and at the same time effectively and permanently protect his own investment.

“It seems to me a foregone conclusion that unless the exhibitor pool his interests with other exhibitors and make intelligent use of his combined buying power, he will end up in a very near future be crowded to the wall and forced to go out of business.

“In the last three years I have succeeded in building up an organization founded on a conception of justice both to the producer and to the exhibitor. As you know, the Hodkinson organization owns no theatres and has no intention of going into the exhibiting field. We do not produce any pictures.

“Many of the evils which the exhibitor is compelled to fight today at a cost both to his purse and to his peace of mind arise from the fact that so many producers are distributing their own product. This means all sorts of machine-made pictures, generally of an inferior quality, which are forced upon the exhibitor, and upon the public. I have always believed that the interest of the producer must be severed from the interest of the distributor.

“The situation is this: the producer and exhibitor, through which ought to be based on principles of equity and fair dealing, at present remind me of a dog-eat-dog policy.

“The producer has taken a preposterous load on his shoulders. The elements of this load consist of waste, incompetence, overcapitalization and poor judgment. He is unable even with the heaviest rentals to get enough money from the exhibitor to enable him to carry this load. That is the reason he is now reaching out and is absolutely trying to take his investment away from him.

“I invite the exhibitors of the country to look into the mechanism I have built up for them to use, if they see fit. Its object, among other things, is to secure a dependable supply of high-quality pictures and to absolutely keep the exhibitor free from producer domination. Bailed by the buying power of any considerable group of exhibitors this mechanism means many benefits to the exhibitors. It secures their absolute independence. It will enable them to get the very best pictures in the market on favorable terms and ahead of any competition.

“I may liken the system under which I am operating and which accounted for the initial success of Paramount pictures to a process of winnowing, separating the chaff from the wheat. My plan operates to the producer’s liking and advantage and a a machine. Under its workings the consensus of exhibitors’ reports on the commercial value of pictures is taken as the basis of judging the standard of the producer. A producer whose pictures in point of quality do not show up favorably in the light of an exhibitors’ consensus of opinion is (Continued on page 47:7)
Gaumont Explains Picture Conditions in France

French Producer Talks on Foreign Market and New Trichrome Process

A n explanation of the recent action of the French Government in prohibiting the importation of raw film material into that country is offered by Mr. Gaumont, head of the Gaumont company. The opportunities of American producers in France, Mr. Gaumont points out, are now very limited, on account of the heavy taxes imposed, and only the films of the highest quality will be able to pay for themselves.

"The unfavorable conditions which are prevailing in France," said Mr. Gaumont, "where the principal industrial districts have been savagely devastated, has compelled the Government to restrict importations and films, as we could expect, have been placed on the restriction list.

First of all, probably due to an error, the restrictions comprised exclusively the raw material, that is, the film unexposed. Since then, a new decree has probably been passed, interdicting instead of the raw material all imported positive films, but permitting the temporary importation of developed negative films, however with exceptionally high duty charges, fully as high as the duty imposed on French negatives entering the United States.

"These decrees are going to stop the importation of films which are below a very high standard and only films which will assure a big success so as to cover the high duty on the few copies necessary for exploitation on the French market will be imported.

"Now, more than ever, the opportunity is very limited for American producers to open their own branches in France, and I would not be surprised if those who are already established there would rapidly discontinue and give up the upkeep of an unproductive staff and office.

"We must not forget, in fact, that there are hardly two to three hundred exhibitors worth that name in France and that they pay from 20 to 35 per cent taxes on their gross receipts. Besides, with the lack of materials and workmanship it will take years before we can consider the increase of such establishments."

The French producer went on to explain the recent results obtained by his Trichrome process. He recalled that before the war the first presentation of these pictures was made in New York. "Today," continued Mr. Gaumont, "we are fortunate enough to bring to American people for their appreciation of the practical end of our process, one of the most important historical documents ever made, 'The Victory Parade.'

"From the start we immediately and absolutely directed our efforts and our researches to the Trichrome process, being convinced that it is materially impossible to reproduce with two colors all the shades and all the tints which please our eyes. The complete solution of the problem was to be studied, or nothing at all. This is how we abandoned the bicolor process, even though it presented the possibility of using the film in any of the usual cameras."

"So confident was Mr. Gaumont that the Trichrome process alone furnishes the complete solution to the problem of colored pictures that he is ready to pay $1,000 to any benevolent society if a competitor can show him a picture equal to his in quality."

"The future of cinematography in natural colors is incommensurable," said Mr. Gaumont. "No demonstration is required. If we will just think for a minute we will immediately realize how illogical it is to present on the screen the numerous manifestations of life uniformly in black and white. What a terrible infirmity it would have been if our Creator had deprived us of being able to appreciate the splendid harmonies of color existing in the world.

"In some future time, nearer perhaps than we expect, color will master the screen, and we will wonder how we could be satisfied with the present monochrome pictures. The need of colors is so much felt that the public is asking for colored scenes, even 'au pochoir,' and for want of something better this public is satisfied with any other solution, no matter how it has been produced.

"Following is some information which will confirm our statement that we have completely and practically solved the problem of cinematography in colors. Films used for viewing and projecting purposes are the very films regularly supplied by the Eastman Kodak and on which we have done all possible trials. We are using the same width and the same perforation. The formulas and processes of panchromatizing pertain to the domain of the laboratory. There is no sorcery in it. Once you know the nature of the products and the proportion of the mixtures of panchromatizing products.

"The various developing operations, toning, printing, are the same as those for ordinary films with the exception, however, of the development of the negative in an almost absolute darkness.

"Do not forget that the colors appear on the screen only thanks to and on account of the use of filters placed before the objectives of the camera and also before those of the projecting machine. The apparatus differs in a very small degree from that used daily by all the operators, and the use of them is neither difficult nor complicated.

"The only criticism that could be made regarding our process, if this can be called a criticism, is the fact that by projecting and superposing simultaneously three pictures a special projecting machine is an absolute necessity, also a metalized screen making the projection more luminous, avoiding thus the diffusion at the rear sides of the room, of part of the projected light."

"We would advise the American producer, who will undoubtedly engage himself in color pictures, to give up from the start the thought of producing big features, dramas or comedies, the amortization of the expenses for the negative being only assured by the exploitation of a certain number of projecting machines. He should realize immediately that he must be satisfied with a collection of scenic films or documentary films which will also form the basis of his laboratory and which will be of great help to the exploitation of the process. Big events alone can constitute sufficient exploitation elements."
Federated Film Exchanges Now Ready to Start Work

Organization Completed in New York Conventions and Charter Obtained

THAT The Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., a recently organized body of independent exchange men, has obtained its charter and is fully wound up and ready to start business, is revealed as the result of the convention held in New York City during the week of May 24th.

The preliminary meeting was held in Chicago on March 24th, when Joseph Friedmann, president of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, summoned a number of independent exchange men to meet in the Hotel Congress. Before the adjournment of this meeting, temporary officers were elected and a charter applied for under the laws of the state of Delaware, the corporation being capitalized at $100,000. At the New York meeting it was announced that the charter had been granted and the officers made permanent.

Preparations were started immediately after the Chicago gathering. The call of independent exchange men was not confined to one single exchange man in each territory, and the selection of the men now in the organization and the choice of franchise holders was left to the body as a whole.

The purpose of the Federated Exchanges, according to an announcement of the organization, is primarily that of collective buying as well as collective advertising and increased exploitation. It had been realized for a considerable time that the independent exchange man is naturally the most logical man for distributing purposes, because he is operating an exchange himself, has his own money at stake, and naturally is watching it with every degree of closeness, and therefore, is bound to get results. It was also realized, however, that prevailing conditions precluded the possibility of securing the best the producers had to offer. This, it is said, was due in turn to the fact that where a program company could take a feature and release it throughout the country at one time, the independent exchange man, by reason of other purchases and other subjects contracted for, were not always in a position to act simultaneously.

Producers, state the Federated Exchanges, would start advertising and would only continue this advertising until all their territory was sold, and then stop. The injustice of this is said to be so manifest that only the most casual observation is necessary. But in a great many cases the exchange man might own either a feature or a serial and be unable to release it completely with the man who released first, and therefore not receive the benefit of a single advertisement.

"The independent exchange man," reads the Federated statement, "is also put in another very unpleasant position and that is that the producer, realizing that, irrespective of the merit of his production, he was never sure of 100 per cent distribution, consequently had no standardized prices. He was forced to make allowances for which the buyer had to pay. In some cases as much as 60 or 75 per cent was added to the price to compensate for the unsold territory.

"Another fact that brought the organization to a successful issue was that every production of a big nature was never offered on the independent market until all other avenues of distribution were closed, and then at prices higher than those offered to the producing companies."

Among the other actions decided upon by the New York Convention was the employment of the highest grade man possible for its general manager, and, while the position has not been closed, it is understood that the officers are now negotiating with a man who has already been president of one of the large distributing organizations. Moreover, negotiations are also pending for some productions of the greatest magnitude, and Federated has also already closed contracts on several short reel subjects of various companies. Its policy will be the purchase of the productions of only the highest class, whether they are features, short subjects or serials.

The one great difficulty the organization has had to overcome was the seeming impossibility of meeting the divergent ideas of the various members of the company, regarding its wants. But this difficulty has been overcome and Federated Exchanges is now ready to buy anything on the market, provided it meets the requirements and is fully up to the standard that Federated has set for itself.

Federated believes that it is built upon the soundest principles. In addition to the collective buying, it will be possible to advertise the production at the same time throughout the country, while exploitation possibilities allow for greatly increased and concerted action.

J. L. Friedman, of Chicago, was made permanent president of the organization, and J. E. Pearce, of New Orleans, is vice president. D. J. Chalikin, of Los Angeles and San Francisco, is secretary, and Sam Grand, of Boston, treasurer. The board of directors, in addition to the above named officers, consists of H. L. Charnas, of Cleveland; H. F. Whitey, of New York, and H. Amsterdam, of Philadelphia.

Benson Practises Exhibitor Psychology with Success

PSYCHOLOGY, as a dollars-and-cents method of emphasizing the importance of a feature production, is being turned into an exploitation device by a Massachusetts exhibitor. He has found that such procedure has many advantages.

In the first place, it lowers the daily cost of rental; if it saves money on advertising, it gives opportunity for better and more effective presentation and special music can usually be arranged by the theatre orchestra.

Charles Benson, manager of the Olympic theatre, Lynn, Mass., is the showman who consistently practices psychology, although he declares that his exploitation methods are merely dictated by business sense.

"The public is always attracted by something unusual," says Mr. Benson. "An unusual picture will always draw unusual patronage if the exhibitor lets the public realize that it is unusual. An exhibition who advertises 'Come early and avoid the rush' gives the lie to the thought in the advertising than an unusual number of people will want to see it when he makes it available for only the same number of performances as he does an ordinary picture, and the public knows it. An ad saying similar to this: 'In order that no one in Lynn shall be disappointed, as thousands were in Boston, where four theatres had to turn people away, anxious to see' has the stamp of sincerity on it. The theatre manager is convinced that it is a great picture or he wouldn't have booked it for the extra days, and the public is usually keen to accept his sincerity.

"The ad that I have quoted is the one I used in connection with a run of Anita Stewart in 'In Old Kentucky.' I booked the production for a full week, instead of the customary three days.

How the "Gump" Club Was Formed

Some weeks ago Mr. J. Mintz, of Celebrated Players got the bright idea of forming the Glorious Order of Gumps, whose main aim in life would be to see just how much fun and humor they could get out of living.

He started it as a joke among exhibitors in and around Chicago who were playing the Gump Cartoons, but the idea spread by word of mouth and Mr. Mintz was surprised to have queries come in from various state right buyers who have purchased the Gump Cartoons for their territories, asking him just what the Gump Club was and how they could get in on it. This gave Mr. Mintz and Mr. Friedman, president of Celebrated, the idea of spreading the joyful spirit of the club all over the country and, as a consequence, every exchange handling Gump Cartoons is a headquarters for the local Gump Club, furnishing application blanks and identification cards to the theatres who, in turn, furnish them to the patrons of the house upon request.

As an exchange proposition the Gump Club certainly is a winner and Messrs. Friedman and Mintz are lending every effort to further the idea back of it.

All that is necessary for a patron of the theatre to do is to become a member of the Gump Club, to ask his theatre manager for a Gump card and promise himself that he will look on the brighter side of things.

Those exchanges handling the Gumps who have not yet allied themselves with this movement can secure any number of application cards they wish upon application to Mr. Mintz.

Stolte Gives "Idol Dancer" Fine Campaign

Lobby Display and Prologue Featured by Des Moines Theatre

"She's Here," blazoned forth in liberal newspaper display, on billboards, heralds and always accompanied by a silhouette figure of a hula dancer brought the attention of the entire city of Des Moines to "The Idol Dancer" when this feature played the Des Moines theatre, one of the A. H. Blank string managed by Arthur G. Stolte.

From lobby to special prologue sets the theatre was made to carry out the South Sea theme.

Ticket booth and lobby entrances were transformed to thatch-domed grass huts. Interior lights—the Des Moines has the most complete art lighting equipment of any middle western theatre—were dimmed and made to correspond to the "dreamy" atmosphere of the Hawaiian music.

On the opposite page are shown photographs which give a good idea of what Mr. Stolte did to put over the Griffith feature, although, of course, they are minus the lighting effects that were one of the most artistic portions of the display.

The lobby display was lighted in white under the canopy, blue in the first lobby and red in the second lobby, the effect from the strong being very beautiful. The presentation opened with a special title, which said, "Des Moines Theatre Presentation." The curtains were then drawn and the house switched to darkness. The orchestra opened with a specially arranged prelude with smoke seen coming from the highest "volcano" of the stage setting provided—on page opposite.

Red flames and fire effects followed the smoke effect with the blue and amber lights turned in gradually until the stage was fully lighted, when a company of Hawaiian musicians and dancers were presented.

The set for the prologue was arranged in a box-like effect with all lights shaded from the audience, the appearance being as if looking through the palms out on the water. This was the presentation on one side of the theatre.

For the stage setting provided on the other side, Mr. Stolte used the box effect also, dimming his other stage setting before showing the second number. Blue and white lights were used in front of the set pieces with amber brought up from full dim for a sun effect on a back drop which was transparent. The five Hawaiian musicians were used for this setting.

Four short numbers were given by the Hawaiian's, finishing with a native dance. At the end of the dance the lights were cut from the front of the set with only a red sunset effect showing on the back. The musicians were again used at this point, playing on steel rings until the lights were all dimmed out.

All Des Moines was enthusiastic in its praise of the prologue and Mr. Stolte is convinced that his exploitation and presentation was instrumental in bringing many extra dollars to the Des Moines box office.

Harry Goldberg Originates Fine Advertising Stunt for Lytell Picture

Who Can Duplicate This Feat?

The answer to the question turned out almost unexpectedly to be "Yes."

The man was Jimmy Doig, 22 years old, who, after thousands of men had toyed with the combination of the safe, strolled along and stood in the crowd for a while, watching the vain efforts of the amateurs, then got into the line of those who were waiting for a chance to try their hand.

Jimmy got at the safe in the manner of a cracksman to the manner born and developed by real professional training. Working coolly and methodically, he quickly found the combination and opened the safe.

"No, I don't make my living that way," the young man explained. And his record shows steady employment in Omaha as a stenographer. But his only answer to the curious as to how he carried the sensitive touch was:

"It must be from the typewriter; I use the touch system." A cut of Mr. Goldberg's lobby display, indicating the safe which Jimmy Doig opened like a Jimmy Valentine, is shown on the opposite page.

Ince Special Gets Unusual Exploitation

Los Angeles Premiere of "Below the Surface" Given Much Publicity

"Below the Surface," the new Thomas H. Ince special which received its premiere at Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, received an exploitation campaign for the showing that contributed its full share to bringing record crowds to the Rialto.

Handing the list of exploitation was an unique three-cornered link-up between the Los Angeles Record, Grauman's Rialto theatre and the publicity department of the Ince studios.

The Record has been conducting a campaign against the quack movie schools which operate about the cinema capital and was induced to go on a free "movie test" idea.

Test-desiring persons, those who had aspirations to become picture players were urged to Rialto to study the various characters in "Below the Surface" preparatory to assembling at the Ince studio for a collective pose before the camera, through the Record's pages which had previously announced that such a test picture would be taken for the purpose of securing "types" and character actors.

The initial spread in the Record stated that the initial persons who registered most effectively in the collective group tryout would be given individual tests prior to securing parts in the forthcoming Ince production.

Considerably more than two thousand individuals applied for the first test, which was here held on Saturday, May 15, and with the beginning of the second week's engagement, a young army of aspiring men, women and children thronged the theatre for the second preliminary trials to be staged on Saturday, May 22.

The class of persons participating in the plan is distinctive in that it represents a percentage of individuals who ordinarily do not patronize the Los Angeles theatre. An inspection of the home addresses submitted by the applicants disclosed the interesting fact that of the several thousand persons who responded for the first week's test, about one thousand four hundred of this number claimed adjacent suburbs and towns as their residences. This disclosure, it is pointed out by Sid Grauman, clearly indicates that the test applicants may be classified as "extra" business — and revenue — for the Rialto register.

In the daily editions of the Record, the "follow-up" announcements on the unique "stunt" continue to attract attention and interest on page one. Following the collective tests news space and pictorial spreads were given to the ten winners and to human interest articles by the Record staff writers.

Simultaneously with the presentation of the Ince-Record Rialto drive in the Record, the Los Angeles Herald raised the curtain on a series of production articles under the signature of Thomas H. Ince. The coming of the series, which were described by The Herald as "of intense interest and instruction to all readers," were announced in boxed space on page one of the second news section for four days prior to the first installment.

The series continued for the entire week. The timeliness of the Ince production stories focused additional attention to the Rialto theatre, where the name of Thomas H. Ince is displayed in four-foot electric lights over the theatre's entrance.

New and Original Idea Conceived for Exploiting Talmadge Picture

How Mayer Aroused Cincinnati's Curiosity

"Virgin of Stamboul" Exploitation Instrumental In Attracting Big Business

June 12, 1920

A

STRIKINGLY original idea in exploitation conceived by N. A. Benson, manager of the Stadium Theatre, Pittsburgh, turned out to be a money-maker for Mr. Benson and a real treat for all the lovelorn in Pittsburgh.

Love Expert"

We promise each member of the audience a thrill. Boys: Bring your prettiest girls. Girls: Make a good-looking fellow bring you

General belief was strong that Mr. Benson would have a beauty chorus traverse the isles or at least fill about the stage in abbreviated costumes. The novel announcement a week in advance brought many and varied impressions which were proven wrong or right on the opening night of "The Love Expert," when directly after the showing of this picture, Mr. Benson flashed this slide:

ANNOUNCEMENT — All Sweethearts are Entitled to one kiss directly after this slide and while the house is dark. Are there any "love experts" in the audience?

The slide was taken away and for five seconds or less the house became almost pitch dark save for fire-escape lights. A series of snatches that drowned out the orchestra's strains of "Kiss Me Again"

Memorial Day Special Has Exploitation Value

A

The Rialto, New York, a long strip devoted to the battlefields of France where the A. E. F. figure prominently is given a place in the Rialto Magazine and proves both a timely and interesting subject.

Among the scenes shown is one with a fine panoramic view of the American cemetery where so many thousands of Uncle Sam's boys are buried under the white wooden crosses that dot many acres at Suresnes.

Other equally interesting views of places in this far off country with which the American forces were identified are shown.

The Rialto has compiled the strip as a special Memorial Week offering, but such a reel would be interesting and possess a varied exploitation possibilities at any time, and especially for our next national holiday, the Fourth of July.

was heard and the lights flashed on to find smiling young couples and not a few very pleased elderly people who had enjoyed a novelty.

Word of mouth exploitation that followed after the first night's kissing spread with more effectiveness than that which accompanied any other promotion effort ever attempted by the Stadium.

"The exhibitor who overlooks the advantage of injecting a little spice into his program with certain novelties—even though they do not seem to hold much appeal for him, is overlooking a mighty attractive bet," said Mr. Benson. "Whether he sees and feels the lack of program novelties or not his patrons do. And that is the big thing. He must learn to look at his program through the eyes of the audience, and not from the angle of the exhibitor, who is bound in nine cases out of ten to be prejudiced as to the merits of his attractions."

"When the Stadium was planning to play a four-day engagement, 'The Love Expert,' my ticket-taker came to me directly following the private showing of the picture at the Stadium with the suggestion that we might make an announcement stating that every fellow in the audience would be allowed to kiss his girl one time during the run of the picture. At first, for some reason or other, the idea did not appeal to me—as I figured that it might lead to some embarrassing situations in the audience, and might result in having to eject some of the spectators should they take the announcement seriously and proceed to get rough. This, of course, would terminate their patronage of my house, and for this reason the idea did not strongly appeal to me at the outset. However, I turned the matter over in my mind, and decided that a good-natured stunt should be pleasing. It certainly was—and very profitable.

All Sweethearts are Entitled to one kiss directly after this slide and while the house is dark. Are there any "love experts" in the audience?

CINCINNATI recently diverted its attention from the Reds long enough to take an interest in the exploitation stunt which heralded the showing of "The Virgin of Stamboul" in the Grand Opera House in that city. The stunts were good and the interest was genuine, as the Grand Opera House box office showed at the end of the run.

Joseph H. Mayer, Director of Publicity for Universal, slipped away from New York and engineered the exploitation. Cincinnati is his home town and knows it. The first thing he did was to arrange for an attractive lobby display. This, he considers vital in the proper presentation of a big picture.

He then obtained a tally-ho bus and covered it with "Virgin of Stamboul" display signs, and arranged cut-outs of the characters of the picture, in the bus windows. The equipage circled Fountain square, Cincinnati, during the several days immediately preceding the opening, and aroused great curiosity.

The driver was dressed up like the rosiest night of the Arabian nights. A big bass drum concealed inside the cab, and administered by a strong-arm and a heavy drum stick, helped to herald the passage of the bus through the streets. On the top of the bus, two singers, sang Oriental songs through megaphones.

After several hours of intermittent drum-fire and song-larrage, the police took part and piped a mournful dirge over the proceedings. They put the quietus on the bass drum and the megaphone artists, but the bus drove on, silently encircling Fountain Square until the driver became dizzy.

In the meantime, a mysterious Turk appeared on the streets with a huge carpet bag. Every block or so he would open the bag. It formed a stand, which he set up on the side-walk, displaying an ad for "The Virgin of Stamboul." Everytime he did so, he had an argument with the police, and attending crowds, all of which was highly pleasing to Mayer, who hovered in the offing, ready to go bail for his befezzed protege, should the police actually run him in.

Also, two pretty young women, dressed in the approved Turkish harem attire, visited every large store in the city, and approached clerks and customers with variations of the following questions:

"Have you seen Sari? She was to meet me here."

"The Virgin of Stamboul is coming here to meet me. Have you seen her?"

These stunts, together with an elaborate newspaper advertising campaign, put the picture over with a bang.
Mexican Revolution Reel Worthy of Attention

The Rialto Magazine contains a timely strip of considerable foot note in it, in the great news of Mexican education and released under the title of "A Day with Carranza," which has exceptional historical significance and possibilities just at this time and for quite a period in the future, providing the Mexican revolution doesn't quiet down all at once, which is not probable if history is any criterion. The reel is a mixture of a news weekly and a scenic, showing among other things some great shots of Mexico City, in which the spectator may view with some surprise evidence that said city is not the dwelling place of civilized people, if the beautiful buildings, handsome residences and spread, well-laid-out streets prove anything.

After the scenic part comes views of the late Mexican president, Carranza, showing him at his home, on horseback, and in his official position. These are followed by some shots of his probable successor, Oregan, this vigorous army entrance to Mexico City, and a pageant staged outside the city celebrating the event.

As a whole, the picture is a mighty interesting offering, containing opportunity for attracting to the box office that portion of a city's residency which doesn't attend the picture house as a regular thing.

Gerbracht Attracts Extra Business by Lobby Display

Manager Joe Gerbracht, of the Twin Star theatre, Ames, Iowa, must be credited with an attractive conception in the arrangement of his lobby for the two-day engagement of "The Flame of the Desert." In the carrying out of an unusual display, he succeeded in suggesting the atmosphere of the picture in a manner calculated to arouse the curiosity of the passer-by.

For the days of the Farrar engagement the lobby of the Twin Star theatre was dressed to represent a desert. About two inches of white sand covered the floor of the lobby, while out of the sand, in places that did not block the entrance and exit doors, rose palms and southern grasses. Two miniature pyramids and a small concentric made of Hindoo draperies added a distinctive tone to the display that brought much favorable comment from the patrons of the theatre.

Manager Gerbracht did not overlook the opportunity to use cut-outs from the stock lithographs, also a liberal number of cards and photographs. Long spray grasses and colored lights were, the dominant feature of the stage setting arranged to place the audience in a receptive mood for the picture.

Harris Says Use Soft Pedal Occasionally

Exhibitors Are Sold on the Exploitation Possibilities Rather Than Worth of the Picture

Declaring that the "soft pedal" on the piano of rag-time motion picture promotion has almost rung through its lack of use, Elmer Harris, manager of the Blackstone theatre, Pittsburgh, has made a plea for a more sensible and appropriate line of exploitation.

With a number of instances to back up his contention, Mr. Harris says many exhibitors are not reaping maximum profits on account of their hammer-and-tong promotion angle to showmen.

"Exploitation, as it is practiced today, is not getting a square deal," Mr. Harris said, prefacing his interview. "It is latched around by ninety per cent of the people engaged in the film business, from the presidents of producing companies to the exhibitor with a 75-seat house. And only about four per cent of the people trying to make money out of exploitation use the soft pedal occasionally. Nor does a very large percentage try to harmonize the exploitation to the nature of the picture."

"The practice of having special feature attractions put on at private showings before booking would cure many promotion ills of the day." The exhibitor is usually sold on an exploitation campaign the instant he books his picture. It should be often he has his campaign cooked up just from reading the title. There is no reason whatever why he should exploit an attraction without knowing what it is, any more than a dry goods store should put in a big supply of clothing without knowing whether it is worth $5,000 or $10,000. It is extremely regrettable, of course, but this sort of exploitation is being carried on in a great many houses. In such a case there is no way for the exhibitor to gauge himself, as he is working blindly, in the dark. He has no idea of what he is buying when he has not seen the picture with his own eyes, previous to the beginning of its run at this house—no matter what assurance he has for the merits of the picture.

"As a matter of fact, once the exhibitor has reviewed his picture and taken it in from all angles, it is comparatively easy for him to judge just what kind of exploitation the picture will take.

"An exhibitor—he who makes motion picture special features his business, and deals with them as his grocery man does with sugar and eggs, should have slightly more than the average judgment, along this line. Why should he not, then, be in a position to judge how much exploitation his picture will stand for? And yet, consider how many exploitation campaigns have been terribly grotesque and out-of-line."

"The answer to the question is simple. It is one of the greatest temptations in the world to buy low and sell high. When the exhibitor is shown a comparatively cheap attraction, which he thinks he can dress up in a good looking lobby display advertising, bill boards and what-not, it is the greatest temptation for him to want to take this film and grab off all the coin he can on it, clearing as great a marginal profit as possible. The exhibitor is no different than any other business man. The scales of business apply to the exhibition game as apply to any other branch of trade.

"Moreover, there is another angle to the perverted sense of exploitation. Promotion that does not fit the picture makes no impression. When we wanted to exploit 'Back to God's Country' we didn't throw away the First National press sheet and talk about our returned soldiers. When the time came to promote Anita Stewart in 'In Old Kentucky' we used the race track idea. Exploitation should impress the thought of the picture. If it does not link the picture and theatre with the idea at which it is aimed, it is not good exploitation."

There are a great number of pictures that will stand big advertising, as big a campaign as the exhibitor wants to put forth, and that is why the exhibitor who likes to put out campaign should steer clear of big efforts for weak sisters and not risk his chance of cleaning up. It's a rule that works both ways. If you're spending money and effort on a picture that is meritorious you are bound to make a hit with your patrons.

Clara Kimball Young Picture Completed

Coincident with the metropolitan premiere at the Astor Hotel, May 26, of Equity's third Clara Kimball Young production, "For the Soul of Rafael," which secured an enthusiastic reception, Equity Pictures announce the completion at the Garson Studios of their fourth Clara Kimball Young output, "Mid-Channel." Using the directing talents of Herbert Garson, cutting and titling of picture is now under way, and prints will be forwarded East within two weeks.

"Mid-Channel," a screen adaptation of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's drama of the same name, in which Ethel Barrymore played the leading role, enjoys a popularity in England.

Madge Kennedy Ill, No Work for Few Days

Goldwyn has been forced to suspend work on production of "The Girl With the Jazz Heart," from the story by Robert Shuman. The delay was necessitated by the illness of Madge Kennedy, who is being starred in the picture, as it is expected that several days will elapse before the star will be able to resume work.

Joe King is playing opposite Miss Kennedy, and the rest of the cast includes Leon Piere Gendron, William Walcott, Helen de Bois, Robert Vaughn, Emilie Hoch, Lilian Worth, Robert Tansey and Milly Haight. Lawrence Windom is directing.

Ralph Ruffner Joins Jensen-Von Herberg

Announcement was made this week that Ralph Ruffner had accepted a position with the Jensen and Von Herberg chain of theaters, operating the "Resistol Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for the Seattle territory. Mr. Ruffner was formerly director of the public relations department of the First National home office. His affiliations with the Jensen and Von Herberg interests will be in the position of director of exploitations for the People, Star and Majestic theaters of Portland.

"Flying A" Sales Force Greatly Increased

In order to hold the high points made by the "Flying A" sales force during the S. S. Hutchinson Tribute Week, insurance against any possible summer slump in business, the American sales organization has been increased. The summer campaign includes several Specials of high grade, among which are listed "The House of the Long, Long East Wind," and "The Week End," a screen adaptation of the novel by Cosmo Hamilton. Original Story Chosen for George Walsh

"The Plunger" is the title of the story selected by William Fox to be the next George Walsh starring vehicle to follow "Number 12." It is an original story by Thomas F. Fallon.

Live News From The Producers

Cosmopolitan Has Fine List

Five Productions Nearly Completed and Many Others Planned

A new list of the extent of Cosmopolitan Pictures' releases, which can be gleaned from the fact that this company has five live new pictures completed, or nearly completed, two more to be started this week, and others ready to put into work within the present month—every one of them taken from a world-famous story or play. The release "Jewel," which is being done at New York's Criterion Theatre, is the latest Cosmopolitan Productions' release. Proclaimed by some critics as the pictorial success of the season, and the logical successor to "The Miracle Man," it is admitted by everybody who has seen it as one of the greatest stories of the year put on the screen.

The "Fugitive," Marion Davies' latest starring vehicle, is another Cosmopolitan production that has just been completed for early release. This is the screen version of Robert W. Chambers' famous novel of the same name, which ran serially in the Cosmopolitan magazine. Another picture in fine list is "The Young Dona" by Marie Corelli, "The Commandant" by Fannie Hurst, "The Wild Goose" by Gouverneur Morris and "Unca Street" by Arthur Somers Roche. "Zal" by Rupert Hughes; "Under the Yellow Magic" by W. G. Birtles; and "Superman" by Fannie Hurst.

Vitagraph Builds on Coast

Additional Structures in Hollywood Provide for Big Increases

An extensive building campaign, approximately $200,000 in cost, has been inaugurated at Vitagraph's Western studios by W. S. Smith, general manager, in keeping with plans outlined during the recent visit to Hollywood of Albert E. Smith, president of the organization. Work will begin shortly on a construction schedule to occupy the summer months and is designed to give Vitagraph one of the most modern plants in the industry by early autumn.

The additional structures have been necessitated by the completed production of "Vitagraph in Los Angeles and the further increases anticipated for the future. Vitagraph will continue to maintain its New York studios, but more elaborate production by companies now maintained in the west will demand extra facilities. Further, the improvements indicate a business necessity against the development of the future. Vitagraph's administration offices will be entirely renewed. A separate modern building will be erected for story dressing rooms exclusively. More stages will be put up, including one huge glass enclosed that are designed for the large acts of the feature companies.

W. S. Smith recently was the successful bidder in probate court for the Times properties of an old Los Angeles estate which adjoins the original Vitagraph property in Hollywood. This has been in use for temporary sets for the last two months. Under the new plans much of the extra area will be devoted to permanent sets, work on which has already begun. Vitagraph now holds twenty acres in Hollywood.

Screen Stars Seen in Stage Production

For the first time in the history of motion pictures, according to reports, a theatrical drama of the speaking stage was presented with an all-motion picture stars at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, on the nights of June 3, 4, and 5, at which time a super-production of Augustus Thomas' famous drama "Arizona" will be given.

Clara Kimball Young headed the cast, playing the leading feminine role. Miss Young's first appearance in a dramatic production since entering motion pictures nine years ago. Playing opposite her in the leading male role was Hobart Bosworth, whose fame upon the stage was equally as great as his success on the screen. The cast included such stars as Dustin Farnum, Geraldo, Theodore Roberts and William Desmond, while Sesenne Hayakawa had the important role of Indian Chief. Besse Barriscale and Milton Shiff were both in important parts.

Fox Sales Force Visit New York Studio

The new William Fox studio and administrative building in New York, which is important events last week, beginning Monday with the official opening of the studio and the meeting which opened the first night of the sixth annual convention of the Fox Film Corporation's sales forces. Early on Monday morning representatives of the sales branch of the company gathered on the floor of the big studio. They were conducted through the maze of sets, and overlooked no detail of the studio's installation with which Mr. Fox has equipped his production department.

Preparing for Neilan's Work in Europe

Marshall Neilan, as recently announced, will make an extended trip abroad within the next few months. He will be accompanied by an entire producing organization, including several internationally known screen celebrities. In France, England, Spain, Ireland and Belgian arrangements are now being made by Mr. Neilan's foreign representative, Harry Ham, for the picturing of some of the most noted stars of the world on the globe. These will be included in the different stories which the director-producer will stage during his six months abroad.

Goldwyn Closes Big Foreign Deal

Arthur Zietm, foreign sales manager for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has closed another record-breaking $1 million third year product. This time the sale is for Australia and New Zealand and includes "The Three Stooges" and "Red City," the first three episodes of which are now being enthusiastically received in the United States.
Special Opens at Hotel Astor

WITH the Hotel Astor as the place of exhibition and the American Legion, the premier of "The Wonder Man," starring George Arliss, which took place last Saturday evening, was a remarkable motion-picture event. The premier showing of the production which is now released for general distribution by Robertson-Cole, followed a dinner in the Rose Room of the Hotel Astor, at which the re-lease company entertained one hundred leading newspaper readers, trade paper writers, sporting editors, cartoonists and journalistic figures. The Robertson-Cole Company has issued the following statement in connection with the opening showing of its big special:

"The picture was viewed by one of the most notable assemblies ever gathered, from a standpoint of diversity and prominence. The boxes in the Grand Ball Room of the Astor Hotel where the showing took place, were filled with dignitaries. Among them were the French High Commissioner; representatives of the United States Navy and of the United States Army; Lieut. Gen. Robert Lee, the Secretary of War; Mr. John D. Rockefeller, who directed "The Wonder Man," and Josephine Chance, the picture distributor; Chico Selig, the comedian and party; supporting actors of "The Wonder Man," and members of the Astor management committee, representing the organization under whose auspices the picture was made."

"The premier opened with the

Bert Lyttele Is Selecting Scripts

WADING through a mass of manuscripts was the first second task of Bert Lyttele, when the young Metro star arrived in New York last Wednesday. The manager of Pacific Coast, where he had spent the two years at the Metro studios in Hollywood, Cal., Mr. Lyttele has returned to the metropolis to make a series of special productions at Metro's Sixty-first Street studios. At least four pictures will be done in the East by Mr. Lyttele, according to present arrangements, and at last only a play as yet has been definitely decided upon for the star, he is reading a great number of vehicles with a view to picking the best picture. Metro officials have found Mr. Lyttele in a very judicious in the selection of plays to be excellent, and upon his arrival in the East they turned to him for his personal an accumulation of literary material, designed for a male star of his qualifications.

"A Message from Mars," Charles Hackett's most successful of the play, which was altered by his judgment in the selection of plays to be excellent, and upon his arrival in the East they turned to him for his personal an accumulation of literary material, designed for a male star of his qualifications.

"A Message from Mars," Charles Hackett's most successful of the play, which was altered by his judgment in the selection of plays to be excellent, and upon his arrival in the East they turned to him for his personal an accumulation of literary material, designed for a male star of his qualifications.

England and the United States. The play has had over a thousand performances, including a record of twenty-two weeks in aid of the Red Cross, and was presented at the Garrick theatre, October 7, 1901. It is known that the author is being made of being novel in theme.

The plot tells of a wealthy but hard-hearted and utterly selfish young man who is surprised by the sudden change of circumstances by being brought about by a romantic and actual contact with human suffering through the nightmarish visitation of a living spirit messenger from the planet Mars.

Before leaving the West Coast Mr. Lyttele repeated his work before the camera in "The Price of Redemption," one of the most spectacular productions, it is said, that has ever been made by Metro. The picture is based on the powerful novel of the novel of East India, "The Temple of Dawn," by J. R. A. Whitley. It was purchased by the studio for six months by Mr. Mathis and directed by Mr. Fitzgerald. The special settings were designed by the studio. The photogtapher was Mr. M. G. Carpenter, and the photogtapher was Mr. Solt Polito. It is reported that the star wasloyd Has Bought "The Hunch" by P. Wilde

Metro announces the purchase of a new play project, the story of "The Hunch," by P. Wilde. Although "The Hunch" is Mr. Wilde's initial effort for the silent drama after having written for the stage, Metro officials state that the freshness of his style and content and his ability to combine them, makes him an author with a motion picture screen picture, as they predict a great future for him in his new field for his talents. In the Hunch, the star, John Chisholm, is written by Mr. Wilde's original script of "The Hunch," so impressed by it that Metro already have decided that is probable Metro will make use of the original screen stories.

L. J. Bamberger and Joe Levy Opens Office

Leon J. Bamberger and Joe Levy have gone into business for themselves, the firm of Bamberger and Levy, and will act in the capacity of general sales agents and brokers to the trade. They have established themselves on the second floor of the building at 149 Broadway, New York. The following items have been quoted by Mr. Bamberger as coming within their field of interest:

The sale of United States rights, state rights and foreign rights on both features and comedies; the sale of scenarios and stories; the booking of big productions on percentage; exploitation; publicity; advertising; financing; distribution; organization; systems installed; production of advertising and industrial films.

Realistic Sea Setting Results in Accident

According to a report from Metro, Edward Sloman, who is directing the scenes of "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," sustained "painful cuts and bruises," during a filming of one of the scenes of the romance that is being filmed in the Metro studio at Hollywood. The accident is said to have occurred when the star was hurled on the deck of the "ship" that had been constructed for the purpose of a large scale to give the proper rolling effect of a vessel laboring in a heavy sea. Mitchell Lewis, the star, is also said to have been considerably by the on-rush of water.
Goldwyn Product Sold in South America

Arthur Zehm, foreign sales manager for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has closed a contract at a high figure for the marketing of Goldwyn's third year product in Chile, Bolivia and Peru. The deal means that the first product under the new production agreement made by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., during the 1920-1921 season, beginning August 30 of this year and terminating about May 15, 1921. This contract, together with an explanation of production sources and the nature of releases, is contained in an official listing of the titles of the entire schedule, which will be available for publication next week.

June Mathis Adapting "The Four Horsemen"

June Mathis, head of Metro's scenario staff, who recently arrived in New York from Hollywood, already is deep in the task of casting into the picture form Vicente Blasco Ibanez's novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." At Metro's London studio last week brings the largest of a series of such productions, it was intimated that production of this celebrated story would start about the first of July. No mention was made of the probable members of the cast. It will be produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, Director General of Metro, with an all-star ensemble.

Items Regarding Pathé Serial Activities

Robert Brunton has selected Jack Mathers for the heavy role, Natalie Warfield for a "vamp" part, and William Brown to play characters in the new serial, starring Charles Hutchison. Wellington Van Dyke is directing the picture under Mr. Brunton's supervision.

According to Pathé, reports from the branch offices show that the favorable verdict of the reviewers on "The Third Eye" is being verified by the cordial reception accorded it upon its initial showing in the various houses that booked it on release.

A scene from "The Return of Tarzan," a Numa Pictures production, distributed by Goldwyn.

Sixty Features on Its Schedule

A MINIMUM of sixty special feature attractions, from fifteen independent producing organizations, will be released to exhibitor owners of sub-franchised by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., during the 1920-1921 season, beginning August 30 of this year and terminating about May 15, 1921. This schedule, together with an explanation of production sources and the nature of releases, is contained in an official listing of the titles of the entire schedule, which will be available for publication next week.

The new schedule carries an increase of approximately twenty-five per cent in the total number of attractions to be distributed by Associated First National during the coming season over the aggregate for the season just ended.

The summer schedule for 1921, which begins on June 7, with an Allan Dwan production, "A Splendid Hazard," produced by Mayflower, was announced two weeks ago. This has since been supplemented with two additional attractions, giving a total of nine releases instead of seven. Following the Allan Dwan production through Associated First National will be "Married Life," first of the series of Mark Sennett specials, to be released on June 14. "Yes, Mr. No," starring Norma Talmadge, will be given its first-run presentation the week of June 15 and will be succeeded on July 12 by the third Marshall Neilan production, which has not yet been officially announced under its releasing title. Constance Talmadge will star in "The Perfect Woman" as the production for first-run houses the week of July 19, to be followed on August 2 by the fifth Katherine MacDonnell attraction for the Circuit, entitled "The Notorious Miss Lil." The famous Vidor's special feature, "The Jack Knife Man," from the famous story of the same title by Ellis Parker Butler, will be the second release for the month, with August 16 as the date, and the final attraction, concluding the summer season, will be "The Scroffer," the second Allan Dwan production to be released through First National by Mayflower.

The fall season for First National's exhibitor members will, it is announced, begin on August 30 with "Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway," the first of Charles Ray's personally produced attractions, and adapted from George Cohan's greatest stage success. The star is reported to have taken three months of constant work at the studios to complete this production, which is now being cut and edited, and is complete with the exception of about a thousand feet of important exteriors, which, it is expected, will be photographed in New York City within the next thirty days. Charles Chaplin has a total of four productions to deliver to First National under the terms of his contract, and Marshall Neilan will provide three special attractions after August 30, not including the third of his releases through the Circuit, which is scheduled on the summer season list for July 12.

George McManus, the famous cartoonist, paid a visit to the Chaplin studios recently and sketched the incomparable Charlie while the latter was making his next hit, lunch-producer for First National Exhibitor's Circuit. The picture shows Mr. and Mrs. McManus with little Jack Congan, Jr., and the world's premier cartoonist.
Sub-Franchises Granted
First National Exceeds Quota of Proposed Expansion of Membership

WITH eleven hundred and twenty-two sub-franchise applications granted, and over two thousand recommendations for additional awards before the Executive Committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., the first thirty day period in the extension of exhibitor membership privileges could this week with an approximate total of three thousand theatres on record or seeking to be recorded, as part of the Circuit's co-operative market for independently produced attractions.

This result, it is said, exceeds the quota fixed by Associated First National officials at the Chicago convention of members and exchange managers, by more than one hundred percent. The Executive Committee, composed of N. H. Gordon, of Boston, Moe Mark, of New York, and H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer of Associated First National Pictures, is expected to pass finally on all pending applications for sub-franchise grants before the middle of June.

Delay in official action by this committee resulted from the determination of company officials to make a ten days' trip to Dallas, Texas, in response to requests from a committee representing independent exhibitors in Tennessee and Arkansas, that some plan be formulated whereby the sub-franchise plan could be made immediately available in that territory as a proposition separate from the previous First National affiliation there. This trip delayed the work of the Executive Committee in deciding on applications from all territories.

Important first run theatres in every territory have filed requests for sub-franchises and the great majority of these have been granted and issued. The total number of sub-franchises authorized to date includes a membership extension, on the new plan, in one theatre owned and operated by the original members of First National who signed the agreements for the Associated First National position in Atlantic City last January.

An interesting feature of the awarding of the new sub-franchise applications from several territories where First National exchange managers called conventions of independent exhibitors was the showing of the plan in all its details, immediately after the Chicago meeting.

Dwan Presents Strong Cast
Five of Players in "A Splendid Hazard" Have Featured Formerly

ONE of the noteworthy features of "A Splendid Hazard," Alon Dwan's third independent production presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is said to be the appearance of an unusually strong cast. Headed by Henry B. Wallis, it consists of seven prominent players, five of whom have been featured in other productions. In the role of Karl Breitman, "the man who took the greatest sporting chance," Walter Slezak, one of the most brilliant characterizations he has ever contributed to the screen, is cast. In "A Splendid Hazard" is played by Rosemary Theby whose work in serials and dramatic features has brought her to the fore as a screen star. The young American newspaper correspondent, who figures prominently in the story, which was written by Harold MacGrath and published originally as a book, is essayed by Norman Kerry, one of Filmdom's best known leading men.

Others in the cast are Joseph Dowling whose performance in "The Miracle Man" in George Leon Baker's sensational success of that name, attracted much attention and who is also featured in "The Kentucky Colonel," and Ann Pennington, who has starred in a number of Western subjects produced by Universal.

The supporting company includes Thomas Jefferson, son of Joseph Jefferson who attained fame in the role of "Rip Van Winkle.

Y.M.C.A. Worker Has Praise for Ray
What the motion picture meant as a means of recreation and inspiration to the soldiers during the Great War is described in a letter written by a former Y. M. C. A. worker to Charles Ray, thanking the first National star for his clean, wholesome plays that were a source of real service during the troubled war times. The writer, J. Cal- lin Candy, pastor of the Congregational Church of Geneva, Ohio, says the appeal of Charlie Ray was such that he could not have had a full house when a Ray film was showing.

The veteran war worker declared further, that because of the high tone of Ray's photoplays he was able to urge the members of his congregation to take advantage of the star's wholesome films.
Elaborate Premiere Is Planned

"Madonnas and Men," a Jans Picture, to Be Shown

"Madonnas and Men," one of the most important events in local amusement circles that has taken place in many months, plans are already underway to give "Madonnas And Men" an extensive exploitation campaign not only in this country but through the British Empire and Europe as well. So confident are the Jans officials of the great success this feature is bound to achieve that they not only spent a small fortune to make it but will appropriate another one to give it the widest publicity and advertising.

Yet down in your date book right now that you are going to see "Madonnas And Men" at the 44th street theatre on Sunday evening, June 13th and keep the appointment, so you'll not miss seeing what Jans Pictures, Inc., assures us is a real triumph for the motion picture.

Broadway Showing of "Illiterate Digest"

What is probably a unique record in moving picture circles, was made recently by "The Illiterate Digest," by Will Rogers, which is produced by the Marion H. Kohn Productions. The N. Y. independent Masterfilm Corporation acquired the New York distribution rights for this novelty reel from Joe Brandt. Through error, is the report, the first issue was sent to the Strand theatre on Broadway, N. Y., and through another oversight the reel was shown at once performance without actually being booked.

Chas. Maigne Awaits Star in New York

Charles Maigne has returned to the East after several months spent in directing pictures for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on the Coast, whence he went upon completion of "The Copperhead." He is awaiting the arrival in two weeks of Thomas Meighan, who is finishing "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," under the direction of William DeMille, and who will come East to work under Mr. Maigne's direction in "The Frontier of the Stars," by Albert Payson Terhune.

Mrs. Drew Completes Fourth of Series

Mrs. Sidney Drew has completed the fourth of her series of two reels for Pathé distribution, in the Essanay studio at Chicago. "The Unconventional Maida Greenwood" is the title of the successor to "The Emotional Miss Vanghi," which is to be released by Pathé on May 30.
Film to Be Feature of "Advertisers' Meet"

A special film, showing the New York headquarters of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, is being made under the direction of Harry Levy, manager of the Educational and Industrial Department of the Universal Film Company. It will be one of the special features of the convention of the clubs to be held in Indianapolis from June 6th to June 16th. The picture will be titled "How the Truth Goes into Advertising."

The Screen Advertisers Association of the World will be well represented at the convention.

Early Goldwyn Product Grows in Favor

Because managers of the smaller theatres have awakened to the fact that the first and second year's Goldwyn product is not too high class to be appreciated by their audience, there has arisen a strong demand for the circulation of these pictures in communities not heretofore visited. To meet this demand, a sales promotion department has been added as a part of the sales organization. The promotion department will devote its energies to the marketing of the early Goldwyn pictures. New prints will be issued.

Pathe Claims "Scoop" for Its News Reel

According to a statement from Pathe Reel headquarters, O. A. Aultman, Pathe News' New York manager, which has just been killed by a refusal to pay wages to the workers, the entire production of the Pathe News reel is to be made in Mexico City. He was hired for days by the agents of the Oreway forces, says Pathe. They followed him when he made his escape from the Mexican capital with the negative of the revolutionary scenes which he had included in his pursuers and reached.

Husted Starts Work on Storeyart Scenics

Work on the filming of the first of the Storeyart Scenics, which Charles Husted is producing, was begun last week and it is said that the initial release will be in readiness for a private showing within a very short time.

Mr. Husted has as his camera man Earl W. Rossman, formerly one of the experts with the Prizma organization. A specially engaged cast of players has been used in the first of the Storeyart Scenics.

"His Temporary Wife" Booking Fast

The "W. W. Hodgkinson organization announces additional bookings among big exhibitors for its all-star release, "His Temporary Wife," an adaptation by Joseph Levering from Robert H. Bruce's magazine story. Jacob Lourie has directed it for a week's run at his Modern and Palace theatres in Boston. C. E. Stilwell will play it at his Casino in Spokane. The Polk chain in New England has booked the picture for its theatres in Bridgeport, Waterbury and New Haven.

Pathe Says "Sherry" Is Winning Wide Favor

Edgar Lewis's second Pathe production, "Sherry," is being received with favor by exhibitors throughout the country, Pathe states. The screen version of George Barr McCutcheon's best seller," was not scheduled for release by Pathe until May 30th, but advance screenings of it were held in each of the thirty-two branch offices of Pathe.

Like "Other Men's Shoes," which, until the release of "Rio Grande" held the Pathe record for numbers of bookings and average price per day, "Sherry" has a large amount of human interest. It is typical of the work of Edgar Lewis, who found greater opportunities for spectacular outdoor production in "Sherry" than in "Other Men's Shoes."

Palmore and Homan Point Out Error

A recent communication from the Palmore & Homan Co., of Baltimore, points out an error in the May 15th issue of the Motion Picture News, in which it was stated that the Baltimore State Rights Film Co. owned a building at 420 E. Lexington street, Baltimore. Patmore & Homan state that they are the owners of the building.

Blumenthal Sails to Boost Jans Picture

Ben Blumenthal, president and general manager of the Export and Import Film Corp., sailed for Europe on May 29. The reason for the trip, which is to be an extensive one, is the Jans Pictures, Inc., special super-feature production "Madonnas and Men." The Export and Import Film Corporation made contracts sometime ago whereby they acquired the foreign rights to all Jans Pictures, which contracts include "Madonnas and Men."

Dan Lederman Resigns Posts

"S MILING DAN" LEDER-MAN, genial general manger of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. is officially reported as having resigned from the post of assistant treasurer, assistant director, director of the Grey Theatre and the Canadian Universal Film
Exchange. Assistant secretary of the Big U. office has been appointed as assistant secretary of the Canadian Universal Film
Exchange, assistant secretary of the Grey Theatre and assistant director of the universal Film Exchanges, Inc. in the New York organization.

Nearly thirteen years ago
Dan started the first motion picture theatre west of the Missouri river at Topeka, Kansas, in the days when 900 feet of miscellaneous junk film was considered "so me show." There were no posters, no slides, no photographs, no advertising, no props of any character.

All he had in those days was a rented barrel with a moving pot and brush reading,
"New Big Show Today. Admission
5 Cts."

People would come to picture shows those days, says Dan.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan Lederman, who are residents of New York to Omaha on business, have decided to hand out responsibilities to give people to attend." After five months he opened the Eltie Amusement Co., which is a flourishing business now, and has opened 企业管理. One in Junction City, two in Wichita, one in Lexington, three in Omaha, three in Council Bluffs, two in South
Omaha, one in Burlington, Iowa.

Before he had quite opening the-theatres he had thirty-seven homes under the control of his company.

To be exact it was just thirteen years ago that Mr. Lederman entered the film business and shortly afterward took the management of the General Film Corporation.

After an extended period with the General Film Dan associated himself with the Universal and later went with the Universal with whom he has remained until last week.

As a boy and as his early teens Dan was employed by the Missouri Pa-rifie Railroad, where he remained for several years when he went with the Santa Fe and in his employment with that Company braved the heights to the chief city of the road. Later Dan went with the Queen and Crescent Route.

It was during his stay with the Rubber Trust that Dan got his first idea of pictures and for thirteen years without a break Dan has given his concentrated time and energies to the industry.

For twenty-seven years without a break Dan has worked without a real vacation and his resignation from the Universal was to save a little of the Old West for his further use in the commercial world.

The manner in which Dan carried the了不少, his departure while with the Universal has made him a "thirteen wonder," he being a likely and successful man organizations and while the labors of his position as general manager of the New York office of the Universal demanded all of his time he still found time to look after the interests of the many organizations in which he was directly associated.

Exhibitors Commend
Harold Lloyd

Path Exchange calls Harold Lloyd the "L. Clifford Hale" in a statement just issued Pathe submits a number of telegrams, voicing approval of Lloyd's past performance, as the reason why the preceding title has been confined on the comedian. Pathe moreover, asserts that these telegrams are simply typical of the wide expression of approval which exhibitors everywhere are registring.

The Washington theatre, Boston, writes:

"Two reel Harold Lloyd com-eludes are certainly making a big hit with our exhibitors. They are received with applause and the house is in a continuous roar of laughter during the run of each comedy."

Jacob Albert of the Victory, Patna, Illinois, writes:

"I can play Lloyd day and date against any other screen comedian, but Lloyd, and guarantee outdraw
the other bird.

Holiday Bookings for
"Slam Bang Jim"

"Slam Bang Jim" is looking for the Fourth of July feature in some of the largest theatres, according to an exhibitor in the American Film
Co. Among the extended bookings on "Slam Bang Jim" received during the past few days are the Gaiety theatre of Cleveland,
Ohio; Folies Theatre of Oklahoma City; the Cabaret of Cincinnati; the Royal of Sioux City, the Franklin of Oakland, Calif.; the Idle Hour of Kansas City; Fox Theatre of Springfield; the Wilson of Baltimore, Maryland; and the Casino of Davenport.

Bray Gets Films from Noted Naturalists

Bray Pictures Corporation announces that it has completed arrangements with Harold L. Finley, nationally known naturalist, whereby the Bray organization will acquaint itself with many of the animal pictures of bird and animal life for distribution through the Golden Golden Pictures and the pictures are said to be of an exceedingly rare quality and represent the work of Mr. Finley and his wife for the past three years.

Jaccard to Make Five Reelers for Universal

Jacques Jaccard, who is directing a series of two reel Royal North Western Mounted Police pictures for Universal, has been authorized to produce a five reel feature, using the same characters and following the same lines as the shorter stories.

"Duck Inn" is Second
Mermaid Comedy

"Duck Inn" is announced as the title of the second of the Mermaid exchanges. "Fresh Start" is the initial release of the series.

Personality as A Screen Asset

Picture Demands Brains as Well as Beauty of Its Real Stars

THE American Film Company,
Inc., has issued the following statement concerning the character of the leading parts to be found in each one of its three forthscoming pictures. A. M. Mervin's novel, "The Blue Moon, Whispering Smith," and "The House of Toys" has been pirated by a novel by Henry Russell Miller;
"The Blue Moon" by David Anderson and "Whispering Smith" by Frank H. Spearman.
The statement issued by the American Film Company is submitted in the following:

For super-specials such as the American has been putting out, Stuart S. Hutchinson marks that not only a beautiful heroine and good acting are imperative, but that the personality of all the players must be as genuine as possible in accord with the author's own concept of his characters.

Put in, he says, with the general manager, has been at the Coast studios with the directors making an exhaustive study of the parts in each.

For instance, the choice of Mina, Marguerite Sylva for the heroic character of "Grey Theatre" is unsurpassed. "The Honey Bee" is an unusually good illustration of this point. A woman of matured thinking and strong personality put the idea across in a forceful way, whereas the prettiest liliputian figure would have made this powerful heart drama simply the ordinary type of love story. So in "The House of Toys," although seems born for the role she carries
-a romantic, selfish girl in love with a man, and with no sense of the obligation she was incurring in marriage with a poor young architect;

While Helen Jerome Eddy, as the other woman, carries her role with the winsome simplicity of the true woman which is her chief personal charm, and which, in the drama, gives ample reason for the wife's anxiety regarding the power of the stereoscopic finish assistant her husband meets in business.

In "The Blue Moon" directed by George L. Cox, another all-star cast includes Pell Trenton, and Elinor Field in the leading roles. As the Pearl Hunter, the man of few words who mixed with the roughest characters of the river town on the Indiana flats, was one of them, yet apart, a man who did not know his own name, yet through the greatest of his motives is fine family pride. This is Pell Trenton's part in "The Blue Moon," and Elinor Field is the Wild Rose whose love he loves. Incidentally the audience will learn some interesting things about pearl hunting.

"Charles Clay and Irene Rich who carry prominent roles in "Whispering Smith" are with the American by special arrangement from the producers of this one drama. Kathleen O'Connor and Billy Elmer are also in this all-star cast.

According to R. R. Neils, a premium should be placed upon the intellectual assets of the players; and while individuality is not clai-en 'skin deep,' is not claiming and holding as many devotees as in the past. The fact that individuality is not lost through the medium of the film, as was feared at one time, is the legitimate stage. True, the attraction of the human voice is lost, but the actor who is responsible for the tone of his voice and on the silver evel, and there again...

"It's the man that you are" that counts even in the movies.
Miss Dean to Resume Work
Continuity of "Outside the Law"
Being Written; Browning to Direct

ELABORATE preparations are being made at Universal City for the next Priscilla Dean feature, which will be started within the next two weeks. Tod Browning, who directed Miss Dean in her last production, "The Virgin of Shambold," will direct her next picture. He is also the author of the new story, which is called "Outside the Law." The continuity is now being prepared by Lucien Hubbard, scenario chief at Universal City, and the technical department is busy with plans and blueprints for a series of elaborate settings.

"Outside the Law" is a crook drama of a new type. It has no crooked police or dishonest city officials. All the principal characters move in the small orbit, and the featured role of the story is that of a Chinese philosopher who preaches the doctrines of Confucius.

Miss Dean will have the role of the daughter of a keeper of a notorious gambling den in San Francisco's Chinatown, a part that will afford her better opportunities, according to Mr. Browning, than any character yet provided her. The part was fashioned to her temperament and personality by the man who knows her professional side better than any one else, for Tod Browning is the director who first brought Priscilla Dean into prominence several years ago and who has shared in her rapidly increasing popularity.

The filming of the story will include a three weeks stay in San Francisco and a week's tour in an ocean liner. A super-excellent cast is now being engaged.

Bebe Daniels in Good Role
To Star for Realart in Adaptation of Saturday Evening Post Stories

BEBE Daniels' first production as a Realart star will be "You Never Can Tell," an adaptation of two short stories that were published recently in the Saturday Evening Post, by Grace Lovell Bryan. According to J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart, the selection of the material will give exhibitors an accurate line on the manner in which the company intends to satisfy the public's insatiable taste for something different.

Miss Daniels' first starring vehicle will deal with the adventures of a cigar millionaire's daughter, in a New York City hotel. Miss Daniels will have the role of Rowena Jones, daughter of a large family of six, who decides that her living conditions are unbearable and that it is up to her to become a martyr by marrying a rich man.

All she needs to do is to find the rich man. Her first experience is a heart breaker. Charles Allentown, uncle of the celebrated heir to the Armour millions, Vincent Armour, pays a lot of attention to her at the cigar counter of the Gilmore, and then takes her one day for dinner to a Long Island resort hotel. When his wife finds them there and reveals his ulterior motive, Rowena gets the first real jolt of her career.

However, undismayed, Rowena continues her search for a "rich mate." She finds one eventually but only to find the doors of society closed to both herself and the man she has married. Next, her mother-in-law buys and lays plans to get rid of the discouraging daughter-in-law. However, Rowena is equal to Mother-in-law's game, and how she eventually maneuvers her husband's unkindly parent, wins a recovered place in the family circle and establishes herself in the graces of society is told in the action of the picture.

ON his return to New York from the West Coast late last week, Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, announced that "Hidden Dangers," the Vitagraph serial in which Joe Ryan and Jean Paige are co-starred, will be released in July. More than half of the fifteen episodes have already been completed on the coast under the direction of William Bertram.

The story of "Hidden Dangers," which was written by Mr. Smith and Cleveland Moffett, has received many words of praise from exhibitors who have seen the first episodes screened and who have booked it on the strength of this early action. Mr. Bertram, the director, however, in a wire to Mr. Smith this week, claims that the big "wallowing" thrills, as he styled them, are yet to come.

"If they like those first two episodes," he said, "just wait until they see episodes nine and ten and the thrills that you worked out here with Mr. Moffett. The Jekyll-Hyde types of the serial gets stronger as the story unfolds," Mr. Bertram said. The exhibitors are already referring to this production as the "Jekyll-Hyde serial," as Joe Ryan plays the dual role, appearing at times as a genial retired physician and again as the leader of a vicious criminal band.

Good Cast Seen in "Suds"
Mme. Rose Dione, Albert Austin and Harold Goodwin Support the Star

THE cast selected to support Mary Pickford in her new picture "Suds" is said to embody an unusual high class of screen talent. The following statement, issued from the offices of the United Artists Corporation, describes the past achievements of the members of Pickford cast.

"Prominent in her support is Mme. Rose Dione, for a long time one of the leading members of Sarah Bernhardt's company in Paris and who since the outbreak of the war has appeared in French dramas at the French theatre in New York, and more recently came to California to appear in the silent art. Mme. Dione's screen debut was in 'The Secret Garden' and recently she appeared in 'The Luck of the Irish.'"

"The principal lead—the possessor of the shirt upon which this story is founded—is Albert Austin, an English comedian of note, who for the past four years has been prominent in all of Charlie Chaplin's productions, and was loaned by the world famous comedian to Miss Pickford for this production.

"Harold Goodwin, who scored such a success in support of Miss Pickford in 'The Heart of the Hills' is also seen in "Suds" as Benjamin Pilsbury Jones, master of transportation for the laundry.

"Nadine Montgomery, the clever English character actress who has played in a number of eastern productions, but who more recently has appeared at the Little theatre in Los Angeles, has a splendid part as one of the girls in the laundry who is rather skeptical of Amanda's aristocratic lineage. Mme. Montgomery being a fluent linguist, also acts as interpreter for Mme. Dione."

"One of the principal members of the organization, but who is entirely new to the film world, is Lavender, the woe-be-gone nag which pulls the laundry wagon. Lavender was selected out of some two hundred applicants for the position, being the most dilapidated specimen of horse flesh ever seen around any studio."
Carpentier on Broadway
“The Wonder Man” Booked at Strand to Follow Showing at Hotel Astor

Moe Mark, manager of the Strand theatre, who has booked “The Wonder Man”

Moe Mark, director of the Strand Theatre, New York, and of the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, has booked “The Wonder Man,” the Georgine Carpentier picture. It will be shown, according to an announcement by Robertson-Cole, who are distributing the production, for a week in the New York house, immediately following the close of the Astor Theatre engagement, and in the Brooklyn house for the week following this New York engagement.

Despite the fact that the picture ran eight days at the Astor Hotel, under the auspices of the American Legion, thereby giving Broadway opportunity to see it, Mr. Mark immediately booked it and for his two New York houses, and for several other houses outside New York, for which he engages attractions.

These bookings, neither of which will be started until the end of the Hotel Astor engagement show Mr. Mark’s opinion of the picture. Recognizing it as one of the big attractions of the season, he felt in booking the picture for a week on Broadway and for the following week in Brooklyn, the previous American Legion showing on Broadway was a preparation for success in his houses.

Together with the Astor Hotel showing of eight days, which begins Saturday evening, May 29, the Strand showing with “The Wonder Man” fifteen days on Broadway, a run which has been given by only a few other houses. Considering that Brooklyn is part of New York city, and easily accessible, it gives the Carpentier picture a total run in leading houses of the Greater City of 22 days. Following these showings, in the most advantageous positions possible, there will be countless others in the more important neighborhood houses of New York City, as the summer progresses.

Barbara Bedford With Tourneur Organization

Contracts were recently consummated under the terms of which Barbara Bedford will be a member of Maurice Tourneur’s organization for a number of years to come. Barbara Bedford at the present time is unknown to photoplay fans throughout the country. She came to California a few years ago, and Maurice Tourneur recognized in her a most unusual and promising young lady.

Industrial Scenario Is Bought at High Price

Harry Levey of the Universal Industrial and Educational Department has purchased a scenario for an industrial picture at the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars, it is stated. In addition, five other scenarios have been purchased by him during the past week, the prices paid ranging from one thousand to two thousand dollars; it is declared.

“Shore Acres” Crowds Washington Theatre

“Shore Acres,” with Alice Lake, played to standing room at Crystal’s Metropolitan theatre, Washington, D. C., during a week’s run beginning Sunday, May 29. News of this was contained in a letter from Nelson B. Bell, general press representative of the Grandad theatres, to the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation which produced and distributes “Shore Acres.”

Four Episodes of Ruth Roland Serial Here

The first four episodes of “Ruth of the Rockies” serial in which Ruth Roland will make her next appearance as a Pathe star, were shipped to complete houses in New York from the Astra studios recently for the purpose of an initial screening for the Pathe officials in the home office.

Humorous Is Added to Universal Staff

Universal has engaged the services of another popular writer. The latest acquisition is Don Kalin, a recognized writer of humorous literature. Kalin, formerly on the staff of Puck and Judge. From now on he will write comedies for Universal.

Goldwyn in Book Tie-up

Appleton & Co. and Producer Will Exploit “To the Highest Bidder”

The latest important purchase announced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is Maxfield Parrish’s tremendously successful story, “The Trap,” which ran in McClure’s Magazine from December to May, and was read, it is conservatively estimated, by not less than five million people. In novel form, this amazing tale of love, mystery and intrigue will be published by D. Appleton & Co., some time in July, and the book will be exploited in connection with the picture.

Executives of Goldwyn Pictures and Appleton & Co. have decided to change the title from “The Trap” to “To the Highest Bidder,” and the author has approved the alteration. When the book appears it will carry the new title, it is stated.

The co-operative exploitation campaign, to be shared in by Goldwyn and the publishers, is being prepared far in advance to include every possible angle for advertising the picture. In novel sales it is tied into the publication of a novel and a simultaneous release. In the instance of Maxfield Parrish’s novel, the publishers plan going further than ever in

Says Will Rogers Has Scored a Big Success

Goldwyn expresses the opinion that Will Rogers’ work in “Je’s Call Me Jim” places him securely in the front ranks of screen comedians. Goldwyn forwards a copy of a telegram said to have been sent to Samuel Goldwyn by Jack Eaton, managing director of the Strand, New York, following a week’s showing of the picture at the big Strand house:

“Will Rogers scored most genuine success of the season in ‘Je’s Call Me Jim.’ The theme of the story is sincere, direction perfect, and the magnetic personality of Rogers so contagious that Strand audiences enthusiastically applauded the picture at every showing.”
Experts Laud "Doug's" Next

The headquarters of the United Artists Corporation announces that following the completion of "The Mollycoddle," starring Douglas Fairbanks, many communications have been received from the Coast—some from persons prominently associated with the industry—who proclaim Fairbanks' next picture as "another big winner." The receipt of these commendatory messages is made the subject of a statement from United Artists' offices. The statement follows:

"Douglas Fairbanks has come through with another big winner. That's the consensus of opinion of West Coast experts who were given the opportunity of seeing the print this week of 'The Mollycoddle.' " Messages telling of the exceptional value from box-office and patent standpoint of the picture have been received by Hiram Abrams, of the United Artists Corporation, who has set June 13th as the release date for this production, the third 'Doug' has made for the 'Big Four.' "This universal opinion comes from such distinguished persons as Allan Dwan, the well-known director; Anita Loos, the celebrated screen writer; Charles Chaplin, and a host of others who were the guests at a private viewing of the working print. The message received by Mr. Abrams states: "Just finished cutting working print 'Mollycoddle.' Length approximately six thousand feet. Chaplin says brilliant, clever, a wonderful characterization, the best picture he ever saw Douglas Fairbanks' best picture. "Douglas Fairbanks ever made in his entire career. Anita Loos unqualifiedly agrees with Dwan. "Mary Pickford very enthusiastic. We all think it a knockout."

"Everything seems to point to the fact that Doug has come through with another spectacular production, one that will add more laurels to those already won by his exceptionally clever 'Big Four' pictures. Humor and environment supply the themes for this production and 'The Mollycoddle' is unlike any other Fairbanks has yet seen in, a new idea and a story which finds him in a character which will not alone please the host of admirers, but which will add tremendously to his already gigantic following."

"Every movie has its departure from the usual type of picture, for which he is famous, having done away with much of his stunting which has been supplanted by a sweet love story, affording him an opportunity to place himself in a more subdued character of a sympathetic nature."

Anita Stewart Picture Has Feminine Appeal

"Harriet and the Piper," Anita Stewart's latest Louis B. Mayer. First National attraction, now in the course of production, is said to have an unusual feminine appeal. The story is by Kathleen Norris and was published first as a serial in the Pictorial Review, one of the leading woman's magazines. It is now being published in book form.

Educational Lists Its Releases

One Two-Reel Comedy Every Week; A Fine List of Scenes

One two-reel comedy every week is provided for in the initial release schedule of Educational Films Corporation through its own exchanges, starting with the week of June 13th. There will also be a Chester-Outing every week, with a Bruce Scenic Beautiful and a Scenic alternating. There will also be other special releases weekly, including two single-reels among the first block.

Prints and supplies of material are now being shipped to the various exchanges in preparation for the opening. It is possible that some of the offices will not be ready for business at the time set, but the mechanical arrangements are being pushed and wires received from the New York offices indicate that those jointly interested in the various exchanges are seeking to overcome every difficulty.

Four of the releases for the first week have already been given pre-release showings in New York theatres, and Educational points out that opinions of the critics make them a known quantity for the theatre. The comedy offering is a Chester, "Four Times Pooled," which was given its original showing at the Rivoli. It was placed on the bill at the Rialto for another week and afterwards billed for a record run over the entire Loew metropolitan circuit. It received 83 days or twelve solid weeks showing on Broadway or in its immediate vicinity.

"The Hope of Adventure," a Robert C. Bruce Scenic, made on his recent trip to Alaska, has an important position on the Rialto bill this month. The Strand last week played two of the pictures that are numbered among the new releases. One of these was "Pigs and Kaya," a Chester-Outing taken on the Samoan Islands and the other "Modern Chester," was given a share of the billing at the Strand. This picture portrays some remarkable riding by a troop of Portuguese cavalrymen in the hills.

The first of the Mermaid Comedies will be seen the week of June 27. This is "A Fresh Start," directed by Jack White, of Sennett comedy and Sunshine fame, featuring "Marvel Rea, 'Kiss Me Carolie," the first of the Christie Comedies to be released by Educational under the new contract, will be in evening theatre for the first time during the week of July 4. Bobby Vernon is the featured actor in this picture, the cast including "Rudy Sampson, Neil Burns, Vera Siedman, the new Follies Girls. The initial 'Torely,' produced by Sheik Master Films, with Johnny Hinze is the red-headed office boy will get its first general showing during the week of July 11.

Tyrad Pictures Changes Title of Feature

The Tyrad Pictures, Inc., has changed the name of "The Scar of Shame," in which Lucille De Tor plays the stellar role, to "Broken Hearts."
TIt for Tat Will Be Hallroom Comedy

The new two-reel Hall Room Boy comedy will be titled "TIt for Tat." Percy and Ferdie become mixed up in a criminal chase with an eye to collecting the reward. The criminal turns out to be the exact double of Percy and the resultant complications lead to many warm and funny arguments. "TIt for Tat," closely follows "Four of a Kind," "Tell Us Ouija," and "Movie Madness."

Stage Presentation of Universal Feature

During the recent National Electric Convention in Los Angeles, a special show was staged for the visitors at Universal City. Several scenes from "The Virgin of Stamboul" were put on with the original cast and original settings.

Exhibitors to Feature "Screen Snapshots"

From reports coming in from various parts of the country there is good indication to believe that many exhibitors are going to feature "Screen Snapshots," the new bi-monthly release in the same manner as they do their five-reel features.

Barthelmess to Be Starred

Griffith Star to Head Own Company; to Work in Griffith Studio

RICHARD BARTHELMESS, whose work in "Broken Blossoms," "Scarlet Days" and the "Idol Dancer" raised him in the ranks of stardom, is to be a star in his own right.

For the Griffith headquarters, however, comes the news that Mr. Barthelmess is not leaving David. "The situation at the Griffith studios at Mamaroneck," says the announcement, "is rather interesting just because it is so unusual in these days of selfish personal advancement at the other fellow's expense. For instance, news comes of the starring ambitions of Mr. Barthelmess, or Mr. Harron, or Miss Lilian Gish, and the idle groups begin to say: 'They're leaving Griffith.' Now, as a matter of fact, these Griffith players who are 'going it on their own' actually are getting nearer to Mr. Griffith than they have been before.

That may sound strange, but a lot of true statements often do.

As an illustration, when Miss Dorothy Gish, following her 15-umph as the Little Disturber in "Hearts of the World," went to Mr. Griffith and told him she had received an offer to head her own company, Mr. Griffith smiled and said: 'All right, I'm for you, and I'll give you all the help I can.'

The Richard Barthelmess productions will be made at the Griffith studio, and are expected to begin immediately following the completion of "Way Down East." The Griffith super-feature in which Mr. Barthelmess will be seen as David Barlett.

Other Griffith players who are soon to head their own companies are Robert Harron and Lilian Gish. Practically all the pictures will be made at the Griffith studios.

Screening of "Restless Sex" Is Postponed

The special private showing of Marion Davies' latest starring feature, "The Restless Sex," a Cosmopolitan Production, which was announced for Wednesday evening, June 4, at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York, has been changed to the following Wednesday, or June 11, at the same time and at the same place.

Reclcraft Sets Release Date for Series

The Reclcraft Pictures Corporation announces June 20th as the date set for the first release of the series of two reel farce comedies in which Milburn Moranti is featured.

The releasing of this series has been held back until there were sufficient releases on hand to assure an uninterrupted program to be released every other week. Distribution will be through the Reclcraft and allied Exchanges covering the entire United States and foreign countries.
Universal has taken a year's lease with an option to extend the lease for five years on a building at the corner of Congress and Jefferson Streets, and the physical handling of all Universal film in the Chicago territory will be handled from that building. The two-story structure is absolutely fireproof and has an extensive air conditioning system, having been erected for a wholesale drug factory which occupied it for some years. It is conventionally located only two blocks west of the river and one block from express offices and railroad depots. The present commodious offices of Universal on the fifteenth floor of the Consumers Building will be retained and Manager Levinson plans an auto service between the Consumers Building and his new film building for the convenience of exhibitors. He also has a private wire installed between his office and the new building. It is reported that Metro and Hallmark also will have their films handled in the Universal Building.

J. J. Doyle of Chicago has acquired patent rights to the theatre signs, manufactured by the Enterprise Sign Company, Inc., and Charles C. Polk Company, and is preparing to push the sale of these signs throughout the country. Hollywood branches of both were run by Mr. Doyle in the Tacoma Building, 5 N. La Salle street, Chicago.

J. R. Kratz, owner of the New Princess Theatre at Monticello, Ill., has appointed W. C. Martin manager and John Helms, which is scheduled to open the first week in June.

Jack Graumont, Chicago manager of Metro, has returned from the convention of his company held in New York last week and reports that he is enthused over the sales plans developed at the convention and the release program which was outlined.

Harry M. Berman, general manager of Universal Pictures exchanges, has returned to New York after a week spent in Chicago conferring with Manager Meade on the problem of the future location of Universal's office and distributing rooms in the Windy City.

Harry Weiss, manager of Superior Screen Service, Inc., and the leading Isaac Walton of the screen industry in this territory, went to Logansport, Indiana, over the long Sunday last and returned with a truck full of fish. Mr. Weiss is planning to put over a contract, there is nothing Harry enjoys more than hooking a lively bass.

Lewis Gasner, Leon Barry and Tom Larson, all of whom were in Chicago for a few hours enroute to Los Angeles, where they will start work on "Kismet," featuring Otis Skinner.

All booking and collection records were broken by the Chicago Pathe exchange during the month of May, according to Manager Asclien who also looks forward to splendid business during June. A large number of new features released during the month just past have loop showings. Extra time bookings on many features were a feature of the month's record.

Chicago and the Mid-West
Covered By L. H. MASON

Eddy Brisbane, owner of Manager Mills of the Crawford Theatre, who recently was convicted of first degree murder, has been sentenced to hang and will pay the extreme penalty on June 18th.

Rayman K. Aikens was elected president of the American Cinema Post 494, at a meeting which was held at the studio at the Rollover Film Manufacturing Company last week. Edmund A. Bertram was chosen adjutant and George Kilgro, sergeant-at-arms. It was decided that the regular monthly meetings would be on the first and third Fridays of each month. Commander Aikens wishes that all Chicago veterans in any way connected with the motion picture industry would make myself of these meeting nights and be present at the Rollover Studio. An intensive membership campaign will be opened with a dance which will be held in the same studio within the next few weeks.

Samuel J. Levin, General Manager for Jockey Line and Schaefer, has left on a motor trip which is expected to be gone several weeks, during which time he will cover New York, Pennsylvania and New England, making all the important large cities. Motoring is a great hobby with Mr. Levin and each year he takes an automobile trip. This year it is some distant section of the United States. Mrs. Levin will accompany him.

O. F. Spal, manager of the Enterprise Optical Company, will be in Cleveland for the Exhibitors' Convention week and will divide his time between a booth which his company will have at the Motion Picture Machine and Accessory Show and the convention hotel. He has arranged for the use of one of his projectors for the projection of Independent Producers pre-release pictures at the show.

Another Chicago accessory man who will be in Cleveland during the week is Carl Fulton. The products of the E. E. Fulton Company will be exhibited by Apar in the Argus booth and Dan Barton of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company also will be in Cleveland and will be prepared to demonstrate Barton Pipe organs and Barolos to interested exhibitors. Mr. Barton will be accompanied by a staff of expert organists.

Lee Herz of Silvex is back in Chicago from New York with four new feature pictures which he purchased from Ayone in the East. Mr. Herz also has deals pending which will add several more good pictures to the Silvex list. The four just purchased are "Blind Love," featuring Lucy Cotton, which has received wonderful favorable criticisms from the trade press and three Rex Ray five-reeler features, the first to be released being "The Unknown Ranger."

Richard Kipling, who has been in Chicago for the past two weeks conferring with Eddy Eckels over the recently formed Independent Films Association, has left for Los Angeles by way of Minneapolis and Duluth and plans to open offices for the new association in Los Angeles at once, as well as get production started on a series of feature pictures which he plans to distribute through Independent Films Association.

Announcement was made during the week that Tom Bourke, for several years connected with Chicago's largest daily newspaper, has been appointed general publicity representative for Ascher Brothers, owners of the largest string of motion picture theaters in the West.

Mr. Bourke took active charge last Monday. His first work will be to develop the publicity for the opening of the new Ascher houses in Dayton, Peoria and Cincinnati. A special staff will be appointed to work under the direction of Mr. Bourke, who was at one time drama editor of the Chicago American and was on the staff of the Tribune and one of the first daily newspapers to devote space to the exploitation of motion pictures.

C. A. Meade, sales manager of C. B. Price Company, Inc., was in Chicago this week, where he screened the new picture, "His Pajama Gift." During his trip through the Middle West he also visited Detroit, Cleveland, Milwaukee and Pittsburgh.

Chicago schools will utilize the movies in instruction work next year, according to S. E. Davis, president of the Board of Education, who expects attendance to grow accordingly. Among the schools which will use the educational films will be those showing the work of scientists, astronomers, and geologists.

"The Woman He Chose," the Swedish Bioscope production being put out for the right market by the Mickey Film Company, has made a big booking record in Chicago in more than one hundred and ten theatres already having it, according to President Ludwig Schindler of the Mickey Company.

Andreas Dippel's experiment in combining Grand Opera and movies has not proved the success that the exhibitors expected and the big auditorium will be dark this week. Mr. Companer is arranging, however, to resume on June 6th and hopes to put on the same sort of a show over at a two dollar rate for reserved seats, although during the first week of its performance, he charged one dollar. His reason is that the people are not sufficiently educated in music to be tuned by a good picture to sit through an opera, but that the people accustomed to opera will be willing to pay the higher rate and attend.

ROLIN ONE REEL COMEDIES

with "Snub" Pollard and the funny little darky, "Sammy."

"Our Visit with the "Varnished"—Pathe
Few single reel comedies have been produced on an elaborate scale as this unit. The settings and costumes throughout are unusually good and the entire effect a very satisfactory offering. It opens with a scene entirely new to the screen. The Palace of a Turkish sultan, where a great wedding is in progress. The couple is placed in the center of a square with the Sultan in the middle, and all the characters of the story are present. The Sultan is surrounded by his attendants, and the groom is being led in by the bride. The picture is highly amusing, and is sure to be a hit in every quarter of the world.

"Drink Henry"—Pathe
Prohibition has been used as a source of humor in more than one comedy, but the type of thing in this one has been done so as to result in gagging and not in the material need for gagging. Smith Pollard, in his usual style, does the work here, and the result is a hit. The routine is carried out with great success, and the whole thing is worth seeing.

Max Linder in "The Little Cafe"

A Feature Comedy Adapted From The Broadway Stage - Success By Tristan Bernard Chorus of impatient men patrons; "Boy, a little service please!
Unspoken comment of the women; "Isn't he cute!"
Proprietor of the Cafe; "I hope he chokes before he ruins me!"
The Girl aloud; "Get busy, you loafer!"
(Her unspoken thought); "He's adorable!"
Presenting the only Linder in a story of chortles and roars; his role that of a millionaire waiter who cannot quit his job, but who endeavors to work by day and play by night, with the inevitable complications.
A Pathé Serial

THE THIRD EYE

with Warner Oland and Eileen Percy

Written by H. H. Van Loan

Produced by ASTRA
Watch Mr. Oland from episode to episode as he spins his plots, and concocts his villainies; see how sinister, forbidding and dangerous he appears. So able is his acting that no one can wonder at his reputation of being the best “villain” of the screen.

And Miss Percy; beautiful, athletic and daring, she is the persecuted heroine as your audiences want her. She is a charming foil to Mr. Oland.

Together they star in a serial of countless surprises and thrills, written by an expert and produced by serial experts. “The Third Eye” belongs on your screen!
The second of Mr. McManus laugh provokers to be brought to the screen and even better than the first. From the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the northern border to the Gulf men, women and children who have roared at the newspaper comics have flocked to see "Jiggs" and "Maggie" in real life. Exhibitors report these comedies to be marvelous business bringers. They are playing the best houses everywhere. See them, you'll see the reason.
Exploit Short Subjects Urges C. C. Burr

That exhibitors all over the country are passing up big opportunities by not properly exploiting their short subjects is the contention of C. C. Burr, president of Master Films, Inc., who are producing "Torchy" comedies. "A short subject," says Mr. Burr, "if it is properly exploited, will outdraw the average feature."

"A few live exhibitors who have sensed the value of meritorious two-reelers have been successful," says Mr. Burr, "but have not been backward in exploiting them, with the result that the success of the business has also been productive of wider box-office returns. Hugo Reisenfeld has featured the Shacketleton "Bottom of the World" pictures, first at his Rivoli and Rialto theatres in New York for two weeks and now at the Criterion, with splendid results. The novelty and quality of the subject gave them general interest and word of mouth advertising which is life to the picture theatre."

"Wonder Man" Author Is Revealed

Not until the picture was projected on the screen in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor in New York was the identity of the author of George Carpenter's first American starring vehicle, "The Wonder Man," was written by Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman.

Robertson-Cole, producers of the mystery drama, the comedy, "The Wonder Man," was kept the identity of the, it was written, "to prevent all pre-ar-arrangement, with Dr. Goodman. It was agreed at the time Dr. Goodman's name would be dropped until the personnel of the story should be kept secret until the first presentation of the picture.

D. Clarke on Screen in Two Broadway Houses

The season's record for Broadway appearances of pictures is being claimed for Donald Clarke, former actor-managing under the Belmont banner. Mr. Clarke is having a success of two subjects in two different Broadway shows for two successive weeks.

In "The Wonder Man," the George Carpenter production being shown in the Grand Ballroom of the Hotel Astor, Mr. Clarke plays the role of Judge Robert E. Stover, and at the Strand theatre, Mr. Clarke appeared in "The Man Who Lost Himself."

Nelson and J. F. Polan Join Ince Forces

Jack Nelson, who joined the Thomas H. Ince forces several months ago as director of the Douglas MacLean company, has been placed under a long-term contract to continue the direction of MacLean in his new role of a star in Ince's producions. Smith Polan, who directed his signature to a contract which calls for his exclusive services for a long period of time.

Wm. Fox Names June Releases

DRAMATIC offerings predominate in the schedule of releases listed by Fox Film Corporation for June. Along with the regular quota of Sunshine comedies and Merrie Melodies Animated Cartoons, William Fox, president of the company, has arranged to present five of his stars in many features during the next month.

Notable among these features is a new William Farnum picture, "Two Towns Troublemakers," the original story of which was written by the pen of Jackson Gregory. It is said to be a big picture with a big cast. Farnum, as John Fry, the Farnum photographer, again has developed some new angles, working with Mr. Edward.

The Tom Mix number on the Fox schedule is the first of the Tom Mix series written for this star by H. H. VanLoan, the noted short story writer who has come specifically to Fox as author for many successful screen entertainments. "Three Gold Coins" is the title.

The cast supporting Tom Mix ranks with those found in all Mix pictures and includes Margaret Loomis as leading woman, Frank Whitto, Bert Hardman, and Margaret Collyer, Sylvia Jocelyn, Bonnie Hill, Sid Jordan, Wall Roberts, and Frank Weed. The adaptation is the work of Alvino L. Netz.

Wm. Welliver, leading woman for "Back JACK Jones in Fox features"

In "White Lies," the Gladys Brockwell vehicle which comes to the first run houses in June, this star has a role in which she is called upon to demonstrate her dramatic ability as she has in no other Fox production for some time. The play is based on the novel by Charles Beadle, and in it are many intensely serious scenes between Miss Brockwell and her leading man, William Scott.

"White Lies" was directed by Edward J. LeSaint from the scenario by Charles Wilson. In addition to the leading man, William Scott, Mr. Fox has given his emotional star ideal support consisting of Josephine Crowell, Evans Kirk, L. M. Shera, Charles K. French, Howard Scott, and Lake Warren. The picture release starring William Russell is a version of Riddick's "Suffering Creek," one of the most successful of this noted author's works. In the picture with Russell are Louise Louisy, leading woman; T. A. Warren,Mill Byron, Henry J. Hebert and Joe Ray. The direction was by Scott Dunlap and the photography by Clyde DeVittm.

The second production of Vivian Rich as a Fox star is titled "A World of Polly" and both story and screenplay are by Charles Farnum. An unusual feature, about this picture is the fact that the cast includes four principals and six supporting actresses. The story is that of a cute and a faithful Ireab, the star. These four are Aaron Edwards as lead; Augustus Pills, long known to theatre-goers and followers of stock in various parts of the country, R. M. McCul- lough, and Daisy Robinson. These three are scheduled for June, Fox offers four rapid-fire Sunshine Comedies—"Mookey Business," "Oh, What a Knight!" "The Little Sneeze," and "His Artful Sneeze."

The Bud Fisher contributions for the month, in Animated Cartoons, are four funny fellows, Mutt and Jeff, include four breezy black-and-white. They are: "The Toy Maker," "The Tangos Dancers," "One Round Jeff," and "A Trip to Mars."

D. Clarke on Screen in Two Broadway Houses

The season's record for Broadway appearances of pictures is being claimed for Donald Clarke, former actor-managing under the Belmont banner. Mr. Clarke is having a success of two subjects in two different Broadway shows for two successive weeks.

In "The Wonder Man," the George Carpenter production being shown in the Grand Ballroom of the Hotel Astor, Mr. Clarke plays the role of Judge Robert E. Stover, and at the Strand theatre, Mr. Clarke appeared in "The Man Who Lost Himself."

Forms A New Releasing Policy

EDUCATIONAL Films Corporation announces that hereafter it will pursue a policy of issuing no more than one "Special" or "Outside of Series" feature in any one week, and these will be of a type unique in the industry. The company feels that it has a strong enough line of "Specials" to sustain interest in them, but that, in order to maintain interest, they must be of an unusual type. The company will issue one "Special" per week, and these will be of a type unique in the industry. The company feels that it has a strong enough line of "Specials" to sustain interest in them, but that, in order to maintain interest, they must be of a type unique in the industry. The company will issue one "Special" per week, and these will be of a type unique in the industry.

"Sex" Is Novelized for Newspapers

More than 800 newspaper editors throughout the country are now in receipt of a seven chapter novelization of "Sex," Louise Glaser's most recent J. Parker Read production. And according to claims of the Atlantic, "Sex" is a merchandising machine, and the New York Mirror will run the story under two new terms from the company. It is expected to be a great aid to the exhibitor in the exploitation of "Sex."

Exhibitors See Latest Ince Production

A private showing of Thomas H. Ince's latest special production, "Homegrown Guns," delighted several of the Detroit film dealers who were the guests of Producer Ince this week. Among those present were Sid Grauman, Otto Lyttle and Jes- see De Roe.
Sennett Feature to be Released June 15

Following private screenings at Pasadena, advice from Sol Lesser and J. P. McGowan, Mack Sennett’s initial special feature attraction to be distributed by First National Executive, is the statement that June 15th has been set as a national release day.

Among the members of the cast, Ben Turpin and Colleen Moore stand out prominently. The Sennett beauties have a prominent place in the production, the nature of which takes in almost everything.

“The Vanishing Dagger” Released Shortly

Universal’s long heralded policy of making serials that are high class adventure and drama, in lieu of the usual serial lodge-podge of torture chambers and crashing trains, will have its initial try-out next few days, when Eddie Polo’s internal serial, “The Vanishing Dagger,” is released.

Polo and his party crossed the Atlantic last summer in order to film scenes in England, Scotland and Wales, and the continent of Europe. Three months were passed abroad. Many thousand feet of film were taken showing the actors in the several scenes that make up the plot in the actual settings called for in the scenario.

Eileen Percy at Work on Another for Fox

Word has reached the executive offices of Fox Film Corporation in New York that Eileen Percy, who has been made a full-fledged star by William Fox, has begun work upon her second stellar production under that banner. Several personal stories and novels have already been purchased by the producer for use by Miss Percy, and the selection of the first to be released goes to the star herself. She chose F. Scott Fitzgerald’s “Myra Meets Her Family.”

Ince’s Studio Tests Attract 2,000

The complimentary motion picture tests and sneak previews, staged by Thomas H. Ince as an exploitation feature for Hobart Bosworth’s “Below the Surface,” have attracted more than two thousand ambitious men, women and children to the Ince lot recently. The test drive was staged in conjunction with Sid Grauman of the Los Angeles Record.

Bosworth Completes “Bucko MacAllister”

The Hobart Bosworth company returned to San Francisco this week to complete the “ship-burning” scene that was started when the company were in the Bay City a few weeks ago. These scenes will complete Bosworth’s Read production, “Bucko MacAllister.”

Ray Signs with Rothacker

The Prints of Star’s First National Pictures to Be Done by Rothacker

Charles Ray has just completed arrangements in Los Angeles for the services of Rothacker Printing in the forthcoming First National series. Mr. Ray, in signing with the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, issued a statement to the film concern ascertaining that his greatest productions were to be Rothacker printed, and declaring that the importance of this deal of production could not be underestimated.

The first of Mr. Ray’s productions to be printed in the Rothacker laboratories will be the serialization of “Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway,” the well known G. M. Cooper comedy-drama. As the initial First National attraction to be presented by Arthur S. Kane, in which Mr. Ray makes his bow as an independent star, every detail of production is being carefully considered, it is stated, and the selection of the Rothacker camera for printing reflects the faith which the star and his sponsors have in the standard of work done by the Chicago concern.

In a statement to the Rothacker company Mr. Ray makes plain his estimate of the important place which film-printing shops will occupy in the process of photoplay production. According to the First National star, it has frequently been the misfortune of stars and directors to see particularly effective work into which they had put much money destroyed in the final showing by mediocre print work. Upon the ultimate appearance of a picture play on the screen everything depends, and therefore the priming of a film should be considered one of the greatest concerns of every First National star.

S. Hayakawa Gone West

To Resume Work for Robertson-Cole; Makes Statement of Plans

AFTER a fortnight’s sojourn in New York City, Sessue Hayakawa, the incomparable star, has returned to California to resume work for Robertson-Cole under his new contract with that organization. Before leaving for the Coast, Mr. Hayakawa issued the following statement:

While the pictures which are now being released are excellent attractions, and represent a maximum of entertainment for the time and money invested, the ones just ahead will be better, for the natural reason that I will have both greater time and means to put into them. Already we have chosen out first picture, and I will start work on it immediately upon my arrival on the Coast.

“The picture and the others of the new series, will have strong dramatic stories, and the most colorful artistic atmosphere obtainable. Beyond these elements we will stress another factor, which is the spiritual. By this I don’t mean anything heavy, or psychological, but a pervading spiritual tone, which goes home to the brain as well as the emotions.

“If you think it over, you will find that the photoplay which has nothing behind it but thrills, and rapid-fire action—such as many of our passing successes have—makes its appeal only to the emotions. We thrill for the moment, and then forget. Let me show you how differently the great success, which lives with everyone.

“The latter sort of picture—the kind you never forget—has beyond its action, its love interest, its drama, a spiritual quality that might essay an intellectual—tone which appeals to the mind. It car- ried tone. It impresses in an indeeble manner. It is greater than the emotions, appealing direct to the spirit. That is what we know we are going to be able to do under the new contract which provides for at least six months for each picture, and an unlimited financial support.”

Terriss Will Complete Picture in East

After three months on the Coast, where he has been directing the big Vitagraph special, "Trumpet Blazing," Tom Terriss is on his way East to complete a large company play to be the final scenes for this picture for New York City and along the Hudson. This picture, as stated by Vitagraph that an expenditure of $200,000 had already been realized on this production.

Marguerite De La Motte has the principal role. The male lead is Wallace MacDonald, Joseph Swickard, Hallam Cook, Percy Herbert, and numerous other well known players make up the supporting cast.

Realart Executives Are Presented with Gifts

The managers’ dinner at the Hotel Astor, New York, which closed the exploit of the Realart field force, was marked by the presentation to Morris Kohn, president of the Realart Pictures Corporation, of a presentation gift, and to John S. Woody, general manager, of a valuable platinum and pearl linked platinum chain. The presentations were made by Ben F. Simpson, Realart’s San Francisco manager, and half of the assembled managers.

Mr. Kohn in his response thanked the firm not only for the gift but especially for the spirit of fraternity that prompted it. Mr. Woody expressed his gratitude for the rare mark of appreciation conferred on him and declared that the way the managers had met his approaches of good fellowship had fairly staggered him. Parchments, personally signed by the donors, accompanied each one of the gifts.

Christie Names Cast of “So Long Letty”

Al Christie has secured Grace Darmond to play the title role of “Letty” in the production “So Long, Letty,” the filming of which will begin at the Christie studio in Hollywood.

Another big name which has just been snapped up for the cast is of T. Roy Barnes, Walter Hiers, who has been secured through the courtesy of Charles Eyton and Frank Gar- baut, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. The other important girl part in “So Long Letty” is to be played by Colleen Moore who is under contract with the Christie company for a long period of time.

“Miss Hobbs” Opens at Sid Grauman House

With a list that showed 3,500 bookings for the first month in houses in the United States, “Miss Hobbs,” the initial production in which Realart’s recently launched star, Miss Hobbs, was given an enthusiastic premiere at Sid Grauman’s theatre in Los Angeles, announces Realart Pictures Corporation.

Sid Grauman wired J. S. Woody, Realart’s general manager, that “Miss Hobbs” was “a perfect production and superior to anything of a similar-theme” and that “its national premier was gratifying in the extreme.”

Exploitation Campaign for “Sex” Feature

F. B. Warren, general manager of the Associated Producers and formerly head of H. W. Hodkinson Corporation, and Sid Schaefer, a representative of the sales department of Parker-Read, Jr., Productions, have mapped out an exploitation campaign for Mr. Read’s production, “Sex.”

An announcement from the Read offices at Culer City. Great stress has been placed upon the opening of the picture, it is declared. Mr. Warren has supervised the distribution of the paper from the Hodkinson office. Sid Grauman has arranged number of tie-ups.

Leslie King Champions Cause of Character—Actor on Screen

Record Duplicated by "The River's End"

The statement first started at the New York Strand in connection with Marshall Neilan's initial independent production, "The River's End," that this picture proved the biggest attraction in the history of this theatre has again been duplicated by the Empire theatre, Portland, Me., it is stated, in a telegram from Manager Boucher of that house. After the usual run of three days, it was extended another day. The business of the fourth day was so great that Manager Boucher again extended the booking two more days.

Mr. Boucher's telegram to the Neilan company read as follows: "The River's End proved a most successful week's run of any picture in the history of our house. Truly great production. You have a real winner. Congratulations."

Universal Announces Tsuru Aoki Release

Universal announces as a special attraction the release of "The Tokyo Siren," with Tsuru Aoki (Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa). June 14th. Norman Dawn directed this production, which is a comedy-drama of modern times with a touch of picturesque scenery including old Japanese ruins and the religions ceremonies of the Buddhist worshipers. The picture is based on Gwenviden Logan's story "Sayona."

Percival Forms Company in New Jersey

Earnest P. Percival, formerly connected with the Lubin company, has opened his own studios in Gloucester City, N. J., to specialize in the production of two reel comedies and a series of features. The first comedy will be entitled "Their Troubled Honeymoon." Mr. Percival is president of the new company; Charles P. Thompson, vice-president and Henry A. Miller, secretary and treasurer.

Artist Will Be a Director

Pentrhyn Stanlaws Signs Contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

Although at the height of his fame as a painter and illustrator, Pentrhyn Stanlaws, creator of the famous Pentrhyn Stanlaws girls for magazine covers, and author of several successful books, has given up painting and in the future will devote himself entirely to movie pictures, it was announced yesterday by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Stanlaws, who has signed a long term contract to give all his time to Paramount Pictures, will spend the next twelve months at this studio making pictures. Players-Lasky's own studio to make the motion picture art to become a writer and director of Paramount Pictures. In discussing this it is Mr. Stanlaw's purpose to apply his knowledge of drama and artistic effects to the staging of photographs that will combine dramatic story with artistic charm.

The engagement of Mr. Stanlaws, Mr. Lasky said, was in line with his policy of obtaining the services of noted writers and artists to work directly for Paramount Pictures. Mr. Stanlaws' decision to abandon painting in favor of motion pictures is said to be due to his belief that the production of beautiful motion pictures is more worth than the painting of "girls' head.

"The motion picture, because it is a picture of moving things," said Mr. Stanlaws, "gives an artist under opportunities than oil or water color or pen and ink drawings. With the immense world wide audience which the motion picture affords I do not think an artist or a writer can afford to ignore this great artistic force. "I have always been a student of the drama and, therefore, am intensely interested in this new great dramatic medium."

Adolph Zukor's Annual Statement

"It has always been my custom at this time of the year to make a statement regarding the place and policy of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the season to come. I have endeavored to place before exhibitors facts upon which they could base a fair estimate as to what our organization had to offer them, and I have striven to make clear to them the reasons why they could depend upon Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a dependable source of supply of quality pictures in quantity. My statement for this year is as follows:

ADOLPH ZUKOR.

What Jesse L. Lasky Has to Say

"The motion picture has reached a state that demands organization—the big, intricate, and specialized organization, which alone is capable of producing the type of photographs that please the public and are successful at the box-office. Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has it because the men at the head of this corporation long ago had the vision to see that there had to be a combination of the whole world demand that producers produce photographs and not merely manufacturer products. The production department of the famous Players-Lasky Corporation did not spring into being overnight; it is the fruition of years of patient toil, eternal vigilance, alertness to the constant growth of the motion picture art, and the combined efforts of a corps of men and women who have blended the best talent and genius of the new art with a fine loyalty to an ideal. Only such an organization, backed by resources which place every possible facility and aid in the hands of directors and stars, is capable of producing the newer and finer type of picture which season now closing has so conclusively shown to be what the public wants.

"Only such an organization could have ready—in exchanges to be shown to exhibitors—the really notable list of photographs which we now have on hand for the coming season. It is by means of this organization that we have been able to produce twenty-five pictures four months in advance of the opening of the season, September 1.

"The best proposition which the production department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation can make for the next year is the imagination of the men who started this art. The new season will see as producing pictures in Hollywood, in the new $2,000,000 studio in Long Island City, in our new studio in London, and in our new studio to be built in Bombay, India. Every one of these studios is of such magnitude and is so well equipped as to afford the greatest possible resources for directors and artists. The new Eastern studio in London, for instance, will allow eight companies to work on its stages at the same time. In the London studio only big special productions will be made, with English casts in English settings. This will bring a new, and utterly distinctive note to the screens of America. But the most far-reaching studio development of the coming season will be the production of pictures in our new studio in Bombay, according as it does the production of photographs in a picturesque land that is a virgin territory to the motion picture director.

"This is what I mean by production organization. This is what I mean when I say that successful photographs cannot be made on promises and publicity. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's production organization, like its distri- buting system, is world-wide. It has the resources and the facilities to bring to the screens of American exhibitors the very best photographs that can be produced anywhere in the world; and in the season of 1920-21 it is our intention to use this vast production organization to the utmost of its powers, to the end that exhibitors will be able to promise their patrons the very best in motion picture art."

"Two a Week; One Hundred and Four a Year"

MORE than one hundred features will be released during the forthcoming season, according to an announcement of Al Lichtman, general manager of the Department of Distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release in the season of 1920-1921," says Mr. Lichtman, "at least 184 feature productions at the rate of two each week, beginning September 5.

Forty per cent of these negatives are now completed. Before July 1 more than a hundred productions will be released starting of the best pictures for his patrons."

An enormous amount of capital is tied up in these feature pictures, but Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is ready to forge into the market this year with a consistent and large force.

"Success can come to exhibitors, distributor and producer only if they consistently present pictures, intelligently presented and properly exploited and one of the important necessities is plenty of time for the preparation of everything that goes into the making of a successful showing. Our distribution department is taking all the time needed for making perfect pictures and now under the new plan we are giving the exhibitor, in turn, the advantage immediately after its presentation with the careful attention that is due them.

"The producing organization that has put its finger on the exhibitor of Paramount Pictures the dominating position in his community is the organization that has already completed pictures that are as fine, perhaps even finer, than the books that have ever been delivered to exhibitors from our studio." We shall add exhibitors to judge completed production, not promised productions, and shall reserve their judgment and by that of the great public that Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, through the exchange system has so well served in the past.

New Studios Increase Facilities

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, today stands at the threshold of a new era in film production. With the opening of its new $200,000 studio in London, England, the completion of its elaborate studio in London, the development of large studios and laboratories in Bombay, India, and the two studios in Hollywood, the West Coast plant in Hollywood, the corporation finds itself in possession of a group of producing plants of a quality and a diversity of appeal never before developed by any one company.

Unique among structures of its kind, the new Famous Players plant in Long Island City, which will be especially for production work, will be an elaborate electric plant, which will allow 7,000 volts, alternating current, which can be received from the Central station.

A major exception to the new structure, however, is the stage, which will be a replica of the famous century-old structure. The stage, designed to supply 10,000 amperes to the main studio at present, will be increased to 15,000 amperes. In this feeder system alone, 20,000 pounds of copper are required. This system will feed ten overhead remote switchboards, each of which can be controlled by the camera man or director from any point on the studio floor.

The main studio floor in the new building measures 130 by 228 feet. A new stage which does away with the necessity of supports, leaving the entire space clear for the construction of sets. Grouped about this floor are the departments actually concerned in the making of the picture. Here is located the Art and Decoration Department.

A separate to the Art and Decoration Department is the carpenters shop and the assembling room, and the stage, the stage is the stage begun before he books it and to allow him his sufficient time to prepare an exploitation campaign and a supporting program based upon personal knowledge of the features he is going to give his public.

"All productions throughout the year will be shown to exhibitors several months before they are released."

"Success can come to exhibitors distribute and producer only if they consistently present pictures, intelligently presented and properly exploited and one of the important necessary is plenty of time for the preparation of everything that goes into the making of a successful showing. Our distribution department is taking all the time needed for making perfect pictures and now under the new plan we are giving the exhibitor, in turn, the advantage immediately after its presentation with the careful attention that is due them.

We shall add exhibitors to judge completed production, not promised productions, and shall reserve their judgment and by that of the great public that Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, through the exchange system has so well served in the past.

"Paramount" Universally Known

National Advertising Stands Approved

E. LYN M. SIMONS, of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, writes the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters as follows:

"I liked your advertisement, "The Luxury of Being Certain," so well that I could not help writing that these advertisements you are preparing in your national advertising are bringing me lots of money. When your first ads began to appear I saw the advantage I would hold over any future competitors if my theatre were known in Chicago as the home of Paramount screen pictures."

"Then, after six years it has been constantly before the public, it has been seen across the length and breadth of the United States in the most interesting, the most carefully planned, the most widespread and the most frequently conducted in the interest of the screen.

"Ask any person who reads what Paramount is. The name of that persons out of every ten will be, "The pictures that are advertised in motion pictures in the film industry pronounced the most vicious trash of money. But these men lack the vision which the sponsors of Paramount Pictures have. The thousands of dollars were expended in the first two years. Rival producers have declared that the plan never would succeed because it carried no direct appeal to the exhibitors. But Famous Players-Lasky has kept on, each year increasing its appropriation and increasing its space in the national magazines, building up from week to week, and this year, with a year's worth of advertising and an increase of three hundred dollars, it has made the hallmark of the best in motion pictures.

"For recognition of the value of the Paramount, its enhancement through the national advertising is rapidly becoming a matter of record. Evidence of this recognition is constantly being brought by letters to the attention of Famous Players-Lasky executives. Within the past thirty days alone a deluge has been received, unsolicited, to the home office.

"An approximate circulation of 50,000, with readers conservatively estimated at 30,000,000 has been reached at recent intervals throughout the past year by the Famous Players-Lasky national advertising. Including the Saturday Evening Post, Ladies' Home Journal, Country Gentleman, Victoria Review, Woman's Home Companion, Collier's, Christian Herald, American Magazine, Red Book, Motion Picture Classic, Photoplay, Picture-Play, Motion Picture Classic, Examiners of Film Fun, Photoplay World, Photoplay Journal, Theater, Vanity Fair, the Boy's Magazine, St. Nicholas, Boys' Life, John Boy and Lone Scout, the list of publications is a truly imposing one. All advertising in all magazines is of full page dimensions.

"Implementing this space, special features raised by the individual pictures have been run in those magazines in which the story of the picture appeared, as, for instance, "The Wreck of the Mary DeGeyter" by Hall Caine, in "The Mirror," "The Mighty Mo," by Frank L. Packard, in "Munsey's," "The Dark Star," by Robert W. Chambers, in "Cosmopolitan," "The Dark Mirror," in "McCall's," etc., Moreover, at various specialized circulation has been gained for individual productions in special utilization of so-called class publications.

Past Year's Record Reviewed

THE year 1919-20 has been the biggest in Famous Players-Lasky history in many ways, but probably the outstanding feature has been the number of big productions released and the box-office successes scored by them wherever they have been shown. In fact, so successful has this policy of "big pictures" proved that it has been decided to concentrate more and more on the production and distribution of features of this character.

To the month of September furnished an indication of what other exhibitors might expect as the result of the adoption of the big picture policy. The first two releases were "The Witness for the Defense," and "The Valley of the Giants," both winners. After careful elaboration, the average feature hitherto characterized as a special feature came George Loethold Tuck's "The Impostor." It was immediately pronounced by many critics the finest photoplay ever made. Following were conspicuously successful pre-releases showings at the George M. Cohan, Rivoli and Broadway Theatres in New York, the production swept the country off its feet, setting up in a few months a gross box-office record which even the most optimistic of Famous Players-Lasky executives had scarcely hoped for.

October offered, among other big attractions, Maurice Tourneur's "The Life Line," and the Homberg feature, "The Grim Game," with its sensational airplane collision, a feature of the picture which packed houses wherever it went. Then in November came Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female," designed to smash attendance records in hundreds of houses and to duplicate if not surpass the success of "The Hunchback." It was Teresa Wright, the leading lady, who really did the trick, and her performance has been commented on by critics and the public alike, and has been witnessed by the fact that the picture netted a hundred thousand dollars in the first two weeks, and has grossed over a million since its release.

December brought the "Incident at Russian Hill," starring Hobart Bosworth, directed by one of the most famous directors in the business, and largely desired by fans in the capacity as a money winner.

January, February, March, proved to be a season of tremendous production and distribution, and was brought through the Robert Louis Stevenson masterpieces, "Treasure Island," and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," the former a Maurice Tourneur production, and the latter from the John Barrymore the vehicle for his greatest dramatic triumph on either stage or screen, said, "Famous Players-Lasky's." The month saw the release of "The Toll Gate," William S. Hart's first independent production for the company, lauded by the critics and the public alike, and made its mark in the trade.

Cecil B. Paramount Stars Who Add Brilliance to the Screen

Stars Who Add Lustre to the Paramount Banner
DeMille and Hart Plans Announced

WITH the signing of his latest five-year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Cecil B. DeMille, and his productions become an assured part of Paramount Pictures for the forthcoming half-decade.

"Cecil B. DeMille stands today at the pinnacle of motion picture production success," says the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Consistent success resulting in consistent success has been the motto of his career and will continue to be the working slogan of his future activities."

"During the past two years, Mr. DeMille has given to the screen some of the most powerful photodramas ever presented to the public. Such tremendous successes as 'Old Wives For New,' 'For Better, For Worse,' 'Male and Female,' and 'Why Change Your Wife?' have been universally recognized as the greatest screen achievements of that period."

"No less notable triumphs of the past include 'Joan the Woman,' 'The Cheat,' 'The Little American,' 'The Whispering Chorus,' 'The Woman God Forgot,' 'Carmen,' 'Tell I Come Back to You,' and a host of others equally well and favorably known."

"Successful as his past efforts have been, Mr. DeMille's plans for the future promise even greater achievements. At the head of the list of these is his forthcoming production 'Something to Think About,' heralded by those who have seen it in the making as the greatest of his success. It is a photoplay destined to appeal to the hearts of millions of spectators with a lesson that is both wholesome and timely."

"Notable casts are taken for granted now-a-days in Cecil B. DeMille Productions, and 'Something to Think About' is a striking example of quality in this respect. Elliott Dexter, Gloria Swanson, Theodore Roberts, Monte Blue, Chire MacDowell, Mickey Moore, Theodore Kosloff, Julia Faye and other notables are numbered in the role of the cast."

"Although it is impossible to name the future productions of the famous producer, Mr. DeMille has secured a number of stories for serialization. The stories in question are from the pens of some of the best known American writers, including Salisbury Field, author of 'Twin Beds' and 'Wedding Bells,' Hester Turnbull, Jennie Macpherson and others. He is also negotiating for the work of a famous British author whose name cannot be divulged, but whose works are known and appreciated by millions of English speaking readers."

"Wide variety of theme is promised in all of these productions. Mr. DeMille has definitely abandoned the 'series' plan of which 'Old Wives For New,' 'Don't Change Your Husband,' and 'Don't Change Your Wife' form an illustration. In the future he plans to alternate, using stories of striking contrast in succession."

"No announcement regarding probable casts is possible at this time beyond the fact that a new access is shortly to make her formal entry under the Cecil B. DeMille production schedule."

"Approximately four special productions a year will be made, following the established Cecil B. DeMille schedule in this respect. This number is variable, it is understood, but the director-general does not expect to exceed that number."

The announcement of William Hart, another prominent producing factor of the Paramount-Artcraft group, is also discussed in detail by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The first of William S. Hart's personal productions for Paramount release, 'The Toll Gate,' has already established in the minds of the public and the exhibitors the high quality of the pictures the Western star and producer has planned for his output," says the Famous Players-Lasky statement. "'Sand,' the second of the nine great photodramas of Western life which Mr. Hart will make for Famous Players-Lasky, is a worthy successor to 'The Toll Gate' and the third of the list, 'The Cradle of Courage,' though different in theme considerably, is declared to be one of the most powerful screen plays ever enacted."

"A fourth picture is completed but not yet titled, and the fifth is now in production. This leaves four more to be made according to present plans."

"Around his production activities, William S. Hart has built up an organization of exceptional strength. The roster is as follows: E. E. Allen, manager; Lambert Hilley, director, who also collaborates with Mr. Hart in many of the stories filmed; Joe August, A. S. C., head cameraman; Dwight Warren, second cameraman; Cal. Hofner, technical director; LeRoy Stone, film editor; Bennett Misson, screen editor; Paul Conlon, press representative and William Corran, secretary."

"Mr. Hart chooses his casts from among the pick of the screen players, and has been singularly successful in selecting types that are perfectly fitted to the roles. A leading woman, Eva Novak, sister of Jane Novak, appears in fourth and fifth productions made under the new schedule."

"In 'The Toll Gate,' Anna Nilsson, the lovely Scandinavian actress, appeared to advantage as leading woman; in 'Sand,' Mabel Normand, beautiful and talented, and Ada Little, always a favorite, is seen in the same capacity in 'The Cradle of Courage.'"

"It is interesting to note that several of the coming pictures are from original stories by William S. Hart and Lambert Hilley, who collaborated on 'The Toll Gate' successfully."

"Mr. Hart in speaking of his association with Famous Players-Lasky said: 'There is little to add to what I have frequently said in regard to my associations with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and my own work in the production of photodramas. The best evidence of my feelings toward the organization is that when I signed the contract to make nine special pictures for Paramount I was besieged with offers and had money alone been the object of my endeavors, I might have made even more profitable connections.'"
Three Exchanges Opened During Year

WITHIN the past year the Famous-Players-Lasky Department of Distribution, under the direction of Cecil B. DeMille, its general manager, has opened three new branch exchanges, the better to handle the rapidly increasing volume of business, and give even better and quicker service to Paramount exhibitors than ever before. These new exchanges are located at Charlotte, N. C.; Oklahoma City, Okla.; and Albany, N. Y. Mr. Mohr is in immediate contemptuation at Indianapolis, Ind., and it will be opened for business just as soon as a suitable location in that city can be obtained. This will make a total of thirty branch offices in the United States, splendidly manned and equipped for the rapid and efficient distribution of Paramount pictures and the accessories which are the usual stock in trade of the film exchange.

In addition to these new offices in this country, there was organized during the year in Canada a new Canadian distributing organization known as Famous Lasky Film Services, Limited, W. A. Weeks as general manager and W. A. Boch as assistant general manager. This company is a branch of the new organization, which is directly connected with the Famous-Players-Lasky Distribution Department. This organization is under the jurisdiction of Mr. Liehtman, and is in Toronto, with branch offices in Montreal, St. John, N. B., Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

The territory served by the new Oklahoma City Exchange embraces all of the State of Oklahoma except the northern and eastern part; the Northwestern portion of the State of Arkansas and the Panhandle of Texas. A large number of the larger cities of this territory which has a total white population of nearly two million people are served.

The Charlotte territory contains a white population of 1,250,000 and embraces all the State of North Carolina, a big share of South Carolina and the southeastern section of Tennessee. Both of these exchanges are in the Southern District, the executive offices of which are in Atlanta. Leslie Wilkes is the manager of the Oklahoma City branch and David Prince is in charge at Charlotte.

The Albany office, just recently opened, is located at 33 Orange street in the Capitol City and serves a large section of Eastern New York. With the opening of the New York and Buffalo branches, the manager of the new office is Joseph Schellman, who was connected for a long time with the New York Exchange.

The Minneapolis Exchange will be forthcoming as soon as the plans are completed and the organization under the supervision of General Manager Lichtman presides is said to be near perfect in its operation as human ingenuity can make it. Under Sales Manager Sidney R. Kent, the sales force has increased the volume of business tremendously. The idea that the duty of the personnel is not only to produce revenue for the organization but also to give every service to exhibitors has been kept constantly in the foreground. To illustrate the wide scope of service its manager has created and Frank V. Chamberlin has been appointed to the position. Mr. Chamberlin has been connected with the department for several years in various positions of responsibility, and with him in charge Paramount exhibitors have already learned that Paramount service now has a larger meaning than ever before.

Gloria Swanson Will Remain with Lasky

Speculation as to the future screen activities of Gloria Swanson was settled yesterday when Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, announced that Miss Swanson renewed her contract with Famous Players for a period of five years. Miss Swanson, whose name is often associated with Cecil B. DeMille, who discovered Miss Swanson and was the first to give her opportunity for the development of her talents, will select her stories and will personally supervise all her productions. Mr. DeMille will see to it that the public's desire to see Miss Swanson in wonderful gowns and in lavish settings will be entirely satisfied in all future Gloria Swanson productions. By her beauty and her striking gowns Miss Swanson has come to be known as one of the best-dressed women on the screen, and in future pictures she will maintain this reputation, it is stated.

Seven Specials Ready Now

On the DeMille—Erlanger—Hart's new production, The Devil to Pay, a scene of the opening number was given in front of the curtain in the theater, and the cast appeared in the cold. The production was a tremendous success, and the audience was on their feet cheering the actors. The play was directed by Brian Deacon, and the lead roles were played by Jack Douglas and Mary Mapes.

The story of The Devil to Pay is set in a small town in the American West, where a young girl, Jane, is the target of a group of bandits. Jane's father, a wealthy farmer, tries to protect her, but the bandits are determined to get what they want. The play is full of action and suspense, and the audience was kept on the edge of their seats throughout the performance.

The cast of The Devil to Pay included Jane Rains, John Bannerman, and Charles Allen. The director, Brian Deacon, was praised for his excellent direction, and the actors were all praised for their performances. The play was a huge success, and it is expected to be a hit with audiences for many years to come.

Reelcraft Engages Warner

Noted Author to Write Stories for Matty Roubert Comedy Series

William Henry Warner has been engaged to write the stories in which Matty Roubert, the twelve year old "boy wonder," is to be starred on the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation exclusive short feature series. Mr. Warner is the author of "Bread of Men,, "The Bridge of Time," and many short stories, plays, and articles on travel. His latest book "The Bridge of Time," is now being published in both New York and London.

The addition of Mr. Warner to the staff of the Matty Roubert producing unit is but the fulfillment of a promise to make the forthcoming series of pictures complete two-reel feature comedies in every sense of the word. The stories will concern the romances of the boys, dealing with the enjoyable and universal appealing adventures of boys and girls in their teens.

Two of the stories for Matty Roubert have already been completed. One is titled "She's a Vamp," and the second "She's a Girl," the latter two stories, according to Mr. Warner, will be with the greatest joy in the lives of all youngsters—when the censure of the parents is dispensed with. The third title under consideration is the service of a real Circus for its production. It will be titled "Circus Day!"

William L. Roubert who is in direct charge of the productions has endeavored to have every member of his producing staff and their friends live up to their promise. Production has already been started at Fort Lee. Reelcraft plans to release these pictures at the rate of only one a month allowing ample time for the producing unit to make complete productions suitable for presentation in every theatre in the United States. Distribution will be through the Reelcraft and allied exchanges.

Pioneer’s Summer Plans

Releases Will Continue During Hot Weather to Meet Demands

Following the plans which proved successful last year, the Pioneer general staff announced that during the coming summer months there will be no cutting either in the number of releases or in the quality of the productions to be offered to the exhibitor.

The month will see Louis Huff in "What Women Want" put out under the Pioneer banner, while July, August and September will be the release months of Joe Collins in "Nobody's Child," Grace Davison in "The Hidden Code," and Emily Stevens and Montagu Love in the "Place of Honeymoons." All of these pictures are said to be large and notable productions.

The Pioneer general staff believes that it owes a certain duty to the exhibitors handling its pictures to give them as good if not better pictures during the slow months as it does during the winter season. Last summer the Pioneer released some of its biggest productions with no falling off of the estimated receipts.

Usually during the hot spell there is a dearth of large pictures and the Pioneer believes that their summer offerings will help to meet the demands of the enterprising exhibitor.

C. B. Price Manager Is Touring Mid-West

Mr. C. A. Meade sales manager of the C. B. Price Co., Inc., has left the loop trip through the mid-west stopping at Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Milwaukee and Pittsburgh where he is endeavoring to do his work of the sale of the company’s rights in the series of twelve productions.

Mr. Shallenberger announces the sale of the foreign rights in the following territories: New York, Northern New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Kentucky, Michigan, Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas, New England, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, Kansas and Missouri, Illinois and Indiana.

Exclusive Sells Rights on Nelln Revival

The Exclusive Features, Inc. announces that many territories have already been sold on the revival of Marshall Nelkin's "The Country That Never Was." Ten territories have already sold include, Texas and Arkansas to the Specialty Film Company of Dallas, Texas; Oklahoma to the W. S. B. Anderson of Oklahoma City, the Southern states, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, North and South Carolina to the K. & R. Film Company of Atlanta, Georgia, and Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia to the Quality Film Corporation of Pittsburgh, Pa.

Ayon Sells Rights on Gerald Bacon Picture

Nathan Hirsh, of the Ayron Film Corporation, has just sold the rights to "Blind Love," the Gerald Bacon, photographing starring Lucy Cotton, for the state of Illinois to the Sible Film Corp., of Chicago. In addition Sible purchased from Ayron the rights to the series of Rex Ray Western pictures.

Mr. Hirsh has also completed arrangements whereby he will put on the state rights market a series of Western pictures directed by D. W. Griffith when he was connected with the Biograph company.

Chrisite States Plans Under New Deal

As was recently announced, the Educational Film Corporation and Christie, Inc. have perfected an arrangement whereby Educational will distribute all of the Christie, and for the purpose otherwise contracted for. The arrangements between Educational and Christie will facilitate the production of feature comedies, according to a statement from the Christie studios, meaning a gross profit of a million dollars for two and a half comedies alone, it is declared.

One of the new series have already been set for the Christie. The players in them include Baidy Vernon, Fay Tilther, Eddie Barry, Neil Burns, Dorothy Devore, Teddy Sampson, Vera Steadman, and Charlotte Merrian and Jimmie Harmon.

Kremer Open Special Service Bureau

Victor Kremer, president of the New York Independent Masters, Inc., announces the establishment of the "Kremer Open Special Service Bureau" to take care of exhibitors' publicity wherever the same may be necessary. The bureau has arrangements that between the hours of ten to twelve each day the publicity department of the New York Independent Masters will handle all exchange exclusively, and no charge will be made for the service.

Mr. Kremer believes that a good picture never grows old, and with this in mind he has closed for the famous Chaplin comedies and for features, starring Bryant Washburn, H. B. Wallak, Taylor Holmes and others of like calibre. it is stated.

Walter Hiers Engaged for Christie Film

Walter Hiers, the comedian, has been engaged by Al Christie for a part in the forthcoming special production of "So Long, Lotty." The acquisition of Hiers was made possible by special arrangement with the manager of Frank Garbutt and Charles F. Eveson of the Lakey Company, who arranged their schedule so as to permit Hiers to play for Christie for a period of seven weeks.

Colleen Moore will play one of the other important parts in "So Long, Lotty." Having already been cast for the role of the domestic wife.
"Son of Tarzan" Under Way

A PICTUREIZATION of "The Son of Tarzan" from the novel by Edgar Rice Burroughs, is now being made at the studios of the National Motion Picture Corporation, the world distribution arm of which will be controlled by David P. Hadid.

"The Son of Tarzan" is said to be a new departure in serial making in that it takes the story values from Mr. Burroughs' book and develops them into a highly dramatic point of serial filming with a background of spectacular jungle settings.

"It is to be no mad jumble of blood and thunder, nor a series of unrelated incidents intended to be wiped off in a single year's consumption of the serial in its entirety, with special productions at the end of each year or half year. The company has offered Harry Revier, who is writing the screenplay on this production, unlimited resources for the purpose of making each serial a part of the story, in every detail, with special productions. It is being handled on a budget of elaborate scale which distinguished the previous Tarzan pictures.

Burroughs' previous works "Tarzan of the Apes" and the National Business with Edgar Burroughs' Jungle Serial

"Romance of Tarzan," both of which were filmed as features by National as "Return of Tarzan," which is also a serial directed by Mr. Revier, have all scored highly with the public. Mr. Revier, with John Temple, casting director, spent a long time in gathering together a cast of upstanding the serial requirements "The Son of Tarzan" calls for. Innumerable changes had to be made before the company had its proper quota of talent. To be sure of their services all the extra were signed up for the entire length of the serial's production time.

The cast represents the four corners of the globe. Among those selected are: Karla Schramm, who is a Scandinavian; Mae Girard of Indiana, Louise Iman, Howard Johnstone and H. W. Kearley, all of New Zealand, and a carefully selected quota of male and female talent representing all parts of the world with which the story deals, famous and conversant with the life and traditions of their respective peoples.

Gordon Griffith, who is playing the part of the young son of Tarzan, was one of the stars in "Huckleberry Finn," the juvenile lead in "Tarzan of the Apes," the earlier National production. He was selected for the new role because of his unusual daring and pronounced ability before the camera.

Due to the unusual nature of the lighting action and special effects which the story calls for, the serial has been undergoing rigid training to fit it for its literarily savage life ordeal which the filming of "The Son or Tarzan" will entail.

Roy Somervelle who is photographic in the story has written original script for Douglas Fairbanks, the Gish sisters, the Talmdges and other leading screen stars. Capt. Harry M. Rubey, president of National, has given him a free hand to make the "Son of Tarzan" serial classic. Revier and Somerville plan to make each serial a two-reel feature in itself. They will be so filmed that each will have an engaging and fascinating plot, with a climax suitable for all ages. Each episode will be cut and edited in the continuous narrative treatment. Between the strange and tropical scenery the film is expected to offer a peculiar atmosphere and romance and the unknown as the background for the exploits of the "Son of Tarzan."

BILLY FRANEY Comedies Go Well Is Report

BILLY FRANEY, the comedian, appearing in a series of one-reel comedies, being produced for the Releacraft Corporation, has procured the big screen exclusive one and two-reel comedies. A wire from the Consolidated Film Laboratories of Los Angeles, informs that Billy Franey picture "The Billy Franey" was a great success at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, last week.

Bonnie Cacalle Releacraft exchange next reported the Billy Franey comedies as booked into Barbee's Loop theatre in Chicago for full week runs.

European Rights Sold on "Determination" The United States Photoplay Corporation has contracted for the entire European rights for "Determination!" with the Stoll Film Company of London, England.

Howard Hall, the dramatic writer, has been added to the scenario staff, and has been placed in charge of the continuity of the story of the film. This production will be first released in New York City, and then follow into the small houses, all arrangements are being made to show "Determination" in the largest houses in the Stoll chain in Drury Lane, it is stated.

Talmadge Re-Issue Is Selling Rapidly

Joe Brandt, general director of the National Film Corporation, which company is planning to release "Captivating Mary Carstairs" in which Norma Talmadge is starred, states that the list of unsold prints on the feature is growing smaller every day.

This film will be ready for release about June 1st, it is said, at which time large orders, advertising matter, press pictures and publicity and slides will be available for exhibitor use.

More Exchanges Ally with Releacraft Releacraft announces the addition of the following exchanges and others already distributing Releacraft products, the Seaboard Film Company with offices at Times square, N.Y.; Washington; and at 210 Columbus street, Baltimore, Md.; the Electric Theater Supply Company of 1389 Vine place, Philadelphia, and the Supreme Photoplays Company of 1460 Welton street, Denver.
Gilmore Offers Studio Site to Producers

Paul Gilmore, who recently completed "The Isle of Destiny" at Anna Marie Key, Florida, makes an urgent appeal to picture producers through the Motion Picture News. He states that he will give absolutely free, with no strings attached, a location on the island to any reliable picture manufacturer who will build a studio and agree to work in the section for six months of the year. The climate, states Mr. Gilmore, is so perfect that he hopes to complete a six reel picture in three weeks.

Bacon’s "Blind Love"

Going Well, He Says

Hermon Rifkin, Eastern Feature Film Company, Boston, writes Nathan Hirsia, Awyn Film Corporation, who is handling the distribution of Gerald F. Bacon's six-reel production, "Blind Love," starring Lucy Cotton and George La Guere, that the feature has been booked for a week's run beginning May 31st at the Boston theatre, Boston. "Blind Love" has been booked throughout the New England States for the past month and Mr. Rifkin reports it is playing to very successful business.

Jack Gardner Returns to Screen Work

Richards and Flynn, Kansas City exhibitors, who hold the First National of Gerald F. Bacon's territory, have contracted with Jack Gardner to make a series of twelve five-reel Westerns. Mr. Gardner's vaudeville career will end in time for the actual production work to start in California on August 14. Distributing plans will be announced later.

Press Book Soon Ready for "Mary's Attic"

According to a report from Fine Art Picture Corp., who are releasing the six reel super-comedy feature, "Up in Mary's Attic," on the state right market, their twenty-eight page campaign book is now nearing completion. This book, it is said, will be a decided novelty from many angles. Every page will contain valuable and useful information.

An Old Struggle Re-enacted

BY VICTOR KREMER

There is nothing new under the sun. The exhibitor has nothing to fear. The much talked about producer-exhibitor enterprise is as old as the proverbial hills. From the beginning of time there have always been interests which desired to gobble up everything in sight, and at first blush it appeared that everything went their way. This applied to business as well as to politics, to civil as well as military life. But it is beyond belief how stupidly blind these interests are who are not satisfied with success and glory, and who, less justly earned while engaged in enterprise which made them pre-eminent among their fellow men, do not take note of the great encroachment. Tex" Series is Fully Sold

Arrow Sells Practically Every Corner of World on New Pictures

With the announcement of the release through the Arrow Film Corporation that William Wyler has completed the seventh of the series of "Tex" productions, it is announced that a majority of the series have been disposed of in practically every corner of the world. An official of the Arrow organization states that the company will dispose of any new series of mystery pictures. The company has already secured the services of several prominent actors and actresses for the next series. The series of "Tex" productions have been a great success, and the company is now planning to produce further series. The series has been well-received by audiences all over the world, and the company is confident of its success.

The Restless Sex," the Cosmopolitan production from the Robert W. Chamber's novel in which Marion Davies is starred, is a magnificent spectacle as will be shown by the three views from the picture as shown above.

Several territories and according to the statement from Arrow have been released. The company has plans for further exploitation of the series. The remarkable part of the sales record of this series is the foreign demand.
FIRST NATIONAL

A ANNOUNCEMENT is made that Los Angeles First National Exhibitors, Inc. will spend more than $50,000 for production studios in the Los Angeles district. The release includes the following exclusive properties:

T he Mack Sennett first contribution to First National "Married Life," was given a try out at Pasadena three days of last week, prior to the subject being taken East by E. M. Loew, personal representative of First National, which has Ben Turpin, Phyllis Haver, Charles Murray, Ford Sterling, Kella Potter, among its players. The scenes were on the lot.

The cast for the seventeen reel Neilah production is as follows: "Don't Ever Marry," has been announced, being one of the most popular of Agnes Ayres and Pat O'Malley in the leading roles, and the supporting cast includes Elissa Landi, Noah Berry, J. Barney Sherry, Walter Long, Charles Mallek and Lydia Connell.

King Vidor has engaged Ferdinand Earle to prepare the art titles for his second First National release, "The Jack Knife Man," which is almost ready for film preview.

Vidor has not announced what his next film will be and the selection largely depends on William Parker, scenario chief, and Charles Vidor, star director of the "Red Dust," starring Mildred Harris Chapman, which has been completed by Director Lloyd Logan.

The cast is made up of George Storm, Jack J. Connings, Mystery Stedman, John Sainpolis, Hazel Howard and a number of others.

President Sam Rook of the Katherine MacDonald Productions has a cast selected for the next play, "The Curtain," which is being prepared by James Young. Charles Richmond, Lloyd Whitlock and Florence Dasher are assigned to the play, which will have a back-stage atmosphere.

The Abner Stewart production of "The Waffle and the Piper," written by Kathleen Norris, adapted for the screen by Monte M. Katterjohn, is expected to start this week. The production will be directed under the direction of Bracken. Supporting players are Ward Crane, Vera Steadman, Irving Cummings, Charles Richmond, Byron Musson and others.

Charles Ray organization has "Peaceful Valley" in the final stages of production and this initial First National release will be ready for the screen shortly. In the meantime work is going forward with the preparation of "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," which is to be the second release. Ray has several other stories for future production including an original play by Robert Wagner, fourteen film stage scenes, two James Whitecomb stories and a few parodies of the book Tarkington's "Ramsay Milbank."
mediate future as M. C. Levee, vice-president and business manager of the Brunton plan, returned from New York this week, following several weeks in the Eastern metropolises where he went to investigate conditions pertaining to the film industry and the advisability of the Brunton Company building a couple of studios in New York City. While in the East, Mr. Levee made contacts with a number of producers who expressed interest in making films on the Coast and during their stay in the West, will use space and offices at the Brunton plant.

The construction work on a number of improvements at the Brunton Studios was commenced this week. The building now going on consists of the erection of a tier of dressing rooms which will be adjoining the recently completed exactly 300 feet dark stage. Adjoining the dressing rooms will be built two office suites for the use of Robert Brunton and General Manager Levee. A six-inch water main is being laid to the new big stage in order to give ample protection and large quarters are being built for the scenario department on the west side of the big plant. The department is in charge of Jack Cunningham. Another improvement now under way is that of a new road leading from the Jullian stage doors, and other explosives. This building is the first to be erected on the ten-acre tract adjoining the Brunton Studios recently purchased.

Filming of the first Robert Brunton all star production, "The Devil to Pay," from the Frances Nunge Greene novel, will be commenced next week by Director Ernest Ward. At this time producer Brunton has under construction a number of well-known novels, one of which will be selected as his second all-star subject.

Positive print and negative on the ninth and last, J. Warren Kershaw for W. A. Huston & Hinkston to be made by Robert Brunton, has been shipped East for printing and the Brunton made serials for Pathé, as yet unnamed, has been completed as far as the fifth episode. W. A. Van Dyke is directing making of this unmade serial and Charles Hutchinson and Josie Segni are featured.

Director Hugh, Ryan Conway, now filming the "Money Changers" by Upon Sinclair for B. R. Hampton, has sent his assistant, Virgil Hart, to San Francisco to make scenes, both interior and exterior, in Chinatown for use in the Oriental sequence in this production. The Allan Dow, Mayflower company has been working nights for the last week filming the original story by Dwan, which is said to be so intensely dramatic that work during the day is impossible because of the noise. The big cast for this subject includes Mary Thurman, Elise Welch, Eugene Beisser, Joseph Dowling, Frank Campeau, George Hackathorn and Stanton Williams.

The Robert W. Chambers's study, "Alkahest," is in the final editing stage and will be ready for film preview at a Hollywood theatre during the coming week. Sylvia Bream and Conrad Nagel play the leading roles.

General Manager Harry Rup of the Selznick organization announces the completion of the Olivia Thomas picture, "Jenny," and stated Miss Thomas's next story, written by John Lynch and titled "Nobody," would be under way making as soon as the star had wardrobe prepared.

Henry Kolker has also finished the filming of "The Policeman and the Darkened Windows," the last scenes being taken at Balboa Beach where desert scenes were filmed.

UNIVERSAL

The final work is being done on the script for the next Charles Dean production which is to be titled "Outside the Law," a crooked lawyer and crooked criminal story of which was written by Ted Browning who directed Miss Dean and Miss Virginia of Stanton, and he will direct her in the making of this film. Director Browning insists that this crooked drama is of a definitely new type and will be a typical example of the celluloid crooked police or dishonest officials. One of the principal roles is to be taken by one of the Chinese actors who plays the character of the constable.

Maurice Atkin and Morane have selected their complete casts for second five-reel comedy drama, "La La Lucile," from the Broadway stage by Fred Jackson, Anne Cornwall and Gladys Walton are the leading women for the comedy, and the principal players are Fred Gamble, Harry Meyers, Frank Earle, Charles McHugh, Oona Walker, Rose Gore and a number of others.

Other Universal productions now in the making are "Fight to the Finish," starring Harry Carey, "Under the Sun," directed by Reeves Eason; "Marina," directed by Norman Darrow and written by Richard Buckner; "Hitchock Point," being directed by Jack Ford, and Director Lynn Reynolds is doing the final editing of the "Red Lure." Preparations are being made for completing the making of "In Polly's Trail," which will be directed by Rollo Sturgeon.

Horace Davies, recently added to the directorial staff of Universal, is filming "Give a Young Man a Chance," a comedy which features Howard Austin and Barine Berrett and a number of bathing girls. Magda Lane and James Eakins are featured in "Pranks of Fate." Universal short subject, and Director Mack Wright is filming "Bud Kirkin's parish." which features Leo Maloney and May Busek.

HERE AND THERE

THE D. N. Schnob Productions have purchased screen rights on the story, "Girl's Don't Gamble Anyway," the third vehicle starring David Butcher. The story is now being prepared for the screen and the film of this is to begin shooting the next week. In the meantime the company is doing the final work on the second David Butcher picture, "Sanding All the Ways," which was directed by Fred J. Butler. The new picture gives Butler the role of a big-hearted, out-of-doors young man which is the same type of characterization he has had in previous stories.

The Monroe Salisbury Players left for northern California this week to make their initial production, "The Barrat," adapted from a late magazine serial story for June Novelle plays opposite Salisbury, and other players are Barney Sherry, Harrison Post, cast of "Shadows in the Shadow," and Syd Ect, and Larry Steers, and a number of others. Donald Craig who directed "Shadows in the Shadow" and "Eyes of the World," is in charge for the new company. The Salisbury Company will have its headquarters at the Branton Studio where the interior for the subject will be filmed.

Parkdale Opens in Toronto

WHAT is generally acknowledged to be a new achievement in the shape of a neighborhood theatre is the new Allen's Parkdale theatre, Queen street and Triller avenue, Toronto. This house is raised as a "super suburban theatre" and it possesses all the structural features of a great downtown film palace—with a few more specialties thrown in for good measure. Thanks to the location of the new house in a picturesque and substantial district in the West End of Toronto, more than usual attention has been paid to the exterior details. Between the two entrances on the Queen street frontage, arrangements have been made for the placing of a grass terrace with a handsome fountain and rustic benches, thus adding a park-like atmosphere to the surroundings. On the Triller avenue side will be found an ornamental garden when the weather becomes appropriate for horticultural work.

Although the Parkdale is a suburban theatre it is comparatively spacious, having seating accommodations on the one floor for 1,800 people. On the opening night, when special ceremonies were conducted by Mayor Church, Controller Gibbons, Alderman McGregor and others, hundreds of people were present.

The scheme of decoration in the Adams style with a combination of rose, cream and white colors and cameo mural effects is similar to that of other new Allen theatres in Canada. A special arrangement is the placing of two entrances on the wide front, practically at each corner of the building. There are the usual rest and smoking rooms and the house is heated by oil-burning furnaces, this plan of heating having been adopted for Allen theatres which have been erected during the past six months. Provision has been made for a concert organ and a ten-piece orchestra has been organized, the conductor of which has been Mr. Ernest Johnson, L. R. A.

Making a "Dream" Out of a "Shell"

BUILDING a new theatre, from the ground up, and making it a thing of beauty is one thing, while taking an old shell of a building and making it into one, is quite another, especially when you are keeping your foot on the "soft pedal" of expense.

Down in Tampa, Florida, is the "Maceo" theatre, operated by Mr. Charles Sappal, for the exclusive amusement of the negro race. That Sappal knows what to dish up for the negro's amusement is demonstrated every day.

Charles Sappal is a spender too. He just naturally don't care what a feature costs, so long as it looks like a "sure fire" negro attraction, and Charlie calls 'em right about ninety-nine times in the hundred. So, after having about ninety percent of the serials all sewed up in his inside pocket, and how those black boys do love the serials, he decided he'd give his patrons a treat by making his house as attractive as his program.

Now, just imagine a big frame building about 60 feet wide by 120 feet long. Unsealed inside, for Florida's climate does not demand such luxuries, with an inverted V-shaped roof supported by heavy wooden girders from wall to wall, and all in plain view. This was what Charlie had to work on when he decided that he would make the Maceo into a summer garden.

The first thing he did was to paint the roof and girders solid black. Just real old lamp black, glue and water. Now with a stencil, star pattern, he marked out a hundred or more stars on the backs of photos from past attractions. The stars were then cut out and tacked about the roof.

Next a big load of lath were painted white and then nailed upon the girders, giving a lattice work effect. One seated below could look thru the white lattice, see the twinkling stars in the inky heaven above, and murmur, "How nice and cool out here under the open sky. I wonder how they pull the roof off?"

Here and there from the lattice were buckets, all neatly covered, hanging down with vines trailing down over their sides.

Upon the sides of the building he used wall board. This was painted a dark color from the floor up to about six feet and from there on up to the girders it was painted pink.

The lattice effect was carried out on each side of the proscenium arch by painting it all black and then putting up the lath an inch or so away. This gave it depth.

Coolness was there in "looks," and of course looks go a long long way, but, when it's hot, it's hot, and all the cool effects in the world won't keep a packed house from sweating, so Charlie set up a battery of oscillating fans, and then topped it off with a big exhaust fan, which he reversed, so the breeze would hit 'em right in the face.

I'll tell the world that, with ocean breezes blowing all over you, the stars a twinkling over your head, and a program of pictures that just naturally keep you right up to the edge of your seat, why; there isn't a chance of keeping those black American Photoplayer to Move Soon

The American Photoplayer will move very shortly to their new quarters on the tenth floor of the Mecca Building at 1600 Broadway, New York, N. Y., where their Eastern executive offices and salesroom will be located. As has been their policy in the past they will also have a large sales-room in which will be installed a number of Photoplayers as well as Robert Morton Orchestral Organs.

Saving Ideas from New Theatre Section

NOTES received from W. B. Crooks, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Benicia, Cal., says: "I think the section under the head of 'New Theatres' is a great help to exhibitors because everyone likes to see what kind of a theatre the other fellow has, and he can get many new ideas from these pictures and descriptions to make his place more attractive. For the past three years I have been cutting out and saving these pictures and when the time came to build my new theatre I got many new ideas to incorporate in the new house from these."
All plans for new theatres are drawn up, it is gratifying to note the almost universal acceptance of the Major Theatre Switchboard as the highest development in the art of theatre lighting and sound electrical construction. This means intimate knowledge of theatre requirements which makes every Frank Adam-Major installation an individual system, designed to give maximum service in the capacity for which it was built.

The above roster is a fair barometer of this universal endorsement, as it is but a partial list of theatres that have specified and included Major Equipment.

LOCATED on the site of the historic Gilmore theatre at Main and Lydian streets, the new Capitol theatre, Abraham Goodside of Portland, Me., owner and managing director, claimed to be the latest and best of theatres in this section devoted to vaudeville and motion pictures, was formally opened a few nights ago. The general opening to the public was on Monday, Patriots' day, the schedule calling for programs every day of the week. There were five performances, the theater being opened at 12 o'clock, noon, noon and at 2 p.m. Sundays.

Mr. Goodside will have personal general supervision of the house, dividing his time between it and other of his theatres in the East. James Butler is treasurer of the theatre, and M. J. Kavanagh, until recently general manager of the John Cort attractions, will be local manager. Announced policy will be along the lines as followed at the Strand and Rialto theatres in New York. A symphony orchestra of 25 under direction of Carlton Kelcey, formerly musical director for John Cort, will play at each performance and there will be selections by a local organist.

The decorative archway to the theatre is of stone, highly ornamental and adapted from Italian Renaissance motifs. An attractive lobby leads to an auditorium seating 1,500. On either side of the lobby an ornamental iron staircase leads directly to the mezzanine floor and balcony. The ceiling of the lobby carries out the same general decorative effect. On the mezzanine floor are located coat, retiring and toilet rooms furnished with every accommodation. The balcony is entered through two vomitories, this being arranged so that the sight line provides that every seat in the house commands a perfect view of the stage.

General design of the auditorium has been arranged according to the latest ideas in acoustics, continuing the same principles of architectural design as that of the exterior. The decoration is in low relief and is reminiscent of the Adam period. Old rose, gold and gray, with mulberry hangings and draperies are liberally used.

Large organ pipes frame the stage on either side, which is set in the form of an open niche, giving an attractive setting for the picture. The whole is framed with an illuminated opalescent glass proscenium arch. The stage is fitted to accommodate both vaudeville and motion pictures. To insure perfect projection of the pictures the picture machine booth is hidden in the front of the balcony. This is intended to eliminate the long, angular throw from the top of the balcony used in many theatres.

Many exits and an automatic sprinkler system are provided as protection against fire. Lighting of the theatre is semi-direct, producing a soft glow all over the house. Heating and ventilating carry out all of the latest ideas in theatre work. Desmond & Long, theatrical designers, were the architects and are now drawing plans for a large theatre to be built by the Goodside interests at Manchester, N. H.

On the Illumination of Theatres

ONE of the most interesting papers delivered at the Montreal Convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was that on "A New Method of Illuminating Theatres" by L. A. Jones of the Eastman Kodak Co. A synopsis of this paper follows:

This paper contains a discussion of the fundamental principles which must be considered in order to obtain a relatively high level of illumination in a motion picture theatre resulting in a detrimental effect on the quality of the projected picture. The first few paragraphs contain a discussion of the various visual sensibilities of importance in this problem which include the contrast, brightness, and glare sensibility functions of the average normal human eye. A consideration of the principles involved leads to the conclusion that the illuminating system must be so constructed as to provide adequate illumination on the table plane without the use of visible lighting elements above a certain critical value of brightness in order that the condition of

Jack Calicott Makes Distinct Impression at First Performance of Los Angeles Kinema

Overcomes Many Handicaps, But Succeeds in Turning Out a Finished Premiere

With the arrival in Los Angeles of Jack Calicott from Seattle to take over the management of the Kinema for the Messrs. Michael Gore, Abe Gore and Sol Lesser, speculation ran rife along film row and the sancto sanctorum of the larger houses were known to have sent some of their aides to witness the first presentation of the new manager.

On Saturday evening, February 14th, the non-union personnel of the Kinema, under the management of T. L. Tally, left its stations to make room for a thirty-piece orchestra under the direction of Nicholas Donatelli, engaged by Mr. Calicott. Two full rehearsals were held before the opening performance until the new aggregation was in perfect unison. New electricians, stage hands, operators, etc., also worked during the intermission, with some of the former employees filing their old stations.

C. C. Harden has been made projectionist in charge, with two assistants. Mr. Calicott has already installed a new screen upon which he has perfected projection effects that come nearer stereoscopic touch with year before attempted. It must be understood that modern and new stage equipment is rapidly being put in place of the obsolete type of material and the owners are putting no limit on the expense of necessary alterations.

Jack Calicott stated that Gore and Lesser expect to spend at least $75,000 until a new stage has been built in place of the older one. The entire house is to undergo a remodeling and redecoration, with architects and decorators now in daily session. Turkish and Byzantine effects are to be used entirely, Mr. Calicott’s intention to transform the Kinema into a veritable Harun-Al-Rashid’s palace, having met with the unanimous approval of the owners. It is estimated that the house will close its doors within a few weeks to allow for final massive building activities, and then Mr. Calicott expects to reopen the New Kinema theatre in a blaze of glory.

The front of the house, which heretofore has always been somewhat subdued is to undergo a complete change, with large electrical signs and thousands of lights now being arranged to make the block a sea of blazing light. Buildings are now rapidly going up all around the Kinema and the district promises to become one of intense industrial activity. The plan for the rebuilding of the Kinema are most ambitious and have caused considerable comment in film and exhibition circles since their announcement. Mr. Calicott is working day and night to put the Kinema on the map, and his first presentation bill has met the unstinted praise of the local press. The critics recognized the new spirit which is governing the entire organization and praised the eight-part program fulsomely.

Donnell’s overture was Suppe’s “Light Cavalry,” which was followed by the Kinema Weekly, selected bits from available scenic and educational subjects.

The proper decorating of a theatre is a profession in itself.

It is a proposition which cannot be handled properly by a department in a separate business. Because theatre decorating is a profession we are viewing it from that standpoint and are in a position not only to decorate your theatre to your complete satisfaction—but to actually save you money on the job. From an artistic, practical and service standpoint we should be your logical choice.

As a typical illustration of our ability in this field we are showing our Beauty Carnation Fernery No. 48 at a price way below today's market. It measures 36 in. long, 18 in. high and 10 in. wide.

The Beauty Carnation Fernery is filled with imported ferns, 18 genuine cloth carnations in pink, white and red, and real Spignum Moss. It will fit along your walls on either side of the stage, over your proscenium—in fact in a hundred and one places, and prove an important adjunct to the bright cheery atmosphere you want to dispense.

Because the price on this item is cut to the bone we are compelled to ask for your protection, that check accompany order. Price each, packed in patented individual carton, $6.50. Your money refunded unless you are satisfied.

Announcement of the New Westinghouse Automatic Regulator

A Device to Further the Use of Incandescent Lamps for Projection

FOR many months past rumors have been current regarding the early perfection of a new regulator for Mazda projection by the Westinghouse Company. The Equipment Department of Motion Picture News in line with its usual policy is the first to publish a detailed account of the new device.

Since the lamp for use in motion picture projection was standardized at 90 watts, the manufacturers of the lamps have realized the necessity of maintaining the correct current under all conditions if the life of the lamp was to be brought to its maximum. This lamp requires 30 amperes at 70 volts and every ampere over this amount the life of the lamp is greatly shortened. It is not necessary that this over-current be continued for long without having a bad effect on the bulb. One ampere over normal continued for a minute or two will shorten the life of the lamp by a number of hours. Conversely, if the lamp is burned at amperages under 30 the brilliancy of the source is materially decreased and the illumination of the screen reduced. For these reasons, simply stated, the engineers realized the vital need for a constant current regulator that would insure at all times the proper current at the lamp terminals.

Fig. 2 shows the regulator with its cover removed. The device is mounted at a convenient height above the floor. The tripod consists of three iron legs screwed into a solid cast iron frame which in turn supports the core laminations and also the movable coil. This movable coil is supported on a cast aluminum frame which to allow free movement is supported at its lower end by two sets of ball bearings.

The current comes into the primary coil marked "A" in Fig. 2 and sets up a magnetic current which repels the secondary coil "B" away from it. But spring "C" exerts a predetermined pull upon "B" which swings upon the pivoted cast iron aluminum frame "D" so the point where the magnetic repulsion is neutralized by the pull of the springs, as shown.

And one more thing, because of the general conditions under which the lamp would be used it was felt that the regulating device should be automatic. Hand controls in numbers have appeared on the market but they, although admirable in their design and scope, permitted the human element to enter in that the current was regulated only when the projectionist noticed from the ammeter that the current was above normal. If his mind and attention happened to be distracted for a minute or two by a troublesome film or a bad acting take-up the lamp might be subjected to an excess current of several amperes for the time being. Accordingly the lamp burned out long before it reached its normal life.

If the voltage of the usual supply line remained constant it would be possible to use an ordinary step down transformer. But in actual practice the supply voltage is far from remaining constant as the curve in Fig. 1 shows. This curve was taken from a recording voltmeter connected to the supply line of a Massachusetts town. By studying it will be seen that the voltage varied from 90 to 130. Without doubt this is an extreme case as it is improbable that the average voltage variation goes much beyond 10 or 15 volts. But even with this lesser variation, the corresponding current change would be too great for the Mazda projection lamp to withstand and it would obviously be too much to expect a projectionist to catch each variation by adjusting the regulator handle of a hand controlled device. The action must be automatic.

The new Westinghouse Regulator is automatic in its action. It is based upon the old principle of the constant current transformer used in the days of the series street lighting systems. Additional features have been provided to make it specially suitable for motion picture work.

Gentlemen:

At the request of your Mr. Cassard, it is a pleasure to recommend the Power's Projection Machines, as I hereby do.

We have in our present plant, six Power's machines which are giving the best of satisfaction, and two of them have been in operation for eighteen hours a day for two years. I most heartily recommend Power's Projectors.

Very truly,

STORAGE BATTERIES

Cells which are reversible in their action i.e. those in which the chemical condition at discharge may be brought back to the original condition, by means of a current flow in the reverse direction, may be termed storage batteries or as sometimes called electric accumulators.

The process of storing electric energy by sending a current through a cell from one external source is called charging. When the cell is producing a current in an external circuit or is supplying energy it is said to be discharging.

When a storage cell is being charged it is necessary to apply a higher voltage than the cell is capable of producing on discharge because of the internal resistance and an action on the plates similar to polarization of a primary cell.

Because of the internal resistance which obstructs the flow of current in the cell an amount of energy equal to that required for charging cannot be obtained on discharge. Thus a storage cell can be constructed to be 100% efficient.

There are two general classes of storage cells those in which lead is used for both positive and negative plates, and those in which some other metal is used.

The e. m. f. or open circuit voltage of a cell depends on the material used and the chemical constituents and not in any way on the number of plates on the surface area. The voltage varies slightly, however, with the strength of solution and the temperature and upon the state of charge of the plates. During charge the terminal voltage of a cell rises and during discharge it falls due to change in internal resistance and acid concentration effects. The total voltage of a battery is the E. M. F. of each cell multiplied by the number of cells.

For a definite type and thickness of plate the capacity or ampere hours output of a cell is proportional to the area of the plates. The size of a cell is usually rated in ampere hours which is the normal discharge rate as given as a percentage of a discharge rate above normal is used.

Lead Acid Type—Storage Cells.

The active material used in the construction of a lead-acid storage cell is the lead oxide, \((\text{PbO})\) which makes up the anode or positive plate and lead \((\text{Pb})\) the cathode or negative plate also the dilute sulphuric acid \((\text{H}_2\text{SO}_4)\) in which the plates are immersed.

When a cell is being discharged both these active materials are converted into lead sulphate \((\text{PbSO}_4)\) at the expense of the acid radical of the electrolyte and with the formation of water. On charge the reverse action takes place in that \(\text{PbSO}_4\) is broken up.

The following equations show the chemical action which takes place in the cell.

Reaction on the positive plate:
\[
\text{PbO} + \text{H}_2\text{SO}_4 = \text{PbSO}_4 + \text{H}_2\text{O} + \text{O}
\]

Reaction on the negative plate:
\[
\text{Pb} + \text{H}_2\text{SO}_4 = \text{PbSO}_4 + \text{H}_2
\]

Combining this action we obtain the following:
\[
\text{PbSO}_4 + \text{Pb} + 2\text{H}_2\text{SO}_4 = 2\text{PbSO}_4 + 2\text{H}_2\text{O}

There are two processes used in the manufacture of storage battery plates or grids, namely, the Plante plates and the pasted plates.

In the Plante process the plates are in a flat form, and have a highly developed surface formed by cutting a blank of heavy sheet lead. The active material of the positive plate is formed by cutting grooves in the surface and subjecting the plates to a lead dissolving acid such as aceric or nitric.

In the pasted form of plates the active materials are manufactured separately and introduced as pluses into openings in the grid. Several different methods are used in the manufacture of different makes of cells each one having its own peculiarities.

There are two processes employed in the manufacture of different makes of cells each one having its own peculiarities. In some cases a pasted plate of one polarity is used with a Plante plate of the other polarity, but plates of different design and age should not be connected to form one polarity of a cell.

The Plante type of plate while being more costly for a given output are heavier and more easily injured by impurities of electrolyte. However, they are able to stand a more rapid charge and discharge without injury and are not so liable to lose their active material.

The pasted plates are cheaper to construct and do not require such a large space for a given capacity and are not easily damaged by impurities of the electrolyte.

As already stated the voltage of a cell increases with charge and decreases with discharge so that the terminal voltage is in a way a measure of the condition of the battery. The relative change of voltage for charge and discharge is shown by the curves of Fig. 42. The unit for the capacity of a battery is the ampere hour and is usually based on an eight hour discharge rate. For example a 2 amp. hr. battery will give 25 amp. hrs. for 8 hrs. and theoretically should give 50 amp. hrs. for 4 hrs. and 100 amp. hrs. for 2 hrs., but in practice, however, it is found that the capacity decreases for an increase in the rate of discharge. This is shown by the curves of Fig. 43 which show the voltage variation for charge and discharge at different rates. When the voltage had dropped to 1.7 volts, and the charge continued until the voltage and specific gravity had become constant.

The ampere-hour output at a high rate of discharge is shown by the curve of 134 amperes for one hour, or 134 ampere-hours. To charge this battery required 32 amperes for five hours, or 160 ampere-hours. The efficiency of the battery is then given by 134/160 or 84 per cent.

As the rate of current taken from the battery is decreased the ampere-hour output is increased. Thus 42 amperes may be taken from the battery for six hours before the voltage drops to 1.7 volts, which gives an output of 252 ampere-hours and to recharge requires 32 amperes for 8 1/2 hours or 272 ampere-hours, which is 92 per cent of efficiency.

The above facts and the curves show that although a battery may be discharged at any desired rate, a greater ampere-hour output is obtained when the current is consumed at a low rate, and while it takes longer to charge because the action at slow rate goes deeper into the plates yet a higher rate of ampere-hour efficiency is obtained.

Answers to Study Lessons

Rudolph Koller, Roseburg, Ore., writes:

Following please find answers to Questions in April 17th issue of the News:

14. The proper readjusting and steady resistance to be inserted in the circuit should be 4.757 \(\text{ohms}\).

15. Short circuits may occur in Rhoesterats in various ways. First take the wire coil kind— if one of this type has been in use for a long time and was subject to heavy use and overload, the coils will sag and might then touch the adjoining one, thus causing a short. Second—Shorts might be caused by grounds to the frame or broken down insulators of resistance wire coil support, etc. The last two defects might be applied to the "grid" type rhoester also. Third—The only real and absolute short circuit would be at the terminals of a rhoester in such a way as to cause a direct flow of current from one terminal to the other without going through any coils at all.

16. The total resistance is 110 \(\text{ohms}\).

17. 2 Amp. will be the current flowing through the circuit.

18. The equivalent resistance is 1 \(\text{ohm}\) and the current flow though the circuit 110 amperes.

19. The current flowing is 3 amperes and the resistance 36.66 \(\text{ohms}\).

Reply: The above answers are 100% correct.

by the arrow, is the position at which a voltage of 115 the regulator will supply the lamp 30 volts and 30 amperes. As coil "B" approaches coil "A" the amperage is raised. When it goes further away, the voltage drops. But if there is a sudden rise in the line voltage and if these coils were fixed rigid the amperage would naturally rise and injure the lamp. But these coils being free to move, the increased voltage causes greater magnetic repulsion and coil "A" is pushed further away from "B" thereby cutting down the amperage. Every time there is a rise or fall in the line voltage an adjustment takes place within the regulator automatically and practically instantaneously.

The front view of the regulator is shown in Fig. 3. The part marked "X" is the lever for use in setting the regulator at any predetermined current rating based on the normal current of the lamp in use. For instance suppose the lamp demanded 30.5 amperes. This lever would be moved until the figure 30.5 was reached. At that point it would be locked with the certainty that the regulator will supply just that amount of current.

Lever "W" is the switch handle for the lamps. When it is moved to the right, lamp No. 1 is burned at full current while No. 2 is made to glow at half current. Then moving the lever to the left brings No. 2 to full current and No. 1 to half current. The purpose of this is to protect the lamp by warming it up gradually instead of submitting it to the initial rush of full current. When the filament is cold its resistance is much lower and the current consumption many times greater than when it has been heated up. By allowing the filament to become heated gradually the strain is removed and the life of the lamp extended. The "glow period" has another advantage in that it is much easier to properly focus the image and mirror under reduced light than when full illumination is being provided by the source.

The rear view of the regulator is shown in Fig. 4. The cast iron terminal box cover houses the switch whose handle is shown extending through. This switch is used for high and low line voltage, that is, when the voltage is below 90 or above 115. When the ammeter reads below 30 throw the switch in position marked "high"; when over 30 to the point marked "low." This is a convenience for the projectionist since it is necessary for him only to throw this switch to get closer regulation.

The Blue Prints are a new feature of the Equipment Section. They will give you many ideas for that new theatre.

Bullet Misses Lucas by Inches

Although the South may be safe for the democrats, it is far from being so for Supply men, whatever their political affiliation. A few nights ago while touring home in his Haklu sedan, Harry K. Lucas of Atlanta was set upon by a strange bullet of unknown nationality and origin. Only through an error on the part of the culprit in estimating the index of refraction of Lucas' wind-shield was a real tragedy averted. As it was the flying glass cut Harry's face in a number of places and the loss of blood being the first indication of serious injury. A search of the vicinity failed to reveal the person of the first part.

Recent reports state that Mr. Lucas has recuperated rapidly and is now back to work, but so far as he knows the bullet is still at large and still going.

More Typhoon Fan Sales

During the past week, the Typhoon Fan Co. reports contracts signed up for the following theatres:

Mr. O. R. Brown, Typhoon Fan representative for the States of North and South Carolina and Virginia, has been visiting New York for the past few days, and reports that exhibitors throughout his territory are becoming greatly interested in Typhoons and for this reason Mr. Brown expects to close many orders during the next few weeks.

New Theatre Notes

WASHINGTON

Auburn—A modern theatre building is to be constructed on East First street. Walter Craft, manager of the Terminal theatre is having plans prepared for this building which will be 50x110 feet dimensions. The theatre will have a seating capacity of about 700.

Ginger—Oscar Peterson will remodel the present Post Office building into a modern theatre. Work will start soon.

Seattle—A new $20,000 theatre building located at Greenwood avenue and 79th street has been announced by E. W. Houghton, architect in charge of construction.

Wapato—Joseph Blaschke of the Wapato theatre is arranging to increase the seating capacity of the building. It is probable that he will remodel and re-equip to a certain extent.

WISCONSIN

Milwaukee—A new motion picture theatre to cost approximately $250,000 is to be erected at the cost of $320,000 will have a seating capacity of over 3,000.

Cuyahoga Falls—I. S. Meyers is building a $200,000 theatre on Portage street and Front street. Work will commence at once.

OHIO

Columbus—The new James theatre to be erected in Columbus at a cost of $1,000,000 will have a seating capacity of over 3,000.
Good projection enhances the box-office value of good bookings—poor light can easily destroy the effectiveness of a good film.

G-E Compensarcs insure good projection

Because the use of the right compensarc on any circuit insures the proper current for the projection lamps, theatres so equipped can give their patrons pictures that are uniformly strong, steady and devoid of flicker or sudden failing of light.

Because, with the G-E outfit, it is so easy for the operator to handle the changeover between reels, there is even at this time no flickering or diminution of light on the screen. The outfit is so arranged that the arc on the second machine can be started and adjusted just before the first machine comes to the end of the reel. Then, by throwing a single switch at the actual time of change-over the shift is effected without the slightest break in the projection.

Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable. G-E offices or distributors everywhere for prompt deliveries and service.
Novel Instrument in the Photo Orchestra

The American Photo Company recently completed a new model instrument which is to be known as the "Photo Orchestra." The instrument is designed to combine certain features of the Photo-player and the Robert-Morton Orchestra and may be played with equal effect by hand or music roll.

The entire instrument may be installed in the pit of a theatre or divided and placed in different positions. When a pit installation is required, it is possible to have it finished in three days. This is due to several new improvements and the general simplicity of the electric system used in its construction. When the instrument is divided it is necessary only to increase the length of the cables and wind conductors. The console may be placed in the pit, the stops on the lower rows, tremolo and six stop traps on second touch. The second division (lower manual) contains two 16-foot stops, two 2-2-3-foot stops, one 2-foott stops, three trap stops, four couplers on first touch, tremolo and six trap stops on second touch. The second division (lower manual) contains two 16-foot stops, two 2-2-3-foot stops, one 2-foott stops, six percussion stops, six tremolo stops, and five couplers on first touch, one 16-foot, three 8-foot stops, two 4-foot stops, two 4-foot stops, two 8-foot stops, seven trap stops, one tremolo and four couplers on second touch. The third division (upper manual) contains a 16-foot stop, eight 8-foot stops, two 4-foot, one 2-2-3-foot, one 2-foot stop, seven percussion, five trap stops, one tremolo and four couplers on first touch and two 16-foot, two 8-foot, two percussion stops, one tremolo and three couplers on second touch.

In addition to this there are twenty-four combination pistons—eight for each manual and eight for the pedal; three piston couplers which couple the pedal pistons to the manual pistons, some never in couple. All pistons of some numbers, two union silent couplers and two second touch "on" and "off" couplers.

The pipes and percussion instruments are enclosed in their expression boxes three inches thick, with individual shutter action arranged so that the last shutter must be wide open before the total amount of tone emanates from the boxes. For the roll operator there is the double-tracker player with two different ways of bringing out solo effects from standard music rolls. This part of the instrument is operated by the usual roll controlling devices, twelve couplers and fourteen percussion finger keys. When the instrument is being played by hand the rolls are covered by the music rack.

The Value of Fire Protection for the Theatre Cannot be Over-estimated

Care Should Be Exercised That the Correct Type is Selected to Give Greatest Protection

A FEW sparks or a little smoke in a theatre can start a panic where hundreds of lives may be lost. In the Iroquois theatre fire at Chicago and the Rhodes theatre fire at Boyertown, Pa., the fire itself caused comparatively little loss of life. It was in the mad rush for the exits that hundreds lost their lives.

When fires occur in a theatre it is imperative to get it out quickly before the audience knows what is happening. With the fire out at the start there is small chance for damage or a panic.

Reliable hand fire extinguishers make this comparatively easy. Nowadays nearly everyone knows what a fire extinguisher is and how it works, and in the theater adequately protected someone will catch the fire when it is small and put it out.

There are two types of hand fire extinguishers. The one-quart pump type uses a liquid which, when it reaches the fire, is changed into a heavy gas. It cuts off the oxygen supply and puts it out. The soda-acid type generates carbon dioxide gas in sufficient pressure within the extinguisher to expel 2½ gallons of water which the extinguisher contains. Each type has its separate field and is recommended for use on certain kinds of fires.

The one-quart type is effective on electrical fires or fires in highly inflammable materials, like motion picture films, paints, varnishes, gasoline, oils, etc. For this reason they are used in projection booths or where fires may start from a short circuit or in highly inflammable materials like scenery or painted curtains. This type of extinguisher will not freeze. It needs no recharging except after use and is very light and easy to operate.

The soda-acid type extinguisher is used wherever it is necessary to wet down the fire. This type should not be used on an electrical fire as the current may travel back along the stream and reach the operator. It is not efficient on fires of highly inflammable substances like motion picture films, oils, paints and varnishes as water only spreads such fires. Soda-acid extinguishers to be efficient should be recharged after use and at least once every twelve months.

It is difficult to make any general statement as to what fire protection a theatre needs. Many different types of buildings are used for motion picture theatres. It is obvious that the modern theatre building with fire proof construction throughout presents a smaller fire hazard than an old building of wooden construction.

Theatre owners should not hesitate to consult their local fire chief or insurance inspector. Fire departments are always willing to give advice in such matters and they can be depended upon to inform the theatre owner of the fire protection he requires.

Rialto Opens in Aurora

The opening of Aurora's new 1,400-seat house, the Rialto, was a real gala event in that city and attracted many out-of-town visitors.

One hundred thousand dollars had been spent in rebuilding a former skating rink into this magnificent up-to-date theatre by the Aurora Theatres Company, Inc., which can well be proud of the results obtained.

The officers of the Aurora Theatres Company are Frank Thielan, president; Jewels J. Rubens, treasurer, and W. D. Burford, secretary and managing director. Edwin Lewis, resident manager, is in active charge of the new house.

The entire lobby of the theatre was crowded with beautiful floral pieces and the house was full to capacity when the first program started.

Howells Projection Room
Well Equipped

The exhibition room of David P. Howells, Inc., on the eleventh floor of the Godfrey building has been equipped as a model demonstration salon for Howells Cine Equipment Company by Joe H. Hornstein, general manager of the equipment company.

The projection booth is equipped with three Simplex machines of the latest type and equipped with every available accessory designed for perfect projection. Mr. Hornstein himself is a recognized authority on projection and he has secured an expert projectionist to handle the equipment.

In addition to its uses as a demonstration room for Howells Cine Equipment Company, the room will be used for the exhibition of pictures for foreign buyers by David P. Howells, Inc.

The room is furnished with a Gold Fibre screen. The room's furnishings are wicker. The chairs are of the arm chair type covered with cretonne.

Arrangements have been made whereby the room will be used for testing various new appliances patented for projection purposes and new equipment found satisfactory will be adopted from time to time.

Joe C. Hornstein, general manager of Howells Cine Equipment Company, left last Friday on a week's trip to Cleveland, Chicago and Detroit where he will confer with the manufacturers of equipment which is handled in foreign territory by the Howells organization.

32. Kenneth Macgowan. New Republic, vol. 12, p. 188, Sept. 15, 1917. Formerly the motion picture studios gave the effect of flat, almost footlight scenes, but the new effect—an American made device—introduces natural lighting from windows, doorways and lamps. This enables sharp stearing shadows to be produced in scenes of terror or soft luminous shadows to stimulate the pleasing evening lighting. Again the new lighting can be so arranged to concentrate on the acting and avoid the effect of camera consciousness which is introduced by the old camera for concentrating the attention on the actors. He says that art in the motion pictures arises chiefly from sequence of pictorial impressions but more especially from lighting atmosphere.
Screen Credit

By PHILIP E. ROSEN

Mr. Philip E. Rosen was for three years the president of the Camera Club of New York City, and after coming to Los Angeles, organized the AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CINEMATOGRAPHERS, of which he has been the only president.

He has been a cinematographer for eight years, working with such stars as Lionel Barrymore, Valeska Suratt, Nance O'Neil, Theda Bara, Lillian Walker, Madge Kennedy, Margaret Selby, Madge Petrou, and Robert Mantell. His most famous picture was the "Miracle Man," of which we all know. He is now directing at the Universal Film Company.

To the motion picture fan the cameraman is the unknown factor in the motion picture. The faces of the popular actor and actress we all know; with the names of Griffith and Neelan, Tournier and Allan Dwan we are all familiar; but when we admire the wonderful photography in a production, how many can say who made the pictures? Do you know that this silent, unseen worker plans for the picture before the actor begins his work, by studying the script, helping to plan the sets and selecting location? When actual production begins he works long hours, often all night, carrying all responsibility for the photography, and often after that is completed, he supervises the cutting of the picture.

If he has reached a high position in his calling, his name appears on the screen together with that of the director and technical workers. This is a public recognition from producer and director. Then—the picture goes to the exhibitor. When it is thrown on the screen usually the name of the cinematographer has been cut out, to shorten the picture five seconds.

We cannot believe that the exhibitor realizes the disheartening fact that this has upon the man who has put weeks and often months of enthusiastic study and labor into a production, only to have the exhibitor ignore his efforts. To a man of sensitive artistic nature this action cuts deep.

We are not working for salary alone, and appreciate recognition and encouragement from the industry and public.

The Work of the Cinematographer

By HUGH C. McCUNGL

Following are a few excerpts from a lecture prepared and delivered by Mr. McCungl, a cinematographer of wide experience and unquestioned ability.

For 18 months he was with Douglas Fairbanks. Among his pictures made during that time were "Rudolph Valentino," "Toddy South," and "วิเคร Young Fellow." Recently he made, "Overland Red" and "Bullet Proof," with Harry Carey. He is now with David Butler.

Photography is the youngest of the arts, but there is hardly a branch of art or science that is not in debt to it. Drawing and painting have been greatly influenced by it.

Photography has been enshrined by it, the meteorologist, the physiologist, the pathologist, the scholar, the traveller, not to mention the Army and the Navy, and it indispensable. Every frame that has importance as a spreader of valuable knowledge is emphasized and as a means of entertainment it has no rival.

In the early days of the motion picture industry, photography was looked upon as an ordinary mechanical process and no thought was given to the artistic side of it. How times have changed! Now hundreds of pictures are sold on the merit of the photography, the action of the play being decidedly weak.

As an example of the ignorance of the public regarding the requirements of a cameraman, may I be excused for relating a personal incident? Not long ago we were engaged in making a series of scenes in an interior on an open stage and our work was followed with interest by several spectators. When we had finished our sequence and were waiting for a change of costume, one of the spectators stepped up in front of the screen. The following conversation ensued:

What do they pay you in your line of work? "Oh, from $75 to $300 a week." "You mean per month." "No, I mean per week." "Gee, I'd like to get a job here taking pictures. Any chance? "What experience have you had?" "Oh, lots." "On the camera?" "N-no." "Have you had any laboratory experience?" "I can't say I have." "Have you a kodak and do you do your own work?" "Not yet. Do you have to know all these things just to stand there and turn that handle?" "What is the first requisite of a good cameraman?" "That he as soon as he sets to work about this he could not accomplish anything. It seems hardly necessary to speak of concentration, for in this business more than in almost any other it is a most important qualification. Are these the only qualities that are needy? No, the cameraman must have speed, judgment, diplomacy, patience, ingenuity, resourcefulness and courage. The greatest necessity for speed is illustrated in the gathering of events of importance for the pictorial news weekly, fires, accidents, etc., but speed is equally as necessary in dramatic work.

In viewing a picture replete with thrills, you have swayed to one side to avoid an automobile or given an explanation at the near approach of your express train rushing head on, or you have "thanked" to escape theacrolein which apparently swept right out into the audience. During all this you were sitting in a comfortable chair—where do you think the cameraman was? In the space and not the regular diet of a cinematographer's life, but, notwithstanding, there is hardly a day that passes in which there is not more or less risk.

How would you like to put on a life belt and be lowered down the side of a cliff to get a scene? Or with tripod and camera lashed on the hood of an automobile driven at 60 miles an hour by an inexperienced driver? Or with hardly foot room in which to balance yourself amid a sky-scrapers for special scenes? Or ride the rods inside a box car, photographing the "train" on the brake beam with the train doing 40 miles an hour? Or be stripped in an airplane with the pilot executing every fancy stunt he knows? These and many other risks are among the things a cameraman may be called upon any day to do.

Granted that your cameraman has all the foregoing characteristics, are these all the qualities he needs? No, and this last requirement of all is one which is beyond mere knowledge and skill. It is the power to give life to his work, to breathe the imagination and emotion that is in him—it is a creative faculty which is the spontaneous outpouring of his inner, spiritual self. This is what makes an artist—no more, no less.

For centuries multitudes have gathered about the works of painters and sculptors, uplifted and inspired. We of today are modeling with lights and shadows, giving you not only beautiful composition, perspective, atmosphere and setting, but we make each picture a living breathing example of the art of the cinematographer.

Do not infer that I consider photography the most important element that enters into the making of a picture—but there can be no great or successful picture without adequate photography.

We are striving to "make our work mean something more than a fat pocket-book; to express an idea, beautiful or startling, or practically helpful; to put something into the world through our work which will have permanent value—this is real success."

What the A.S.C. Is Doing

That is the slogan that is carrying the American Society of Cinematographers into a national campaign of education to prove to the theatre owners that the name of the cameraman is valuable to the screen.

Philip Rosen, president of the American Society of Cinematographers, is communicating with every theatre owner in the country.

"The name of a cinematographer on the screen puts him under obligation to do good work," said Rosen. "If the producer does not use the cinematographer's name he is opening the gates for indifferent, slip-shod photography. If the exhibitor cuts off the cameraman's name he is using the soft pedal on one of the best advertising angles that any picture has."

Rosen has been largely responsible for the privileges accorded producers of using the crest of the society upon films photographed by a member.

The American Society of Cinematographers is regarded as the most exclusive organization in the world. It is composed of sixty-one A.S.C. members who were invited to membership following several pictures of unusual photographic merit.

Rosen, who was one of the founders, was a cameraman before he was chosen by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, to direct Universal features.
Music for Your Theatre

By Charles D. Isaacson

It seems as if we must all become musical impresarios! Men who innocently bought a motion picture theatre, find that there is so much more to the showing of the film than merely putting it on the screen, that they begin to wonder. There’s the lighting of the house, the development of novelties and the music.

The last of these is a big enough subject to ponder on for many serious hours. Music and the motion picture have become such firm friends, that you can scarcely think of the one without the other.

You yourself recognize the fact. You are possibly using music yourself in some sort of way.

But you want to know more about music, you want to understand the subtleties of the art which has so powerful an influence on the soul of the audiences. You want to be in touch with the spread of musical interest that is entering the homes of your people. You want, in other words, to know something of the technique of music, something of the human aspects of music, that you may use it with a keener appreciation of its possibilities.

It will be with the intention of making your theatre more complete with music, that this department will be conducted. Except for the purpose of example, I will not attempt to give programmatic suggestions on random films. The cue sheets are prepared for that purpose. They are generally efficient, although for one, I feel that they are not always as well made as they might be.

I am not writing to the musicians of the theatres, but to the owners and the managers. The musicians will find here set down the arguments they have sought, to win the more cordial support of their executives. But the owners and the managers will read the things they have been wondering about. Why this musical idea? Why all this fuss about musical settings? Why the effect on audiences when music is provided with the film? Why all the strange excitement to offer orchestras, orchestralizations, musical novelties, operatic selections? Why concerts with motion pictures? What’s it all about?

You want your theatre to make as much money as it can. I am a musician who loves motion pictures and a motion picture man who understands music. But I am not sufficiently removed from the good old terra firma; I am not so much in the clouds that I am not always able to keep my eye on the box office.

Now, music gives voice to a wordless speech. It gives utterance to a universal expression of emotions. If the film is happy, bright, cheerful, music puts the audience in the mood. If the film is sad, then appropriate music immediately gets the sympathy of the audience, and keeps them in the proper spirit. If the audience feels the emotion the actors are supposed to feel, the way is smooth. If the audience feels gay and the episode becomes sad, it is not always easy to change the state of mind. Of course great acting does have its effect on the audience. But great acting—any kind of acting—needs “local” applications to assist it.

In the course of further articles, I will develop this point. I am going to analyze the emotional effects of music, by showing incidents and experiments which I have conducted, thus pointing out to you in a reasonable, logical manner, the way in which you can adapt and adopt the idea. You will be able to understand the scientific reasons behind the musical setting, to judge for yourself if your cue sheet is right, if your musical director is using good material; and you will be able to suggest good ideas that will inevitably come to you.

It isn’t necessary for you to be a musician in order that you be a good showman who uses music properly. It is only necessary for you to understand the psychology of music, its effects on the mind, the body, the spirit of men. It is only necessary that you have a general appreciation of the vast literature of music which is at your disposal to use as you will. It is only necessary that you have a little intimacy with the musical instruments so that you can intelligently decide for yourself whether a large or small orchestra will do, whether you ought to augment the daily needs on certain special occasions, or whether you can get along with a piano and violin and a singer, or whether an organ or an orchestra would be just the thing, or whether a phonograph or a player-piano would be a good substitute. It is only necessary that you have a trilling acquaintance with the musical activities of the country, so that you can go ahead and fit your offerings into the groove of necessities and demands.

It is my earnest belief that you can use music as an advertisement for your theatre—making it your definite and fixed aim to capitalize for yourself that amazing in-

“Good Music is Essential to Good Pictures”

—DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

In the biography of Mr. Griffith Issued by the Exhibitor’s Trade Review the famous Director says—

“Special music for the photo-play? Very essential. Indeed quite indispensable. The best of pictures would seem tame without musical accompaniment. In my judgment it is necessary for an orchestra to play throughout the entire picture, in order to give the various themes adequate representation.”

THE ESTEY THEATRE ORGAN

is used in the largest motion picture houses—such as the Capitol in New York. It is also a boon to smaller houses that cannot maintain a number of musicians, because the Estey plays every type of music with all the effect of a full orchestra—yet one man can operate it.

An Estey is not as expensive as you may have thought. Ask us what it will cost to install one in your theatre—no matter what its seating capacity.

5. "Bohemia," a one-step, by Ethel Brooker. (Th-Boston Music Co.)

6. "Adolescence," by F. C. Collinge, a beautiful number of rather a light character, available for love themes, society drama, etc. (Belwin, Inc.)

7. "Everybody's Buddy," a fox trot, going great in New York. (Stark & Cowan, Inc.)

8. "I'm a Dreamer that's Chasing Bubbles," by Little-Magine. (Jack Mills, Inc.)

10. "La Veda," a Castilian fox trot. The only one of its kind. (J. H. Remick.)

That Cat-Step

Belwin, Inc., has just issued a composition entitled "That Cat-Step." It is a number of unique musical construction to which the famous ballet master, Mr. Alexis Kedoff, has adapted a ballroom dance bearing the same name, "That Cat Step." The number is composed by Louis Breau, and Ray Henderson. It is an appropriate number for motion picture musicians when accompanying cabaret and society scenes. In every case where cabaret scenes predominate musicians resort to fox trott, one-steps, etc., and the use of "That Cat Step" music for such occasions will undoubtedly give elaborate cabaret scenes a new and novel coloring which will be most appropriate and interesting for the audience.
The Complete Plan Book
Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

(Two Christie and Three Gavety Comedies—One Reel Each)

These comedies hit a higher average than some of the one-reelers reviewed recently. They are short and snappy and are sure to act as a tonic for the mind, especially in the coming hot weather when the lighter form of entertainment is sought for.

The Christie Comedies are, "A Home Made Hero," featuring Eddie Barry, Dorothy Devere and Carl Rodney, showing the popularity of a young "would-be" life saver with the ladies, until it is discovered that he cannot swim, when he becomes desi and unpopular and "That Darn Yarn," featuring Bobby Vernon with Vera Stedman. The latter comedy has an amusing story in which a young woman becomes suspect of her husband, who has a passion for poker parties, determines to find out his habits. When she loved one leaves home on one of his rampages, she places a ball of yarn in his pocket, the trail from which leads the devoted wife into many difficulties as she proceeds through the streets wandering and rewinding.

The Gavety comedies are "Dry and Thrifty," featuring Billy Bletcher with Vera Raymonds, the title being explanatory of its story. "Calling His Bluff," featuring George Ovey, showing the way in which a young wife gets even with her husband who is a bit wayward and "Dropped Into Scandal," featuring George Ovey, who gets himself into a lot of difficulties because of his flirtations ways.

The comedies are not of the rough, slapstick variety but are rather of the farce comedy element, having a pretty little story around which the action evolves.

The comedians are surrounded with the usual quota of pretty girls in many of the comedies, whose beautiful forms and vivacious manners act in splendid contrast to the comedy work done by the principals.

"The Man Who Lost Himself"
(Feature Production Starring William Faversham—Produced by Selznick)

"The Man Who Lost Himself," William Faversham has found a vehicle which fits his personality to excellent advantage and which will provide entertainment for most audiences despite the fact that the production says to a considerable degree toward its tag and is rather illogical when it comes to plot.

The idea that an American "drummer" could impersonate an Englishman to such an extent that the latter's immediate relatives including his mother and wife would not discover his identity is hardly possible no matter how much physical resemblance the two might have but it does provide an opportunity for plotting the characters of the story into a lot of interesting incident and carries suspense up to the time when it becomes necessary to make provision for the elimination of the eternal romance. From this point on the picture is mechanical and uninteresting.

However so much that is really first class has transpired previously that the offering may be considered better than an average program future.

The star is somewhat theatrical at times and the camera does not treat him any too kindly but he plays with more screen finesse than in "The Silver King," and displays a skill as a comedian that is entirely commendable.

The cast which has been provided in Mr. Faversham's support is flawless with special credit being due Mrs. De Wolfe Hopper as the wife of the lord whom the American impersonates.

The direction is definitely old-fashioned, too many long shots of no particular value being made and the photography might be better. These points are, however, probably minor when considered from an audience viewpoint.

The story is unusually well-kept, its logic not being considered. An American salesman stranded in London bears a striking resemblance to a dissolute English lord. The two meet. The Englishman gets the American drunk, changes clothes with him and sends the Yankee to his home with a letter telling him to become Lord Rochester and then commits suicide. The salesman displays good business judgment and thereby saves the impoverished Rochester family their possessions, falls in love with the dead lord's wife and at last confesses to the impersonation. In the end he marries the widow.

The picture is an adaptation of the novel by H. de Vere Stacpoole with Clarence Badger directing.

J. S. Dickerson.

"Father's Close Shave"
(Bringing Up Father Series—Pathé—Two Reels)

The second of the "Bringing Up Father" series of comedies, entitled "Father's Close Shave," has not come any closer to the half's eye than the first which went wide of the mark. The weakness appears to be in the material, there being no semblance of a story. The comedy is devoid of humorous incident because there are no situations. The cast, headed by Johnny Ray, puts a great deal of effort in striving for spontaneity, but no results are obvious. If they could only get father doing something which is really funny there would be no question of the piece getting over.

As in the initial offering a prologue and epilogue are introduced which show a group of negro boys reading the funny page, and the intervening action disclosing the George Mc-Mahan figures humanized. Father is in "dutch" again with his better half and he goes through several new stunts which are too obviously planted to bring forth laughter. Instead of the piece developing with an idea it seems as if the players are waiting for something to do. The result is it has an uneven appearance. Some girls cutting dikes on the beach are more interesting than the funmakers. Comedy business is lacking throughout.

Johnny Ray is funny when he indulges in his peculiar laugh, but there are times when he gives too much attention to mugging. As the cartoons are familiar to most newspaper readers, they will undoubtedly have a drawing power. But they won't set a house rocking with laughter unless some ideas are incorporated.

—Laurence Reid.

"THE WONDER MAN"
(Robertson-Cole)

Picture Carries Interest and a Colorful Personality

The exhibitor who books this feature should look first for its exploitation possibilities. The name of Georges Carpentier means much. The Frenchman makes his screen debut in "The Wonder Man" which is simply a made-to-order picture. In fact its sole purpose is to convey to the public the idea of his fighting quality. And if a story is expressly manufactured for him, with himself as surface may be too invaluable in theme and treatment, nevertheless the plot will be subordinated to personal interest in the star.

People will want to see what kind of a fellow he is--how capable an actor and fighter. The story may "go hang" under these circumstances. His sponsors, however, have chosen the right material since he is presented in a swashbuckler of an international flavor. He is one of a French Secret Service agent through whom it is his duty to make the object of unwarranted suspicion. While the plot is an exciting experience, Carpentier indulges in some generous samples of his fistic profession. The villain is the amateur heavyweight of the club and he challenges the star for wigwag honors.

The fight between them is the outstanding feature and certainly will prove entertaining. Grouped around the ring are the usual arts of gentlemen and ladies and Georges is having the worst of it until a note is slipped to him that his sweetheart wants him to win. Then he makes short work of his opponent. His agility in the ring is giving him plenty of admirers. And when the plot is reintroduced, his real identity is established and the culprits are caught. The story is a surprise, but the action-fighter impresses with his sincerity and ability. But Binnie as the heroine doesn't have much to do, but her expressive emotions are strikingly portrayed.

The fight stuff will carry the weight and all the other details are set in an expensive, lavish scale that will help to "class" to your patrons.

M attained world prominence while still a challenger for the world's title. Why he is the "Wonder Man."

The star, as the hero, plays the part of a French Secret Service agent. The plot carries the elements of romance, mystery and the action and story gives Carpentier the opportunity to display his capacity as a boxer and as a sportsman of the first order. Included in the story are gripping action in the ring, remarkable realism, cutting incidents gripping love interest, and the romance is equalled. The story is swift and compact and he has provided it with good settings and photography.

PROGRAM READER

The idol of France—the heavyweight champion of Europe—Georges Carpentier will appear at the theaters next— "The Wonder Man."

The portrait of the idol is a part of the French fight in an American survey of not only his fighting but also his fighting life, which is treated with uniformity of his country, photography and the romance are things that appeal to the American public. And the story is good, too. The story is equalled by this story, and the romance is equalled by the story. The idol of France is the idol of America and the idol of Georges Carpentier's career is equalled by the idol of France and the idol of Georges Carpentier's career.

"FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL"
(Anonymous)

Colorful Production Carries Little Entertainment Value

Equity has given some expense in providing Clara Kimball Young with an artistic production and had a story been found that matched up to her emotional talent or one that provided an interesting plot the expense would have paid its full worth. But it has not been in vain. As it is it tells of old California in a story which Spanish missions is mighty familiar and lacking in any vital quality. There is no such description for one thing. And the plot is hindered with unnecessary detail which makes the frail action difficult to understand. The theme is based upon the redemption of one soul, the heroine, a convent-bred girl, promising her to marry the layman's wayward son and give him spiritual uplift.

But the role doesn't offer Miss Young a chance to appear other than as a colorless individual who experiences undisturbed suffering before she is reunited to her lover. The plot is a routine one. She eludes death of her husband. She has saved the American from the Indians through its tribal custom and had nursed him through his injury. Before he is able to find happiness with her, he is reconciled to his past wrongs. The continuity is uneven at times because stress is laid upon some political situations or emphasizing some point which has nothing to do with the action. The story carries none of that vitality or vivacity so characteristic of Spanish life.

With the exception of the swamp, Rafael, played with effective dash and vigor, the characters are lacking in personality. And the failings of the story, the heartrending detail are not compensated for by the colors and settings. The director certainly has failed with this atmosphere. The reproductions and costumes are faultless. But the drama story and picturesque background fail in giving entertainment value when the story is a struggle. There are some scenes which are shown the heroes acceptance of the American hospitality and affair in their new lives. But another conception of a spectator which depletes a wild spirit of Rafael's activities on the eve of his wedding. The picture will come from and where did they disappear to—when the exterior presents a scene in the wilderness miles from nowhere? Good editing would have helped matters a lot.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Clara Kimball Young, who is considered one of the screen's greatest emotional actresses, will appear in the—"The Soul of Rafael." This is an adaptation by Miss Kimball of Marah Ellis Ryan's novel of California in the days of Spanish missions. The story is a stirring romance—one that may be called the ideal vehicle for the expression of the star's personality and talents. Her dark beauty enables her to extend her possibilities.

The star plays the part of a convent-bred girl who is pledged by her guardian to marry the latter's son, Rafael, and watch over as her soul during her lifetime. Marta is deeply religious and when she discovers that Raoul is a waster who is in love with an American adventurer, Kyle Bryant, she nurses the special significance in matters of love, Marta is unhappy with her husband and..."

“DOLLARS AND THE WOMAN”
(Vitagraph)

Character Development Emphasized in Interesting Picture

This picture may be found to have the unique fault of being too good for the average audience, since it is produced in such a way as to cater to the exclusion of vigorous physical action. It is, however, a splendid picture of its type. Alice Joyce is one hundred per cent satisfying, Robert Gordon is perfect in his difficult role, and his fine performance clearly shows that Clarence Kent is a genuine talent when given the opportunity. The story of the woman's life is told with such a gentle, good sequence and the character-revealing sub-titles help to make it a feature of the most artistic class.

The story is by Albert Payson Terhune, and the locale is New York City, first picturing its society life, and later shifting to the East Side, where the young couple, reduced in circumstances, are forced to suffer, and become more deeply in sympathy with the characters of the film. Alice Joyce is the self-sacrificing wife, and Gordon the husband, selfish and self-centered without knowing it. He leaves his wife, at her own insistence, poverty-stricken and alone, to sell his invention in the West, and returns wealthless to find himself in a new world. But, haunted by Alice, he fears that another poverty-stricken woman will refuse to leave her tenement home, the suitor of the wife's, who has played the kind Samaritan, unknown to her, steps into the story and the star is forced to choose between the two in the interest of their infant son forces husband and wife to part. Yet may therefore have a vague feeling that the picture did not end right. For the lonely husband is made more sympathetic than the selfish husband.

The direction is as high class as the cast, and with such a good basic story, and the life-changing series of incidents, it should be given to the higher class of picture patrons. The atmosphere is well created, the acting is accurate, the situation picture was made in New York. —Length, 6 reels. —Malcolm A. Taylor.

THOU ART THE MAN
(Paramount-Arcaart)

Warwick Starr in "The Man"

A half of this picture, more pleasingly due to the fact that the story is told by the boy, is made by the same company and produced by the same director in 'The Man'. It is a prize picture of its type, something new and different, with the hero falily-nurtured of being implicated in a robbery, goes to prison, and his brother makes a deal with opportunity. Robert Warwick is cast in the leading role of the boy, but is not given much opportunity to display his talents. The story evolves around the boy rather than allowing him to participate in the action. Lois Wilson is an attractive leading woman, but she too is not given anything to do.

The direction is by Thomas Helfron from a story adapted by Margaret Turnbull of which E. F. Mills is the author.

From the standpoint of production the picture ranks high. Beautiful treatments add to the artistic effect, and the details of the story with the best of photography and done much to make the picture attractive. We assume that the picture was made in Florida, but the photographs realistic in background could have been secured if the company had journeyed there. A police patrol, probably the one at Jacksonville is used in shifting some scenes.

All in all the production will stand by as an average film, suitable for any class of theater. The title seems to us to be misleading, but is suitable for the sort of picture it is, a romantic drama with a sentimental background. —Length, 5 reels. —J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Robert Warwick, the Paramount-Arcaart star, will appear at the box office on July 1 with the picture "Thou Art the Man," which has been given a great deal of advertising and is expected to be a success. One of the reasons is Alice Joyce, the star, and if you do not already believe that this beautiful actress is the most interesting personality on the screen, you will after you see this picture. Another reason is the story, by Albert Payson Terhune. It is a timely and absorbing story of American life, the story of the back-breaking struggle of the workers and the hopeless saving of millions of men and women by the depression. In the plot, it is a case of a young woman who finds a way to raise the fortunes of her family. She becomes the wife of a man who is a failure, and in the struggle, she becomes a success. This picture is a great deal of advertising and is expected to be a success.

SUGGESTIONS

devote a great deal of your advertising to the Alice Joyce following. Show a photograph of her in the program. The story is by Robert Gordon, and directed by George Tefft, makes it a picture that will be hard to equal. —Malcolm A. Taylor.

THE COURAGE OF MARGE O’DOONE

Vitagraph

Comes a Western (call it a Northwestern) to the screen which for its picturesque quality hasn’t been equalled in many a day. The scenic grandeur, the vast reaches of snow and mountains, the rugged character of the landscapes prove a rich background for one of James Oliver Curwood’s stories of the Northwest. While there is no marked originality of theme or treatment in "The Courage of Marge O’Doone," the director, David Smith, has so embellished it as to make fire touches and scenic effects that its familiarity never becomes noticeable. It is a simple story—one of Curwood’s. Carrying for its theme the pluck and courage of a young girl who is oppressed by primitive brutes, the plot accumulates in interest and tension due to its progression a fine flavor of dramatic conflict, a spiritual note, an element of pathos and some redolent action.

All the ingredients which compose a story laid up in No-Man’s Land of the North. You find good men—bad men—men and mean coworkedly—men, brave and bold, and Barrie—a wolf-dog and a wolf-dog calmly pugnacious. It is a story of primitive passion, yet its spiritual quality always dominant. A vicious trigger takes advantage of a friend’s absence by abduction the wife and child. When the woman’s reason returns she rushes back to her cabin. It is too late, however, for O’Doone, overcome with grief, takes up the long white trail. There is no murder in his heart. In fact he becomes a missionary whose sole object is to help the sorrowful—the depressed find themselves. The trapper in his haste to avoid the man’s vengeance journeys to the vast regions where there is no sign of human civilization.

The girl grows up and is disposed of to an assortment of brutes. Searching for her is a young Easterner who had gone North to forget his broken romance. He had found her picture and a note detailing her whereabouts. The girl only protector is a grizzly. After a series of primitive conflicts between the good and the evil, the grizzly—the girl is reunited to her parents. The vivid action, the vital elements of nature and self-sacrifice make one forget time and place. The cast is excellent. Those who contribute lifelike performances are Pauline Starke, Niles Welch, Jack Curtis, and George Stanley. Length—6 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the greatst of James Oliver Curwood’s famous stories of the Northwest will be shown at the... This Vitagraph production is different from anything previously produced even though it deals with primitive emotions as they are found in the great open spaces. It is entitled "The Courage of Marge O’Doone," and is presented by a cast of prominent players headed by Pauline Starke and Niles Welch. The atmosphere of the film is one of the primitive passions of the characters.

The story concerns a man who braves the dangers of snow and ice to rescue a courageous girl who is helping her enemies at bay with the aid of a trained bear. The story is vividly told, and the action is skillfully directed. The plot is well developed, and the characters are well drawn.

"The Courage of Marge O’Doone" is a picture of the frozen North—where only the most fit survive. A picture with redolent action.

CATCH LINES

"HUSBANDS AND WIVES"

(Gaumont)

Slight Story Carries Few Interesting Moments

In bringing Vivian Martin back to the screen, after a long absence, Gaumont hasn’t produced anything with anything startling in picture material, and though the producers deserve credit for giving her out of glitz roles with which she was accustomed in the past, the story is too slight to permit her to show any marked success in a different characterization. The only appealing quality about the offering is found in the charming personality of the star. She certainly gives it tone even though she fails to arouse sympathy toward the representation of the girl whose sole purpose in life is to satisfy her vanity.

The plot is based upon the conflict of the sexes and attempts to show that a good husband is one who dares to live upon a plane of equality with his wife. The idea is a good one, but it may stray here because so much attention is given to expressing it in terms of physical sides. The subtitles are full of bromides and the husband cuts a sorry figure because he may be "walking bromide." One minute he venge toward censure and the next he is a "good husband." The film was given out in a most gentlemanly manner. The best part of the story are told in the South. The heroine is a Northern girl, quite sophisticated and extremely selfish, independent as she is vain, and rich in worldly possessions.

The drama is found in his effort to tame her. And this is where the picture falters. The husband is a perpetual scold and considerate of the action is given up to his tiresome platitudes. An attempt is made to bring out points of humor but these fail to score. Introducing a group of nondescript good-natured, whose object is to pick the young bride to pieces does not give it the necessary necessary, which is the climax depics the newly-weds reunited after a brief separation, both having a desire for the virtues and for the faults. It strikes us that the bride has a desire for the virtues, which is the climax depics the newly-weds reunited after a brief separation, both having a desire for the virtues and the faults. It strikes us that the bride has a desire for the virtues.

The picture has been developed along lines it would have been, undeniably, furnished better entertainment. There is no escape from the obvious way to make it effective as a straightforward drama. Length—5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Vivian Martin, the dainty star, who has been absent from the screen for a long time, has returned in a story that makes her as fascinating as her fragrant personality. The picture is an adaptation of Curwood's "The Courage of Marge O'Doone." The story is about a young girl who jumps into a marriage with the same careless indifference that she enters an adventure. The main conflict of the sexes, and shows how a husband attempts to tame his wife with the latter of the two extreme men of the character. The story is directed by Joseph Levering, who directed the film with a sure hand. The picture is "Husbands and Wives" and stars dainty Vivian Martin. At this theatre.

PROGRAM READER

Oliver Thurston belongs to the butterfly type of girlhood and aside from living only to spend money and have a good time, she was considerably independent. One day she met a man who fascinated her and eloped with him. But when she came to his house she was disillusioned to find that he was in the stories of poverty. Besides, the narrowness of the small town environment palled on her and she was driven through her mind. Oliver Thurston, the heroine, is a girl who has lived among the poor and who has been driven into a different atmosphere. The picture is "Husbands and Wives" and stars dainty Vivian Martin. At this theatre.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a catchy title that can mean a lot in your patrons if you exploit it for its full possibilities. Tell that the story is based upon the conflict of the sexes as it is presented in the home. Bring out the fact that she is believed in the old-fashioned standards that a wife should obey, while her husband is expected to be equal. The story is a satire in a semi-serious fashion. Tell that the picture is a comedy-drama of the conflict of the sexes in an unequal situation. Plays up Vivian Martin, telling that she has been absent from the screen for a long time and has returned with all her former fragrance and has been driven into a different atmosphere. Bring out that she wears a number of exquisite gowns. Play up the atmosphere of the story, relating that the picture is laid in the South.
Too Much Mystery in Confusing Crook Picture

Helen Marlowe, the girl detective who has been murdered by one of the thieves, better fortune might have made the story more explicit, as would more human semiconductor. Some of these read like a scholastic essay. Again one flashback is so crude that the idea will be lost to some.

A great lack is the absence of a love story. The romance that isn't there is going to be truly missed. Marguerite Marsh is the star, but it is not given much opportunity and Charles Middleton, as the chief crook, plays it in a way that doesn't convince. On the whole it is a rather crude detective story with many complications that it can hardly keep up the interest. Length, 5 reels.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Wits vs. Wits," the latest production starring Marguerite Marsh, will be shown at the theatre on Friday night. It deals with a gang of criminals and their final arrest and conviction by a clever girl detective.

Marguerite Marsh, played by Marguerite Marsh, whose father has been murdered by one of the thieves, decides to assist the authorities. By means of information from the police headquarters, she is able to recover a lost ring and thereby convict the crooks. Length, 5 reels.

PROGRAM READER

When you book this feature your one best bet is Max Linder, who was so well known a few years ago for his work in Essanay pictures.

Max Linder's latest vehicle is in form of pep and ginger and is taken from the musical comedy of the same name which played a long season in New York a few years ago and which was headed by Hazen. In his new role Linder is seen as a woman who falls heir to two million francs but is unable to give up his job without paying a forfeit. This he refuses to do and as a consequence has to stick to his old job by day and in the night enjoy the life of a millionnaire.

His new work leads him into many difficulties and he soon discovers that his employer's wife is in love with his employer's daughter for whom he sacrifices everything, even his fortune.

The cast is a strong one and is headed by the director which is good in the comedy situations.

"THE RETURN OF TARZAN"
(Numa-Goldwyn)

Fantastic Picture Fails to Meet Expectations

EVER since the good impression was made with the novel and fantastic "Tarzan of the Apes," the sponsors have tried to duplicate it by presenting a sequel called "The Return of Tarzan." Whether the fault rests with the script or the screen version, it is evident that the screen version has failed to capture the imagination of the audience. It is evident that the screen version has failed to capture the imagination of the audience.

The spirit of the story is not conveyed until three or four reels have passed, when the audience is thankful that Tarzan is back with the birds and beasts. And then even Gene Pollar's impersonation fails in its psychological interpretation. He appears to be as contented away from the jungle as in it. The picture sort of bewilders the spectator at the start, due to the introduction of so many characters, with a few bearing no relation to one another. It seems to be the end of the majesty and his promise of Tarzan in some way. And during an ocean voyage he shoves overboard. This scene will be described by the close observer, since the ship is apparently in the middle of the ocean. Yet Tarzan with the aid of a plank is seen floating to his jungle bench with the very next shot. This is the start of "Tarzan of the Apes" and firmly establishes his dominant position in the jungle. His confidence is increased when he is washed up on the very beach, where he comes to his rescue and saves her from another man-eater. Two ambitious villains get their just deserts. And to all appearances Tarzan and the girl settle down to a life of happiness in the jungle. Harry Vee Minter's name is not in the picture, but he is there, and he is superb. The picture is not altogether a failure, but it is not without some serious flaws. The scenes visualizing the beach-robbers are quite fantastic. The picture carries action aplenty and a full measure of thrills which are sent out with quickness and dispatch. This may be a false starts, but it is one of the most thrilling scenes in the picture.

Organized for Your Success

Successful photoplays cannot be built on promises and publicity.

The motion picture has reached a state that demands organization, the big, intricate, highly specialized organization, which alone is capable of producing the type of photoplays that please the public and are successful at the box office.

The makers of Paramount pictures have this organization. The men at the head of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation long ago had the vision to see that the day was coming when the public would demand that the producers produce photoplays and not merely manufacture movies.

The production department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation did not spring into being overnight. It is the fruition of years of patient toil, eternal vigilance, alertness to the constant growth of the motion picture art.

It is the fruition of the combined efforts of a corps of men and women who have blended the best talent and genius of the new art with a fine loyalty to an ideal.

Only such an organization, backed by resources which place every possible facility and aid in the hands of directors, authors and stars, is capable of producing the newer and finer type of pictures which the season now closing has conclusively shown to be what the public wants.

Only such an organization can be depended on, rain or shine, hot or cold, day in and day out, week in and week out constantly to make money for exhibitors.

One Group Will Sell You Out As Quickly As The Other

Let's talk some English without chewing the words. What are any of the various producer and distributor crowds giving you when they sell you a franchise?

In addition to paying for hollow, valueless franchises you also pay for the pictures they cover—many of them pictures you wouldn't buy unless the franchise forced you to do so.

Associated Producers, Inc., isn't franchising or sub-franchising anything or anyone.

Seven powerful producers—and there will be others—have burned all the bridges that linked them to other organizations and banded irrevocably together for a long term of years. Their productions will enable any exhibitor who wishes to be free and independent to hold his theatre and escape any organization's franchise yoke.

With our first release September 12th we guarantee a minimum of thirty of the most powerful productions the industry has ever known.

You do not have to be owned, controlled or throttled by us to get our productions. We have always believed and still believe that powerful pictures, independently and cleanly sold, guarantee the success and independence of any theatre.

The chief value of a franchise is that it makes you "human collateral" for the organization that sells you the franchise and that once securely franchised you can be—have been—and will be sold out by selfish individuals who measure you only from your dollar values to themselves.

The most striking feature of the entertainment, however, was the revelation of Carpentier as an actor. As a cultured, polished gentleman he has many opportunities for distinctive action, opportunities of which he takes full advantage.—New York Tribune.

"The Fortune Teller," provides seven reels of excellent entertainment and can be listed as a sterling attraction. Its interest never slackens, and although its length exceeds that of the average feature, there isn't an inch of unnecessary padding in evidence.—Exhibitors Trade Review.

A treat is in store for all of Lew Cody's many admirers. The story might have been written for the star for it gives him every opportunity to display his skill in that delicate art—love making.—Motion Picture News.
New York Evening Telegram
By Jane Dixon

Last evening in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor, George Carpentier appeared for the cinema championship of the world. Beyond precedent of doubt his is no one-track talent.

The Carpentier picture was one of the biggest surprises Broadway has ever known. It is a chance to see a world-beater of the prize ring in a real prize fight without appearing at the ringside.

It is a chance in a million therefore that is offered to the ladies of Newark at the Strand Theatre to see not only the great French champion of the fistic art, but also to see a real prize fight with that redoubtable gentleman fighting.

Mr. Carpentier looks much more like the leading man in a Broadway musical comedy than like a brutal prizefighter.

It seems incredible that the slim boy who wears immutably tailored clothes with such ease and grace, could really be the great Carpentier. And by the time you've seen him in the soup and fish you begin to wonder if there hasn't been some mistake. But there hasn't. Mr. Carpentier is the most amiable and winsome of prize fighters.

He has a smile so heart-warming, and he makes love equal to the best. When you see the French wax in action, you realize what he actually is—a wonder-man.

New York Morning Telegraph
By Louella O. Parsons

Georges Carpentier in "The Wonder Man," was ushered into the Astor Hotel Saturday night for its week's occupancy of the Grand Ball Room.

One does not have to be up all the fine points of pugilism to enjoy Carpentier on the screen. Neither does one have to be an advocate of this particular form of sport to appreciate the young man's technique as an actor. He has all the adaptability for which the French are noted and seems to grasp the requirements of the camera with amazing aptness.

There is interesting melodrama surrounding him in a story not unlike "Under Cover," although the action has been lightened with flashes of comedy.

The boxing scenes, the piece of resistance of any Carpentier appearance, though possibly only incidental, nevertheless is the real center of interest. No play embellished with a boxing match featuring the French champion could be dull.

Carpentier looks very little like a pugilist. He might be an idealist or a reformer, but no one would ever catalog him mentally as a reformer.

This Is "The Truth!"

STAR: Madge Kennedy, whose delightful comedy mannerisms and winsome personality have endeared her to a vast public.

AUTHOR: "The Truth" is generally regarded as the best play from the pen of America's great dramatist, Clyde Fitch.

DIRECTOR: Lawrence C. Windom.

STORY: Becky Warder was an artful dodger of the truth. She told her husband flocks of little fibs. She practised on her friends and made "white" lying a fine and fascinating art.

Then one day all the half-truths, white lies and plain, downright whoppers she had told her patient hubby exploded and threatened to wreck their happiness forever.

Her best girl friend accused her of stealing her husband. A detective agency camped on her trail. Her own husband turned cold and repulsed her. There was nothing left to do but to go to her Dad in his boarding house in Baltimore.

And here takes place a final scene that will bring tears and chuckles from the stoniest audience in Christendom. The end is a surprise—a heartwarming climax to a remarkably entertaining picture.

Wisdom and Foolishness

If habits were founded on wisdom most men would be much better off. This applies especially to exhibitors who have the habit of booking photo-plays without ascertaining the kind of posters that are going to accompany them. The one reason for booking the film lies in the profits to be derived from it. Yet the amount of those profits will result from several factors—of which the play itself is only one. Another factor, and a most important one, is the poster factor. Hence to demand RITCHEY posters when booking a film is to form a habit that is based upon great wisdom. Without RITCHEY posters the profits are problematical and questionable—with RITCHEY posters they are positive and real!

For the exhibitor the poster factor is essentially simple, for all he has to know is that the posters to be supplied are RITCHEY posters. That knowledge gives him assurance that the posters in question are the perfected product of the greatest poster advertising experts in the world. Which means that they are bound to have the maximum of advertising value! They are made from just one point of view—the viewpoint afforded by the ticket window!

But the time to demand them is before the film is booked—not afterward!
Topics of the Moment

Sincere Production

"HUMORESQUE" is another picture which will advance the photoplay in the public mind because it is sincerely done. It has some beautiful and exceptional touches which also lift it decidedly above the ordinary; but it is best characterized, we believe, as an outstanding evidence of sincerity in production.

Sincerity, it seems to us, is the one word which expresses good production; and there is still, today, too little of this mainspring of creative work in most pictures.

Sincerity means smooth continuity, sustained interest, true characterization and color, and a devotion to the little things as well as the big. It makes fine pictures without great stars, great names, and the lavishment of money in general. It is the true sign of strength and ability in production.

Money as the Yardstick

We were somewhat astounded, recently, to hear a producer talk of pictures in terms only of money cost. We thought this era in production had about gone by. Is it possible that the considerable amount of new money which has entered the business recently has revived this mistaken idea?

The sheer weight of money cannot and does not make good pictures. Anyone, with any experience in production, ought to know that by this time. Nor can pictures be classified—as to their box-office capacities—by the amount of money spent upon them. Just a resume of the pictures of this year, or last year will explode this idea.

With money as the yardstick quality production will not advance any; it will decline. Money, spent recklessly in production, is a sure sign of production inability.

May we also point out this fact—it is a fact—that the producer who enters this business with the sole or main idea of taking much money out of it will never make good pictures. He may sell them well—for himself; but he won't make them well.

Let the man who talks millions promote corporations—if big corporations are necessary; the production of good pictures will rest forever with the man who has ideals and production ability and who makes money incidentally.

As for hiring such men—to make the pictures—no man can do that successfully unless he also has ideals and production ability.

Governor Coolidge

GOVERNOR COOLIDGE'S veto of the Massachusetts censorship will prove, we believe, of greatest importance to the cause of the freedom of the motion picture in this country. This highly respected state executive has a way of hitting true on every fundamental question brought before him; and his action in this instance will carry heavy weight with the executives and legislatures of other states. It goes without saying that he has and deserves the unending gratitude of this industry.

New Audiences

A DIRECTOR who has made a good name for himself was criticised recently for using archaic methods of production; and quite evidently the criticism is not only just in this one instance but applies too generally.

It hardly seems necessary to call attention to the fact that entertainment cannot get into a rut. Even motion picture audiences will not tolerate that. And, furthermore, the producer and the exhibitor today need not only the past but the future motion picture audience.

The picture must introduce new elements of artistic appeal and reach new heights of dramatic strength this year. This is no time to fall back upon pigeonhole methods.

 Everywhere, today, the picture theatre is the theatre beautiful. Thousands of new and high-class seats have been added. New and more discriminating audiences must be satisfied.

It is time to look forward not backward; and that means a look—a long look—beyond some present studio walls.

C. A. Johnston
Greatest Exhibitor Gathering in History at Cleveland

Upwards of a Thousand Exhibitors in Attendance at Notable Convention

With an exhibitor attendance increasing by leaps and bounds, from 600 on Tuesday, the opening day, to close to 1000 on Thursday, June 10, the Cleveland convention early gave proof of being the most enthusiastic and ambitious gathering of motion picture men ever assembled.

Dissection which lifted its head on but one or two occasions, and was as quickly smothered, but emphasized the fact that exhibitors had at last gathered for general betterment as a harmonious body, and that that spirit bid fair to reign throughout the convention.

From the opening session, and installation of permanent officers for the convention, through the report of the findings of the Committee of 17, and on through the following sessions at which a platform was adopted, the gathering went at the work in hand in earnest, businesslike fashion.

At the opening meeting, Tuesday afternoon, June 8, at the Winton Hotel, Sydney Cohen of New York was in the chair.

Permanent Officers

Henry H. Lustig, of Cleveland, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ Association of Northern Ohio, was nominated upon motion of C. C. Griffin, of California, seconded by A. M. Kramer, of Omaha, Nebraska, and recommended by Kules, Michaelen, Buffalo, who spoke for the delegations of Buffalo and Rochester, Joseph Hopp, of Chicago, and H. Q. Alexander, in behalf of the Miami Valley Exhibitor’s League. He was unanimously elected. Willard C. Patterson, of Atlanta, Ga., was named permanent recording secretary and S. L. Berman, of New York, permanent secretary of the body.

A report from the Committee of 17 was called for, and made by Frank Rembusch of Indiana, chairman of the committee. The findings of the committee as to the attitude of producers in regard to producer ownership of theatres, follows:

VITAGRAPH—We have always believed that producers should produce and exhibitors should exhibit, and the two branches should not be mixed up. We own and operate no theatres. Vitagraph maintains that they are very strictly independent producers and distributors because they are in no way allied with theatres in the operation of any franchise system, cooperative or collective bargaining. We are heartily in favor of the movement and hope the exhibitors will organize 100 per cent, for the purpose of forcing all producers to get out of the theatre business. They offer financial and moral support to the movement.

PATHE—Heartily in favor of Patterson movement (the producers must get out of the theatre business) and stand ready in every way to further it. Pathe is distributor for the American Associated Exhibitors and Hodkinson Pictures, all of whom believe that producers should stay one side of the road, and exhibitors on the other. The greatest part of Pathe pictures are distributed entirely independent of theatre alliance, and the Associated Exhibitors is a cooperative plan of exhibitors with whom they have a contract to distribute. They own no theatres and have no desire to go into the theatre business.

UNIVERSAL—Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Cochran both heartily endorse the Patterson movement. Universal has about six theatres in places where it was impossible to get firsts run in a city. They agree to sell these theatres and retire absolutely from the exhibition of pictures providing exhibitors will organize and force all other producers to get out of the theatre business. They also view with alarm the various co-operative plans of marketing pictures instituted by exhibitors and feel that in time they will find it hard to market pictures on their own.

UNITED ARTISTS—Mr. Abrams stated that his company were heart and soul with the movement to cause producers to retire from the theatre business. Mr. Abrams believes that where exhibitors give long and non-cancellation contracts to any producer or distributor, that the exhibitor creates an unfair market. Mr. Abrams believes that each picture should be purchased on its own value separately and desires to sell his pictures on the open market one at a time. Mr. Abrams offers his moral and financial support but believes that exhibitors will never get together because they never did.

SELECT—Mr. Selznick is most enthusiastic in supporting the movement that producers and distributors get out of the theatre business. He would like to see the exhibitor dominate the industry because fair methods of trade would result. He does not want to go into the theatre business. He expressed his appreciation of the rewards that producing has brought him in profits and offers part of his business to the benefit of the exhibitors. All of the unfairness in the industry has come about because the exhibitor does not stand up for his rights. If one producer can take a piece out of the exhibitor, then other producers, as a means of self-protection, must do likewise. In establishing national co-operative plan, he did so because exhibitors seemed to want that plan of marketing pictures. He offered every financial aid. He will turn over his entire business on a 50-50 basis if the exhibitors so desire. A great organization of motion picture exhibitors would be the same as an insurance policy for every fair producer.

ROBERTSON-COLE—Stated that they were heart and soul in favor of the movement to compel producers to get out of the theatre business and would give every help to further this issue. They believe that the industry is founded on better pictures and whoever makes good pictures will and should merit the support of exhibitors. They believe that if producers go out of the theatre business, that exhibitors should be independent producers of business. They asked that we keep the screens open to allow any good picture to come to it. They believe that if a producer secures a large string of theatres

Feeling Rife That Producer-Ownership of theatres Has Been "Strafed"

This report was uproariously received.

Committee's Recommendations

The meeting closed with the following set of recommendations made by the Committee of 17:

1. That the office of President of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America be some representative executive, typifying true American, who stands for clean honest competition, and who is in no way connected with the film industry.
   (Committee suggests Win. H. Taft.)
2. That the voting shall be on an individual basis. Every independent exhibitor who comes to Cleveland, irrespective of the number of theatres he owns or controls, should be entitled to one vote.
3. That the convention shall run along lines where the rule of the majority shall prevail, and that all exhibitors attending the convention shall be bound by and abide by the rule of the majority.
4. That a budget committee be formed to take up matters of finances. Committee suggests that the independent producer shall add 1 per cent to all film rentals which shall, in turn, be paid over to the National Organization for purpose of carrying on its activities.
5. That Independent Exhibitors do business only with independent producers.
6. That a convention shall not be held two successive years in any one state.
7. That election of all officers be first order of business on Thursday afternoon, June 10th.
8. That a nominating committee of five be elected by convention, Wednesday.
9. The committee further recommends that the three national organizations shall disband, or shall merge into one national organization.
10. The basis of representation of the national organization shall be: one exhibitor from each congressional district, who shall also be the delegate to the future national conventions. Further, that there be one director from each state, elected by the membership of that state, and that the executive committee shall be composed of the directors from each State. There shall be no other executive committee.

On the opening of the Wednesday sessions, there were more than 800 exhibitors present with 32 states represented.

Humorous and Human Lights on the Conventioners

By Robert E. Welsh

STARTING from scratch. Time, Pennsylvania Railroad, 6.50; Daylight Saving, 7.50. Sounds like a bargain sale.
Bet it's the only thing approaching a bargain that shows up on the trip.

We are standing at the foot of the stairway like a film salesman waiting to waylay a newcomer to the business. If we see them all now we may be able to save the trip. Which wouldn't be a bad idea. This conventioning is getting to be a habit but we've still to devise a means of catching up on lost sleep and making the expense account balance up without a loss.

Alright, if you want it that way we'll admit that last phrase was put in for the benefit of the boss.

Well, well, well! And here comes BILL, KALEM's VITAGRAPH WRIGHT! It seems like old times to see BILL flirting with Mr. Pullman.

We're beginning to worry about this job. At last accounts there were only fifty-seven varieties of conventions scheduled for the week. Each at a hotel nine miles from any other hotel, and all the hotels ninety-nine miles from anywhere.

We've got it fixed. There are at least dozens of these speeches that we know

Early Review of Mary
Pickford in "Suds"

THE art of Mary Pickford, a pain-taking attempt to provide incident, artistic lightings that in many sequences have never been excelled, faultless support aided by splendid titles that do much to lift a slender and commonplace story which provides only opportunity for characterization. "Suds" is a vehicle to display Miss Pickford's versatility. The characterization, moreover, is of a sort which does not show the star in a role which a great many of her admirers prefer to see the sweet, pretty ingenue.

The role in less talked of hands would be a total failure. As it stands the picture draws badly at times, resorts to plain slap stick, which does not fit in the story, and ends without climax or apparent completion. All this will possibly be overlooked in Miss Pickford's personal triumphs as an actress but it is not in a class with "Pollyanna" nor is it what the exhibitors have a right to expect from America's highest priced and most distinguished artist. J. S. Dickerson,

Pre-Review of Sennett's
"Married Life"

BY WIRE TO THE NEWS: "Marnied Life" as a five-reeler would make two two-reeler average merit and could be so split as practically two stories, one about a football game and another a burlesque on an amateur theatrical performance are told. The latter sequences are both provoking to a reasonable extent, even if the business is not altogether new. Ben Turpin, the featured player, is aided by a good cast and some very good trick photography in connection with aeroplanes; and a baby walking out over a cliff is responsible for some real thrills.

As a multipart reel feature this will not set the world afire, but it will be found amusing by the lovers of slap stick and holds interest from the fact that action predominates throughout. J. S. Dick-

Pithy Snapshots of the Big Doings Behind the Scenes

Dodging in and out between the elephants gave us a chance to see all the posters that Paramount has plastered the town with. They greet you wherever you turn. Such statements as: "Remain an independent exhibitor—book Paramount pictures." "An Independent Exhibitor is the one who shows the best pictures. Paramount pictures, of course."

Gosh, FRED BEECROFT will be sore at us. We should have charged advertising rates on those last three or four lines.

Speaking of FRED reminds us that our genial Roaring Bull has supplied the conversation of the convention—no one will believe that the debonair HAROLD BEECROFT is his son.

He even got us jealous. We have just introduced JACK MAHONEY of the Pathé selling force as our son. If we get away with that we'll add that we have a very charming daughter-in-law.

We accept the blushing, MRS. M.

Before we get any further we had better mention the fact that you wouldn't be burdened with this page of piffle if it were not for the kind offices of CHARLIE MOYER in supplying us with a Corona.

That's worth a free ad. Here goes: United we stand; divided we fall.

Blame any eccentricities on the type-writer. These toys need a Ouija touch—no free hand swing that was gained on William street, corner of Diame.

The accessory people are up in arms over the way the alleged exposition dropped out of sight. MONSOON DALY has a perfectly good exhibit and no place to put it. DAN BARTON would need an exposition floor to hold all the contracts he is signing for organs.

WILL SMITH still holds a grudge against the engineer on that train. We'll bet our sleeves that engineer started life on a bowling alley.

JESSE GOLBERG is appointed to the staff of life-savers. Even offered to trust us with his key.

ARTHUR LUCAS has just stepped down the lobby with FELIX FEIST. Besides being Goldwyn's distribution chief in his section of the South we hear this boy also owns a newspaper. We have a battle cry for another exhibitor organization: "Keep producers out of the newspaper business."

Black Withdraws; Rembusch vs. Cohen

Henry Lustic called the meeting to order, and appointed Henry Cole and W. J. Shinn as Sergeants-at-Arms, and immediately thereafter named the personnel of the various committees to which each resolution was to be referred.

This announcement brought forth the first spirit of discord so far manifested by the convention members. H. Webster Smith of Baltimore objected to the right of the president to name these committees without the vote of the body. A small riot ensued in which President Lustig relinquished the chair to Ben Sawyer of Cleveland until the body as a whole sustained the chair on the exercise of its rights. After that, things sailed along peacefully, until Charles O'Reilly of New York moved that Marcus Loew, who was in town, be admitted to the afternoon session of the body, without vote and without vote. William Brandt of New York seconded the motion and later it was amended by E. C. Vincent of Wilmer and Vincent to read that Mr. Loew be admitted with full rights of voice and vote.

Fred Herrington of Pittsburgh delivered a fiery address requesting that the motion to admit Mr. Loew with full powers to vote be reconsidered. This motion for reconsideration failed to receive a two-thirds vote of the members present, and was lost. The motion to admit Mr. Loew with full powers of membership to the convention was enthusiastically received and carried by short roll call.

Franklin K. Lane, former secretary, in the afternoon addressed the convention on "Americanization," and was followed by Senator Walker of New York.

Then Marcus Loew requested and was given the floor.

"I thought this was an appropriate time to tell you what I thought," Mr. Loew said. "I am first and last an exhibitor. I am a producer only in a secondary measure, and as protection to my exhibiting business, I have always favored the independent producer. Independent producers are necessary, especially to these exhibitors who change their programs daily.

"I have always encouraged the independent producers mostly for selfish reasons. I want pictures, and I want producers. The more producers the merrier. I don't want just a few producers.

"Speaking of Wall Street and so-called Wall Street menace, I don't believe the exhibitor has anything to fear from Wall Street. This industry is composed of brains, and no single individual and no single corporation can ever control it.

"I think it a serious mistake to ignore the independent producer. But he needs money to produce pictures. I have loaned large sums of money to independent producers, and have done all I could to get them alive. I would not have gone into the producing end of the business if the independent producer had been stronger. But I had to go into the producing end to get pictures for my theatres. The producers frightened me into it. They said it looked as if pictures were going to be booked on a percentage basis only. Percentage was too uncertain. It means so much this year and more the next and so on, until finally I'd be a janitor in my own house.

The Exhibitor—and Reviews

"If you let your advertising columns dictate your reviews your paper is no better than the 'heralds' and press sheets that the producing companies send out."

Margarette Opera House.

"We do want reviews—we have found your service to be fair and we consider you competent to review pictures. These reviews are very necessary to enable us to select pictures and they help us in advertising our show, but we do not use them to hammer down prices, break contracts or make complaints."

Geo. W. Cuff, Pres.,
Mutual Theatre Company,
Orange, N. J.

"I believe your service to be fair in every respect and also believe that you are competent to review pictures. Wishing your wonderful paper all the success possible, I am"

James J. Christie, Mgr.,
Third Avenue Theatre,
Waterford, N. Y.

"We are subscribing to the News in order to get reviews on pictures we are to use and if this review is written to comply with the wishes of the producer we can't see how your magazine is a help to us. We believe you will win out in the long run."

Princess Theatre Co.,
per S. S. Stevenson,
Henderson, N. C.

"I have found that the Motion Picture News' reviews are honest and unbiased by any seeming influence and are therefore reliable. I believe all exhibitors feel the same way about this and that they will back you up in your determination to continue."

E. H. Hullinger,
Adv. Agent Clifford Theatre,
Urbana, Ohio.

"I have found your service fair and I bank on your reviews as I feel that you are fair and competent."

A. J. Rice,
Temple Theatre,
Willard, Ohio.

"Without fair, competent non-subsidized reviews as previously given, the News would drop back to level of an entertaining reading magazine. These reviews have been worth real money to me on more than one occasion in the selection of pictures."

R. H. Gray,
Majestic Theatre,
Cleveland, Ohio.

"It please me very much to know one advertising medium has taken the stand you have."

Geo. A. Pollard,
Pollard Theatre,
Guthrie, Okla.

"Your service has certainly seemed fair. I am wondering where they could find a fairer one."

E. C. McQuay,
New Holland Theatre,
New Holland, Ohio.

"Please be advised that we review 50 per cent of our plays from your columns. They have appeared fair to us always and we would not be without the News. This is the only trade paper we subscribe to and it usually covers our wants."

Smith & Mouen,
by G. W. Mouen,
Strand Theatre,
Miampee, Ohio.

"Your reviews are the first thing I read when opening the News and I use them in making up my ads. I believe your service is fair."

The Sprag Amusement Co.,
by Ben B. Morris,
Bellaire, Ohio.

"If you fail to review pictures your magazine loses 50 per cent of its worth. Producers cover enough good points to exploit it. We must know if it will stand the trouble, expense, etc., to get by with the public."

All old time theatre managers know that the traveling road show was killed by the producer cheating. He advertised what he did not have, lost confidence of public and killed the road show.

Frank C. Buckley,
Theatre Princess,
Superior, Wis.

"We take great pleasure in congratulating you upon the independent stand that you are taking in the matter."

Rialto Amusement Company,
J. Fineman, Pres.,
Racine, Wis.

"The exhibitor wants reviews. Fearless reviews. So far as the writer is concerned, reviews are not used to hammer down prices, or to break contracts. They are used for proper exploiting of pictures. If it is the consensus of opinion among reviewers that a picture is o. k. the exhibitor will not hesitate to go the limit in boosting it. If some reviews are favorable while others are unfavorable, the exhibitor will consider everything and be governed accordingly. Where the reliable reviewers apologize (between the lines) for the picture, the exhibitor, if he is wise, will gum-shoe the picture in question. It is a pleasure to be able to say that the reviews as published in the News are fair and reliable and are carefully indexed for use when the time comes."

F. J. McWilliams,
Grand Theatre,
Madison, Wis.

"I am thoroughly in sympathy with your action and wish honest complete news and unless I thought it was such I would not patronize your paper."

"I am also unwilling to buy films of people who are unwilling to have their productions reviewed by anybody. You are at liberty to publish this letter if you see fit."

S. Carl Carpenter, Mgr.,
Colonial Theatre,
Richford, Vt.

"If the News is not competent to review pictures no one in this good old United States or ours is, is our honest and candid opinion."

The Low Moor Iron Company of Virginia,
J. A. Hibbert, Mgr. Theatre.

“Before the Battle” Statements Issued by Producers

Robertson-Cole, Universal and Hodkinson Organizations State Policy

WITH exhibitors from all parts of the nation assembled at Cleveland during the past week formulating a campaign of defense against the alleged invasion of the exhibitor’s field on the part of certain producer-distributor forces, executives of various powerful producing organizations issued statements during the week, which were designed to set forth definitely the exact stand to be taken by their respective organizations on the different problems confronting the exhibitors’ cause. Three statements, emanating from the home-offices of the Robertson-Cole, Universal and W. W. Hodkinson organizations, are given below.

Robertson-Cole’s Policy

THE following statement has been issued, over the signature of A. S. Kirkpatrick, general manager of the Robertson-Cole Company, under the caption of “A Declaration of Policy”:

“Robertson-Cole will not build, purchase or otherwise acquire motion picture theatres in any city in the United States, nor will we engage in the exhibition of motion pictures for profit, unless you, the exhibitor, force us to do so.

“Robertson-Cole demands the right to open and fair competition on the basis of merit and will only feel ‘forced’ to acquire theatres where and when allied interests, exercising a monopoly, have eliminated competition.

“Robertson-Cole are merchants engaged in the distribution of motion picture productions on a commercial brokerage basis, and we intend to adhere strictly to our field without digression or trespass.

“Robertson-Cole stands free of all entangling alliances and affiliations, and we fully appreciate the ideal position in which our independence places us. Robertson-Cole does not intend to jeopardize that position.

“Robertson-Cole has but one objective and is concentrating every ounce of energy upon it. We have no conflicting interests within our organization, and no connections outside our organization that would divert our attention and influence the conduct of our business or distribution.

“Robertson-Cole believes in competition. Without competition there is no incentive to progress; and there should be progress in every branch of the motion picture industry.

“Robertson-Cole believes that the exhibitor should be encouraged to progress in building, improving and fortifying the prestige of the motion picture theatre, and we are firmly convinced that to discourage the progressive spirit of exhibitors by an invasion of their field is dangerous to the long life of the industry.

“Robertson-Cole looks upon motion picture films as so much merchandise, and are in the market to purchase the best class of this merchandise and to resell it to the trade.

“Robertson-Cole looks upon the exhibition of motion pictures as a theatrical and amusement enterprise—a class of business that legitimately belongs to the showman, and does not intend to invade that field.

“Robertson-Cole believes that dignity, commercial integrity and business honor should characterize every transaction between producers, distributors and exhibitors.

Mr. Robertson and Mr. Cole decided that the distribution of motion pictures was a class of business that only a successful commercial company aside from their film interests, with connections in every civilized country in the world, could handle to the mutual advantage of producer and exhibitor. They organized the Robertson-Cole Distribution Corporation to handle this business on a fair and equitable margin of profit, and it is on this basis and in the capacity of merchants that they will continue to be connected with the motion-picture business.

“Robertson-Cole does not use deposit money received from exhibitors in the furtherance of its business enterprises. We have unlimited financial resources and do not need exhibitors’ money to carry on our business.

“Robertson-Cole places all deposit money in separate trust accounts, and a clause which we have written in our contracts absolutely prevents our using these funds until we have delivered the film that they guarantee.

“Robertson-Cole intends to invest whatever may be necessary to maintain a foremost position in the industry, and to safeguard this investment we propose to do everything possible to secure the confidence of our customers.”

Carl Laemmle’s Stand

IN a lengthy statement issued from the Universal headquarters, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, upholds his organization as one that has practiced “fair play” with the exhibitor in the past and intends to continue the same policy in the future.

Says Mr. Laemmle:

“Universal is not ashamed to say what it has done for the exhibitor in the past. Nor am I afraid of putting myself on record as to what Universal means to do for the exhibitor in the future. I have said it before, and I will repeat it. Universal, among other things, stands ready to give financial support to the independent exhibitor in his fight to tear from his hands the fingers of monopoly that seek to throttle him. Every exhibitor knows that Universal was organized solely to fight against monopoly in the film business, and to free the independents from the strangle-hold of the Patents Company octopus.

“The independent exhibitor today faces a struggle just as threatening as the one many of us fought ten years ago for the protection of our business. It is to be understood clearly that Universal will go to any extent to lend confidence and material aid to the exhibitor.

“Every exhibitor knows that he can get plenty of good Universal pictures with which to fill his program if he takes the first step in the fight against monopoly and bars monopoly-made pictures from his screen. He is confident that when he ‘outlaws’ this product of the theatre-owning producers, he still will draw his patrons by first-class pictures.”

W. W. Hodkinson

“Only by the exercise of real authority and ability can the exhibitors today protect their independence, and yet the independent is absolutely necessary to the healthy development of the great art of motion-pictures. The convention in Cleveland shows that the men who own theatres are at last aroused to the situation that threatens the individual operation of their theatres.

“The greatly improved quality of independent productions is the first sign that things are turning in favor of the exhibitor. Every year he is assured a greater variety and a finer grade of photoplay features. His greatest problem is to keep in touch with this market the independent producers provide and be able to select the pictures he requires.

“Mr. Laemmle’s belief that the exhibitor should not be required to take the risks of the producer, as he often does today. The producer should pay for his own mistakes. The producer in turn will make better profits from more careful methods of production.

“Judgment and over-capitalization are a menace to the stability and prosperity of the motion picture industry. We believe as a producer that the production units are turning out a volume of business with one-fourth of the profit and that is rendered of no account when it is considered that other concerns, whose interests extend not only over production, but also the distribution and the exhibition of pictures. Part of this high cost of production is due to the long delay of bringing against each other for suit, directors, books.”
Educational Will Open Exchange System June 20

Operations Will Start in Twenty-Four Cities, Handling Short Subjects Only

A COMPLETE announcement of policy for the year, starting with the week of June 20th, covering all of its various activities, was authorized yesterday by Educational Films Corporation. The past six months has seen probably more radical developments with Educational than with any other motion picture company, and its officials promise that the next few months will be marked by equally notable achievements.

Educational Films Corporation began operations a little more than five years ago with the idea of confining its attention to short subjects. From this purpose it has never departed and the whole of its expansion continues in the one and two reel field. Although the industry as a whole regarded the company as a bold experiment, Educational points out that all of the companies producing and distributing pictures at the time it began business, only six months ago, have been added to the roster.

With the week of June 20th, Educational starts business through its own exchanges in the principal distributing centers of the country, with its product more than tripled and the claim that its product represents the very cream of the short subject field. The next few weeks will see in operation Educational exchanges in twenty-four cities, New York, Buffalo, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Louisville, Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Indianapolis, Chicago, Minneapolis, Detroit, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle. In each of these exchanges local interests are represented financially, but Educational maintains the majority stock of every branch, believing that this represents an ideal plan in insuring the ultimate in cooperation in sales and exploitation effort, and at the same time maintains competitive exhibitor purchase opportunity.

Opening of this exchange system marks Educational’s first venture into the comedy field. It begins activities with five two-reelers available each month with the indication of several others being added soon. Christie Comedies will supply a two-reeler every two weeks, while there will be a monthly two reel release of the Chester, Mermaid and Torchry series; Judge Brown Stories, with a monthly, or possibly semi-monthly release, and it is expected that another two reel series will be announced in a short time. But with these extensive additions, Educational has not cut down on the scenic, travel, animal, scientific and educational pictures that have been so intimately associated with its growth. Chester-Outing Scenics have been taken over, forming with the Bruce Scenics a complete “cover” of this field. Chester Scenics will be a bi-weekly release, while a number of series of travel and scenic have been acquired.

“When Educational Films was formed five years ago,” says the statement, “its founders had many plans in view, but they did not attempt to put them in operation until they believed that the time was ripe. We believe that this day is here.

“For five years we devoted the greater portion of our time to developing the quality of our product and to proving the necessity of these short subjects to the theatre. The Bruce Scenics, the Ditmars Living Book of Nature, George D. Wright’s Mexico Today, the Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement and various series of similar character have been shown in thousands of theatres and there has been created such a demand as to cause us to greatly increase the volume of product.

“During this period we were compelled to distribute our product through the best medium available, though from the start we have felt that the only perfect distribution, for our interests and those of the exhibitor, would be our own exchange system.”

Robert C. Bruce is now in Europe making a new series of his Scenics Beautiful. We have taken over the Chester-Outings, and also the Screenies from the same producer. We control all of the pictures made by the American Red Cross, for theatrical release. We have camera men with the two expeditions of the Interchurch World Movement and these pictures will soon be available for early release. We are about to release the first picture made by an expedition of the National Geographic Society. We will also distribute all of the pictures of the New York State Conservation Commission.”

Broadway Welcomes Back S. L. Rothapfel

Capitol Theatre, Re-opened Under His Auspices Filled With Distinguished Audience

ROTHAPFEL has come back to Broadway.

Friday evening, June 4th, marked the first of his presentations at the Capitol theatre, and probably the largest audience that ever witnessed a motion picture offering in a theatre greeted his return. Every seat in the world’s greatest theatre was filled and the promenade space was so crowded that an inquisitive fire marshal might have found ample grounds for activity.

There was a riot of applause for each number from an audience that included many of the best known men and women of the stage and screen. There was no speech-making. S. L. Rothapfel was not evident in person, but he did not need to be, for the entire presentation was typical of the man who first surprised New York with his offerings at the Regent, then opened the Strand, and from his ideas built the Rialto and Rivoli.

During the few days that the Capitol was closed Mr. Rothapfel made two changes in the physical character of the house that worked wonders. A chief fault had been that the house seemed too immense for even orchestras and bands of eighty pieces. Mr. Rothapfel therefore built a new stage for the orchestra, with an inner stage for the performers, with a result that every newspaper in New York commented on the amazing improvement in its music. The second change was the addition of a lighting system such as he originated in the Rialto and the Rivoli, taking away the coldness and formality and adding the third element, blended with music and pictures.

The initial presentation at the Capitol, except for a larger orchestra and a larger body of singers, is not so far more elaborate than many that he had staged at the Rialto and Rivoli.

Victor Herbert’s “American Fantasia” was used as the overture, modified for the occasion and with renditions of “Hail Columbia,” “Swanee River,” “The Girl I Left Behind Me” and “Over There.” Before another highly fanciful setting by John Wenger the Albertieri dancers presented von Blum’s “Danse Interpretive,” and this was followed by “Hagopian, the Rug Maker,” “Indian Love Lyrics,” followed, and “Less than the Dust” brought still another Wenger set, the chorus by the ensemble and a pantomime by Jessie Roggi.

“Kashmiri Song” presented William Robyn as the soloist and the final number, “Till I Awake,” was rendered by the chorus accompanied by pantomime by Elizabeth Coyle and Harry Halfhand.
Realart Celebrates First Anniversary
Young Company Enjoys Birthday; J. S. Woody
Reviews the Year; Another Star Coming

REALART PICTURES CORPORATION celebrated this week the first anniversary of the founding of the concern. Congratulatory wires and messages were received from exhibitors in all parts of the country on the year's success.

Actual business was started on June 11th last year when offices were opened at 112 West Forty-second street, New York. Within a few months' time exchanges had been opened in twenty-one important centers and in December, 1919, the first picture was available. Thirteen pictures have been released by the company to date and four more are practically finished and will be put on the market during July and August. They will be included in this year's business and round out the concern's activities for its first year.

Important among the achievements of the new concern during the year are the signing of two new stars in addition to the original trio, the acquisition of the old Morosco studios in Hollywood as a producing plant; and the establishment of a Broadway record which shows every production to have played a week at one of the big Rialto houses and with a return engagement on the Loew circuit.

In a brief resume of the year's activities John S. Woody, general manager of Realart, said: "From a very small beginning last June, Realart has grown in a year's time with incredible swiftness to a dominant position as a producing organization. Success has been ours in a measure far beyond our highest hopes at the start and for this we must thank our exhibitor partners who have made it possible."

"We opened with a small suite of offices at 112 West Forty-second street. Arthur S. Kane, our first president; Ben F. Simpson, then field manager; John P.

Fritts, director of publicity and advertising, and myself, were the original quartette who gathered at that place to make of Realart a thing of substance out of our hope and ambitions.

"Early in the summer, Mr. Simpson and myself went into the field to establish our branch offices. Mr. Simpson took the Eastern and Southern districts, while I hiked across lots to the West. Within a few short weeks we had engaged managers, opened quarters and had things humming in twenty-one recognized exchange centers. I don't believe a more efficient sales force was ever got together—and at a speed which established a record.

"In December Mr. Kane resigned to head his own concern, and Morris Kohn, who had been Realart's treasurer, became president. Later in the year J. C. Ragland resigned as general sales manager and Mr. Jay A. Gove was promoted from the post of associate director of publicity to that of assistant general manager. Those were the only changes in personnel of importance during the year.

"In March, Mr. Kohn negotiated the purchase of the old Morosco studios in Hollywood and they were renamed the Realart studios, the former efficient studio staff headed by Frank Garubbi, remaining under the new management. The studios are large and equipped with the most modern facilities. The large dark and open stages are each capable of accommodation of three productions at one time.

"A short time ago we held our first convention and get-together at the Hotel Astor. It was one of the most inspiring and successful gatherings of its kind I have ever attended. The members of this field force met one another for the first time and exchanged ideas. Together we formulated our policy for the coming year.

"But the biggest thing in our record for the year, in my mind, is the demonstration we have given of honest co-operation between producer and exhibitors. That is the principle upon which Realart was established. We have avoided making glowing announcements of our intentions, and have been content to spend our time and efforts in carrying them into practice.

"Reports current in trade circles for some time that Realart had signed a sixth star were confirmed this week. Morris Kohn, president of the company, admitted that the sixth star had been selected. He would not say, however, that the contract had been actually signed.

No Film Censorship for Massachusetts
Governor Coolidge Vetoes Bill, Claiming Unconstitutionality; Action Praised

Massachusetts is free of censorship. Governor Coolidge vetoed the bill as presented to him by the State Senate on the last day of the regular legislative session of the year. His veto was based on the ground that Attorney General J. Weston Allen ruled an important part of the bill was unconstitutional. Expressions of gratification at the action of the Governor in vetoing the measure were heard on all sides. Several women lawyers were profuse of their praise of the Governor for the stand he had taken.

Directly following the action of Massachusetts' Chief Executive, the 'House of Representatives upheld his action by a vote of 202 to 14. Seldom, if ever, has a Governor's repudiation of a matter of such wide interest been approved with such unanimity of feeling in either branch of the Legislature. As is evident from the figures, both Republican and Democratic members of the House supported the Governor's attitude.

In his message to the members of the House vetoing the measure, Governor Coolidge said: "A bill entitled 'An act relative to the approval and public exhibition of motion picture films' being House Bill No. 1540, is herewith returned without approval. Hereinafter the opinion of the attorney-general that the second section, which is the important section of the bill, is unconstitutional, and that section 4, which undertakes to provide for a court review, is not in a form which expressly preserves the constitutional rights of trial by jury, although it is possible that it might be interpreted to give that right. The entire purpose of the bill would fail with the failure of section 2, and the entire bill would fail if the court should determine the right of trial by jury is not provided for according to the constitution. There is no need to point out that unconstitutional legislation would be entirely useless, would bring about expense to the commonwealth which would be without avail and would cause the appointment of persons and the installing of machinery, all of which would be a total loss to the commonwealth."

We Want Reviews
"Certainly, the exhibitor wants reviews of current releases because an honest review genuinely helps him in the booking and advertising of a show. When you took my perfectly good three dollars you entered into a contract to give me the news and your honest opinion—not the highly garnished sales talk of a press agent.

"Personally, I have always regarded the M. P. N. as fearless and independent two prime factors in placing it where it is today. That a producer has withdrawn all advertising from the News because of an unfavorable review in your column, provided it was justified, is the highest modicum of praise you could acquire."

Geo. E. Carpenter, Paramount Empress Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah.

"We appreciate the News and value your reviews; they are of great help to us. We are glad to know that the size of ad or no ad does not influence your reviews.

"We are with you."

"We do not know who the producer referred to can be, nor do we care, and as for keeping this letter confidential, you are at liberty to shout it from the rooftops if you so desire. This theatre is for a square deal first, last, and always. Yes, we want reviews and we want them fair and unbiased."

The Lamb Theatre, by H. S. Cole, Ranger, Texas.

"We are strongly of the opinion that, if a publication is to serve the exhibitor fairly with the producer, the giving of honest reviews of pictures is the only course for a publication to follow."

G. H. Foster, Ruth Theatre, Ruth, Nevada.

"I have found that your reviews have proven a big asset to my business in helping me to select my programs and especially so of late as we now spot our entire program."

C. C. Lindsey, Mgr., Lindsey Theatre, Lubbock, Texas.

Extracts from many other letters received on this subject will be printed in later issues as space permits.

Legal Battle Follows Sale of Theatres

CONTROVERSY over ownership and control of ten moving picture theatres in St. Louis between the Famous Players Company and the Arco Theatre interests led to the filing of a suit yesterday by the former company to enjoin Arco and other exhibitors from interfering with its management of one of the company's theatres. Judge Davis issued a temporary restraining order and set the case for hearing on next Thursday.

The petition alleges that the Arco interests sold the Arco, along with nine other motion picture houses, to the Famous Players Company last March and that the latter concern took possession March 17.

On Friday night, it is said, representatives of the Famous Players Company went to the Arco and attempted to control the theatre. In the disturbance which followed policemen elected representatives of the Famous Players Company, it is alleged.

Harry Ward, of London, Arrives in America

Harry Ward, managing director of Hayward Productions of London, England, and one of the most formidable film renters in the United Kingdom, arrived this week in New York for an indefinite stay in America. He was accompanied on his journey by Henry Cundy of the Cinema Sales Corporation of Great Britain.

This is Mr. Ward's second visit to this country within a period of six months. His previous trip was primarily in the interests of his recently perfected distributing organization, the Cinema Sales Corporation, of which company he is managing director.

Mr. Ward announces that he is prepared to negotiate for the distribution of big American productions in the United Kingdom.

British Film Company Increases Capital

The Ideal Film Renting Company, Ltd., of London, announces that it is making arrangements for a considerable increase in its capital. A new company will be formed under the name of the Ideal Films, Ltd., with full issued capital of £115,000.

The whole of the staff, properties, liabilities and management of the old company are being taken over by the Ideal Films, Ltd., and the managing directors will continue in their present capacity.

Saunders Is Comptroller of Famous Players

Richard W. Saunders has been appointed comptroller of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. As comptroller he will have full charge of all the accounting and auditing, in all departments of the Famous Players and its subsidiary companies.

Censorship Dead

The Governor's message ended one of the most bitter fights ever waged over a measure on Beacon Hill. Thousands of people all over the State and country, newspapers throughout the State and nearly all of the Boston publications declared against the bill, and joined in the fight to kill the proposed legislation.

Governor General Allen in his opinion of the bill says in part: "It is my opinion that a section of this bill is so broad that it would apply to a sale, lease or loan in this commonwealth of a motion picture film made in this state and on its way to another state, and would also apply to a film in the original package in which it might be shipped into this state from another state or from a foreign country. If so, it is a state censorship in the true sense and conflicts with the clause of section 8, article I of the Constitution of the United States, which confers on Congress power 'to regulate commerce with foreign nations among the several states and with the Indian Tribes.' I am, therefore, of opinion that said section 2 is an attack directly to regulate interstate commerce and is, accordingly, unconstitutional."

The movie censorship bill would have placed the power of censorship in the State department of public safety and would have required films intended for commercial use to be submitted for review and censorship.

When the bill was first proposed, a storm of indignation arose from the public. Women's clubs, professional and business men's associations, leading educationalists and churchmen at once expressed their opposition to the scheme. Governor Coolidge, said Mrs. Harstone, "knows that there is sufficient legislation already to make censorship in the hands of a few unnecessary. Massachusetts is to be congratulated upon having such a man."

Miss Sybil Holmes, representing the Women Lawyers' Association, said: "Massachusetts is to be congratulated upon having as its Chief Executive a sane, sound, clear-thinking man. We, the women lawyers, were confirmed in the belief that the Governor would not allow a State Board censorship to be placed upon our institute and that he would not sanction the passage of additional laws, when the laws we already had upon our statute books had not been tried out sufficiently."
Allens, of Canada, Will Build Two London Theatres

Purchase Sites at Cost of $2,000,000; to Raze Famous Buildings

CULMINATING plans which were originally formulated shortly after the return of J. J. Allen, of the firm of Jule and Jay J. Allen, from London, England, last fall, comes an announcement from the Toronto office of the organization that this concern has consummated a deal which includes the purchase of one of the most costly parcels of business property in London and the erection, on this site, of two super-motion picture theatres, which will rival any in the world.

The transaction, according to the Allens, involves a total expenditure exceeding four millions of dollars, half of which amount is property cost, and calls for the razing of two of the most historic buildings in the British metropolis—the far-famed Empire theatre and Queen's Hotel in Leicester Square. The full significance and import of this announcement will be realized and felt throughout the theatrical world as a forerunner to what may be expected from the Allen Theatre Enterprises, now an international institution, in the near future.

C. Howard Crane, in charge of the Architectural Department of the Allen Theatre Enterprises, is leaving for London immediately, where he will consult with the builders and submit sketches for approval, after which plans will be started at once. It was originally intended to construct one huge theatre on the London site, but on account of the tendency of the picture business toward super-attractions and long runs, it was deemed advisable to meet this condition and erect two houses on the property just purchased. The smaller of the two theatres will be very similar to the Allen Winnipeg theatre, which is conceded to be a model of its kind. Present plans call for a house to seat 4,000, and the second one to have a capacity of about 2,000. The smaller theatre will be given over to super-film productions, which will enjoy long runs from one to six months, while the larger house will feature high class program, which will be changed weekly. Fifty-piece orchestras and elaborate stage settings will be em-ploved in the two theatres. Both houses will be constructed along the most moder lines and will contain the most recent innovations in the way of equipment. It is es-pected that over two millions of dol-ars will be expended in constructing and furnishing both theatres, this on top of the property cost of the same figure, making a total initial investment exceeding four million dollars.

The fronts of both theatres will be constructed of glazed cotta and will be very ornate. There will be a double ornamental marquee extending to the curb running the entire length of the houses. The floors and walls of the lobbies will be of white and green marble and a large foyer will also assure ample protection for crowds waiting to purchase tickets, against inclement weather.

An unusual feature of the present plans for the two houses are the plans calling for an immense tea and soda grille. The tea room will be located in the basement with entrances from the theatre foyers and will be readily accessible from within the houses or from the street. The soda grille will be situated on the main floor near the theatre entrances and will accommodate 1,500 patrons. Flanking the entrances to both theatres will be more or less individual shops, while the front of the building will be given over to exclusive offices.

When one enters either theatre, they will be confronted with a scene of luxury and quiet splendor. Scattered through the lobbies, foyers and promenades will be luxuriously upholstered divans and settees, and walls will be adorned with the paintings of masters. There will be nothing of a flagrant or gaudy nature in the scheme of decoration and it is anticipated that the finished theatres will reflect only quiet elegance and refined taste.

Concealed lighting systems will be employed in both houses and electrical engineers are now at work planning a new illumination project, which will make it possible for a patron to read the program in the theatre while the picture is being projected. This will do away with the inconvenient of groping for seats and the attending difficulties of a poorly lighted theatre. When the system is installed the auditoriums of the London houses will be completely filled with a softly subdued light that is restful to the eye. At the same time it will be impossible for the patrons to detect its source. Although subdued, the illumination will be of sufficient nature to insure reading, without eye strain, of the finest printed matter.

Other innovations in the contemplated cinema palaces include the most modern ventilating and heating system, plate glass inclosed projection rooms equipped with a battery of six machines each and retiring or rest apartments that will surpass many fashionable drawing rooms. Then there will be lengthily pronouncedes where patrons may stroll between rows of palms and hothouse plants, during intermissions.

The London theatres will feature British-made pictures. It will undoubtedly appear unique to many British pioneers to witness the passing of the old Empire theatre, with its rare traditions, and the com-ling of the more modern form of entertainment—motion pictures. In the past twenty years but few Canadians who visited London, failed to pay their respects to the landmark of early theatricals in England. But inasmuch as the new theatres, which will replace the old Empire and the likewise aged Queen's Hotel, will be owned and managed by British subjects, Londoners will be assured a continuation of the time-honored conventionalities.

At the offices of Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen, it was stated that tremendous difficulties as well as strong competitive bid-ing had to be overcome before the deal was finally consummated. It was originally anticipated that there would be opposition in purchasing the property involved, but when it came time to sign the final papers giving possession to the Allen, bidders from all over the world appeared on the scene and as a result, the total cost of the property was augmented by $150,000.

Pre-Review of "Yes or No"—Talmadge

BY WIRE TO THE NEWS: Norma Talmadge's latest vehicle is a very peculiar offering. It is two stories in one, both sequences showing the Philanderers at work, using methods of the approved movie sort.

Miss Talmadge appears in a dual role as the object of said Philanderer's desire, apparently without reason unless it is to hold forth the suggestion that from this fact some unexpected twist will be forthcoming at the end of the picture, but nothing like this happens.

As the wife of the mechanic she repulses the villain and lives happy with hubby after he invests in a washing machine which brings wealth. As the beter half of the business man she listens to the tempter with the result that she is finally driven to suicide when the object of her affections cas her off.

Both stories are carried along by cutting from one to the other, a number of them having incident enough of more than ordinary quality and only Miss Talmadge's personality and splendid acting are the part and by a fine supporting cast lift the production to a plane above the average program offering, unless the said supporting cast is in the somewhat novel idea of the two parallel stories and in making comparisons.

The titles for the most part overreach while trying to point the moral we have referred to.

Sister Nathalia is given a part which is almost dragged in, since it has little bearing on the unfolding of either story. She does not screen any too well, nor does she show any great amount of the talents which have made her sisters famous.—J. S. Dickerson, Cleveland.
Exhibitor Convention

“...and this is the problem that confronts other exhibitors, too. The only solution to the problem is organization and the support of the exhibitor to the independent producer, says Mr. W. A. Atkinson, superintendent of the Recreation Commission, has been asked by the Social Service committee of the Detroit Council of Churches to take this step. There is a law against Sunday amusements, but it has not been enforced in years, except in a few small towns in the state. All the downtown theatres have been limited in their advertising in the Detroit News to two inches on Sunday and an inch or less daily because of the attitude taken by this paper in criticizing the theatres.

Mr. Atkinson concludes with the remark that he meant no offense to the exhibitors of the land when he used the name Loew in connection with Metro pictures. He thought the name would be an asset. However, he would have two titles to all his pictures made, he said, so that no exhibitor would be compelled to run his name in connection with a Metro picture, contrary to his better judgment.

The credentials of everyone who attended the sessions were subjected to rigorous examination by the Credentials Committee.

Alfred Black of Boston, took exception to the fact that his right to enter the Convention Hall was challenged, failing to receive the final report of the Credentials Committee that he had been reselected as a qualified member of the Convention, issued a statement declaring his organization, withdrew from the convention because it was being railroaded. He also took exception to the acceptance of the slide advertising plan.

An interesting feature of Wednesday's session was the meeting between Frank Rembusch and Adolph Zukor.

Zukor is reported to have said Paramount would not buy theatres could it be assured exhibition of its product. His remarks were later reported to the convention.

The social end of the convention was not neglected, the visiting exhibitors and their relatives being in receipt of every hospitality. A moonlight ride on the Lake Erie on Tuesday night, visits to points of interest; and special shows of big coming pictures pleasantly passing leisure hours.

Sunday Shows Contested in City of Detroit

Detroit exhibitors may face a determined movement to close all places of amusement in the city on Sundays. The campaign would include the public dance halls and parks as well as the theatres.

Methodist Church Commends the Screen

The recognition of motion pictures as a means of church education and the commendation of the Methodist Episcopal Church by the general conference of the work already accomplished by the Centennial was by Committee in its department of motion pictures and stereotypes was one of the most progressive and important actions taken by the Methodists in their quadrennial meeting just closed at Des Moines, Iowa.

The committee discussed the matter from every point of view, including the attitude the Methodist Church should take to motion pictures, and was unanimous in its recommendation to the general conference. That conservative body of churchmen in endorsing the committee's action makes it the official act of Methodism.

Exhibitors File Protest Against City's Action

On petitions filed last week with the Massachusetts supreme court asking for a writ of mandamus against the selectmen of Adams, Mass., Thomas F. and Margaret A. Russell ask the court to compel the selectmen to grant them a license for their moving picture shows in Adams. The Russell theatre on Park street, in that city. In their petition, the Russells claim that for years they operated a moving picture theatre at Adams and were required to secure licenses only for Sunday programs.

Accessory Show Called Off by Opposition

The plans for the motion picture accessory shows, scheduled for Cleveland during convention days, was called off, with the following letter, issued on June 10, 1919:

"Regrettably we regret to advise you that owing to serious opposition raised through letters signed by Sid Kahan and Sam Bullock attacking the show as well as other adverse conditions we feel that it is advisable to cancel all reservations for the motion picture accessory show to have been held in Gray's Armory, June 8 to 11, inclusive.

"We anticipated no opposition to the show as much as it was our intention to divide any profits with the named exhibitors' association. However, since the opposition has arisen we have decided to abandon the idea and pocket our financial losses.

"While there were a number of manufacturers and film producers supporting the movement we feel that out of consideration for the loyalty of these firms and individuals we must be unwarranted to continue the show with a limited number of exhibitors which would not assure the success anticipated for the exhibition.

"We thank you for your interest in the show and greatly appreciate your loyal support while regretting defeat, any inconvenience you may experience.

"NATIONAL INDEPENDENT MOTION PICTURE MACHINERY & ACCESSORY SHOW."
National Association in Annual Meeting in Cleveland

Variety of Topics Discussed and Directors for Easing Year Elected

"K"EEP politics off the screen," declared William A. Brady, retiring president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, at the annual meeting of that Association held Tuesday at the headquarters of the Old Colony Club in the Hotel Cleveland. "There are many persons who advocate the power of the screen, who will try to use it for political purposes," he continued, "but it should be made emphatic that the screen of this country is not in politics. Neither should a man be asked to pay his money to go to the theatre and then be forced to sit through the presentation of a lot of advertising pictures." Matters of importance not alone to the motion picture industry, but also to the motion picture patrons were discussed at the meeting, which was attended by many of the most prominent film men of the country. One resolution pledged the Association to the program of the production, distribution and exhibition of selected pictures for young people.

The amendment of every state constitution so as to guarantee the motion picture screen the same freedom now guaranteed the press and spoken word by those same constitutions was a recommendation made by the Censorship Committee in its annual report.

"While no state in 1920 has written upon its statute books a censorship law," the Censorship Committee reported, "and while no censorship law has been enacted since our National Association has been organized, censorship continues to be the overshadowing menace to our industry. Well intentioned men and women, firm in their belief that they are doing a public service, are advocating censorship, virtually asking that civilization take a backward step, and that the motion picture, a medium for thought expression, be censored prior to exhibition to enforce their varied opinions of moral standards.

The irrelevance of these men and women, and the danger of their propaganda is illustrated in the attack recently made by a religious denomination in convention assembled. The same delegates who advocated a censorship of the motion picture attacked the Associated Press, that great international, unbiased medium for the collection and dissemination of news, urging a censorship of the press as well as the motion picture. Such bigotry would prevent that free expression of thought which is necessary if any people are to retain their freedom.

The report of Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott showed that three times during last year the vigilance and activity of the National Association had prevented the closing of the motion picture theatres of the country. He also recommended an affiliation of the National Association with similar film organizations of European countries, and a committee was appointed by President Brady to see if such an affiliation could be brought about.

Reports were received from the Sunday Opening, the Transportation and the Film Theft Committees on their activities during the last year. It was stated by the Sunday Opening Committee that more theatres are open now on Sunday than ever before. The Film Theft Committee reported that many dealers in stolen films had been driven out of business by the activities of that Committee.

President Brady appointed as a committee to confer with a similar committee of the exhibitors if the occasion should arise, the following: Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldwyn, W. R. Rothacker, Fred J. Beecroft, Martin J. Quigley, Charles C. Pettijohn and Harry M. Berman.

Directors of the National Association for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

The directors will hold a meeting in New York in September for the election of officers, and in the interim the old officers will hold over.

Robertson-Cole to Build Studio in Hollywood

A s a link in the chain of mutual profit, by which it is binding together production and exhibition, Robertson-Cole has acquired, in Los Angeles, an extensive property upon which it is erecting a large studio. For carrying out this undertaking, Robertson-Cole Studios, Inc., was incorporated.

The huge studio building will house the various producing units of Robertson-Cole. The project calls for an initial investment of $500,000. No further expense will be spared in bringing the different companies making Robertson-Cole pictures every possible support. While Robertson-Cole has no intention of making picture itself, it believes that by lifting studio detail from the minds of the various directors it will enable them to better concentrate on artistic and dramatic values.

The new studio building, located between Melrose and Cowper Streets, Los Angeles, will be finished in the fall.

Joseph L. Friedman, President of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, returned from New York bringing with him an unusual supply of attractive short subjects for Chicago territory. Among the films that he purchased for Chicago Exhibitors are the following: Twelve two-reel Muriel Ostriche Comedies, Twelve two-reel Monkey Bank
Comedies, Twenty-six two-reel
Polly Moran Comedies, Twenty-six Sing Bill Jones Comedies, Fifty-six Mann Movie Chats, Twenty-six Snap Shots of the Photoplay Artists at Work. These in addition to Christie Comedies, Hank Gunn Comedies and the Gump give Mr. Friedman a great supply of fun makers.

Lee Herz, president of the Siles Film Exchange, Chicago, has just returned from New York where he purchased the territorial rights for Illinois for the film "Blind Love," which will be released between July 1st and September 1st. "Blind Love" is a six-reel feature produced by George Watterson, and starring Mr.
Max Marcin, author of "The Eyes of Youth," "Cheating Cheaters" and "Rings for the Ring." In the cast appearing in "Blind Love" is George Le Guere, at present playing in a picture entitled "Mamma's Affair" now running at the Cort theatre,
Chicago.

Among the purchases that Mr.
Hersz made in New York also is a series of three five-reel features warring Rex Ray.

Martin and Savage, of Keokuk,
Iowa, took over the Colonial Theatre of that city on May 15th, according to Mr. Savage who was a Chicago visitor last week.

S. J. Gregory, of the Illinois
Theatre, Chicago, is planning a motor trip to the East early in July to visit in Boston for some time. He will be accompanied by Sam Jaffe, secretary and arranged by S. J. Gregory Theatrical Company, owners of houses in Chicago Heights, Hammond, Indiana, and other nearby cities.

G. E. Pomroy, recently connected with Vitagraph Pictures in Rock Island, Galesburg, and Beloit, Wisconsin, has added the Amusco Theatre, Muscatine, Iowa, to his string.

R. T. Smith, assistant manager of Superior Screen Service, Incorporated, recently purchased a handsome bungalow situated at 7636
East End Avenue, for a reported purchase of $25,000. Manager
Harry Weiss, who is well known, has bought the adjoining property,
and will erect a bungalow thereon.

Plans for the five-story hotel,

Ready to Use Props to Be Furnished for "Idol Dancer"

Michigan Cities May Obtain Complete Lobby Display from Exchange

C O-OPERATION among exhibitors to increase public response to exploitation for the purpose of reducing the cost of this branch of showing motion pictures has provided Michigan cities and towns with rare treats in the past six weeks. Results from the box office standpoint have been so satisfactory it is more than likely that the demand from exhibitors will force the preparation of special "props" and the other paraphernalia for special presentation in connection with future big feature releases in the territory.

Harry Scott, manager of the First National Exchange in Detroit, may be regarded as the pioneer in providing exhibitors in his territory with ready-for-use presentations. "The Idol Dancer" was the picture which developed the idea. Mr. Scott felt that this romance of the South Seas would do extraordinary business for any exhibitor if it was properly presented and Hawaiian music, in his opinion, was one of the essentials. He found that if solid bookings could be promised, Hawaiian orchestras and dancers could be procured at a relatively small daily cost.

In his preliminary announcements of the release of the picture he sent a query to exhibitors asking how much they felt they could pay for such an attraction to be used as part of the presentation for "The Idol Dancer."

The replies were such that he immediately booked the Royal Hawaiian Trio and Princess Kawan, billed as the "Champion Hula Dancer of Honolulu," for three months solid time. Suggestions were sent out to the exhibitors booking the picture as to special stage settings, and lobby displays that could be prepared at small cost.

A typical result of the co-operation between the exchange and the exhibitors is shown in the way "The Idol Dancer" was put on at the Majestic Garden Theatre in Kalamazoo, a city of 50,000 population, by W. Griffith Mitchell, the manager. Incidentally it was the first special presentation ever given in Kalamazoo, and Mr. Mitchell reaped the benefits of the extreme novelty.

Beaver board and paint in the hands of a scenic artist prepared a plentiful supply of imitation thatched roofing, which in itself is a tropical looking "prop" as could have been used. Enough of this material was taken to fit across the front of the marquee of the theatre. Deep blue electric bulbs were used in back of this sign and in the entire lighting of the marquee and the lobby, adding to the tropical effect and also enhancing the realism of the imitation thatching. The lobby was lined with the prepared beaver board, as were the entrances to the auditorium. The stage was prepared so that the screen appeared to have been fastened to the outside wall of a thatched hut. The settings were all of beaver board and canvas. The blue lighting effect was continued on the stage.

Kalamazoo is the home of the Gibson mandolin company, and the fact that "The Idol Dancer" lent itself especially to string music led Mr. Mitchell to make a proposition to the mandolin company of a special Gibson orchestra for the showing of the picture. The company was glad of the advertising and in addition to providing all the necessary instructions stood half of the salaries of the players. An orchestra was formed, using first and second mandolins, mandolas, mando-cellos, mandos-bass, harp, guitar and a piano.

The troupe of Hawaiians put on their act just before the run of the picture with the idea of creating a different atmosphere from that following the finish of a two-reel comedy. With the ending piece of the act, which was an instrumental number of a popular Hawaiian air, the lights were lowered and the run of the feature commenced, the string orchestra joining in with the Hawaiian players, so that the beautiful, south sea moonlight scene with which Mr. Griffith opens the picture was ushered in to the plaintive croon of the Hawaiian guitars and the soft singing tinkle of the mandolins.

The run of the picture established a profits as well as a receipts and attendance record for the theatre. The appreciation which the Kalamazoo public gave to the efforts of Mr. Mitchell, and the reception given to the special presentation of the Griffith picture in every part of Michigan where the Hawaiians and special efforts were used, has caused any number of requests from exhibitors who did not believe the extra attractions would pay, to give them another chance to co-operate. Mr. Scott is planning to offer special presentation on all F.N. pictures as soon as he can make the necessary arrangements.

Theophilis Had a Regular Hunch

GOING to the Lorain, Ohio, Opera House during the week of May 9th, was just like taking a trip to the orient, only it was much cheaper. However, all of the inconveniences of travel were eliminated, while all of the pleasures of foreign atmosphere were supplied in good measure.

"The Flame of the Desert" was the inspiration of Manager Peter Theophilis. He had a hunch that the picture would stand a lot of atmospheric trimming, and according to his report of business for the week, his hunch was right.

To begin with, Manager Theophilis started out to spread "atmosphere" all over Lorain. He did this with the aid of two snow-white more-or-less Arabian steeds, mounted by two equally more-or-less genuine Arabians. Anyhow, they looked like Arabians, and they rode up and down the main streets of Lorain for four days, heralding the fact that "The Flame of the Desert" was the current attraction at the Opera House.

Bringing the "atmosphere" a little nearer home, Manager Theophilis had two other Arabians standing at the entrance of the theatre. They flanked the doorway, standing, with arms folded, as still as statues.

But the big punch came when you were seated within, and the show commenced. Just before the feature started, the heavy velvet curtains parted on a scene of oriental splendor. A specially painted background, flanked by dozens and dozens of palm trees, were raising the main streets of Lorain. The group was composed from an advanced dance class and rendered the "Dance of the Enchantress."

The prologue was a tremendous hit with the patrons of the Opera House. It brought people from near and far. It brought regular patrons, and many who had never been inside the Opera House.

Columbus Exhibitor Takes Advantage of Aeroplane Convention

Uses Flying Machine to Exploit "Butterfly Man" with Audience Ready Made

EXPLOITATION for motion pictures. One kind creates a situation and then follows the created situation to a logical conclusion. The other kind of exploitation takes advantage of a made situation, and rides in on the tide of local interest.

That's what Manager H. Frankel of the Majestic theatre, Columbus, Ohio, did the week of May 9th, in connection with the first showing in the state of "The Butterfly Man." Frankel tied his fortunes to the other fellow's kite, and beat him at his own game.

It so happened that during the week prior to May 9th, the Aerial Club of America held its first annual convention in Columbus. A lot of flyers were in the city, of course, and a big exhibition was planned. Arrangements called for the aerialists to perform over State House square during the noon hour of a certain day. Now Manager Frankel knew what that day was to be. He knew that everybody in Columbus who could, would be in the neighborhood of State House square at that time. He also knew a student of Ohio State University, Joseph B. Kuhn, who had been in the airplane service during the war. Kuhn likes flying, and has a little plane of his own, which he uses for commercial purposes.

Manager Frankel engaged the services of Mr. Kuhn for the day of the aerial exhibition. He painted the bottom of the plane with big letters spelling "The Butterfly Man." And he had Kuhn fly over State House square just fifteen minutes before the big show was scheduled to start. His audience was all set. They were out looking for planes, and along came Kuhn, and he got the attention of all those thousands of eyes. But Kuhn wasn't alone. In his plane were a mechanic and another man. The three of 'em seemed to be having a nice time while the plane was flying straight, but when it suddenly dipped, one of the occupants seemed to bend over and as the plane dipped more and more, he lost his balance and fell out.

There then was some real excitement. Some women screamed. Some fainted. One of them turned in an ambulance alarm, and amid all the noise came the clanging of the ambulance bell. Then they reached the mangled form of their fallen victim and learned from the sawdust that surrounded him that he was a dummy, and that he was only another advertisement for "The Butterfly Man."

This publicity had a wonderful effect on business, according to Manager Frankel, who reported crowds standing in line before the Majestic all week. Everybody in Columbus knew about the stunt. And whoever knew that, knew also that the "The Butterfly Man," was the object of the stunt. And how the newspapers used the story! It was on the front page of the Columbus Dispatch. It was on the society page of both the Dispatch and the Ohio State Journal. In fact, the two papers, in their Sunday editions of May 9th carried fifteen unsolicited notices about "The Butterfly Man." These fifteen notices, if assembled, would have covered an entire page.

Manager Frankel is a showman as well as an exhibitor. His job is a bigger one than to start a ball rolling. He keeps the ball rolling. And so having received more than his share of publicity with his aerial exhibition, he kept that publicity focused on his theatre, and his show all week by putting on a special prologue with scenery, lighting effects, and all the trimmings that make a big show good, and good show better. Four young girls danced a butterfly dance in this prologue, as nearly like the one danced in the "Butterfly Man" as possible. Costumes, scenery and gestures were duplicated. The result was that the picture seemed real. It made the story an actual happening, instead of a play, and it made it more interesting to more people, judging from the amount of business done during the run of the picture.

Branham’s Stunt Stuff Sets Town Talking

"Down on the Farm" Gets Great Exploitation Campaign at Minneapolis

"DOWN ON THE FARM" was an attraction which Charles Branham, who has been playing the United Artists attractions now available at the Minneapolis Auditorium for week runs, gave an exploitation campaign which will be long remembered by residents of the Twin Cities.

Branham is a native of Minneapolis and an old newspaper man with thousands of friends and acquaintances in the city.

Naturally with his knowledge of the newspaper game and being a good showman as well, he began his advertising campaign in the papers. Next came the bill boards and other more orthodox forms of publicity.

After this came stunt stuff that set the town talking. The week before the Sennett comedy was to open at the Auditorium a "Rube" hand with the biggest giant in the Middle West as the star attraction, paralleled the streets creating no end of attention.

The band leader was John Assen, the village cut-up of New Rockford, N. D., who is seven feet four inches high and weighs 391 pounds. He wanted to get into "the movies" and so Mr. Branham gave him a chance to lead a "rube" orchestra in a Minneapolis theatre, did all sorts of antics on the streets, and during the prologue, was one of the dancers. His work during the week created all sorts of attractive comment.

The only thing done in exploitation on the exterior of the theatre were attractively painted signs, since this sort of material at this particular section of Minneapolis is far better than exterior decorations. But the interior of the theatre was turned into a real honest-to-goodness, with hay and straw everywhere, and farm implements to be found on all sides, while the stage was decorated precisely like the loft of a real barn.

The orchestra was tastefully dressed in full farm-hand regalia, wearing large straw hats and playing all of the old time "hoe-down" music that was ever written. As a prologue to the picture "country girls and village fellers" danced a good old-fashioned square dance, with practically every one in the audience having the time of their lives when the commands came forth, "Salute your partners," "balance all," while the audience kept time to the music.

Every day the management pulled new stunts, such as would legitimately draw crowds, never exaggerating their product, but just telling the public enough about, and keeping on telling them. The newspaper reviewers were very generous with their praises of the picture, but the best of all came from the word-of-mouth business that was obtained by those people who packed the theatre the first few days.

Theatres Located in Different Towns Play Same Attractions Day and Date

Brazing the trail for smaller town exhibitors situated conveniently nearby—although their respective cities bear different names—comes a tried-and-proven exploitation stunt from Robert Hayward, manager of the Regent theatre, Beaver Falls, Pa., and Louis Nadler, manager of the Majestic theatre, Rochester.

To correctly understand the plan of Messrs. Hayward and Hadley it is necessary to know the size of their cities. Beaver Falls has a population of 13,100 and Rochester has 5,903 inhabitants. Less than a score of miles separates the two cities and in this day of the automobile and lifesaver this distance is unimportant.

The policy of day-and-date engagements sponsored by rival theatre managers in the same city for any given special feature attraction and the pooling of exploitation efforts in the accomplishing thereof is not new.

However, to apply this city principle to the smaller town exhibitors is the accomplishment of Messrs. Hayward and Nadler.

Thus far, the Regent theatre of Beaver Falls and the Majestic theatre at Rochester have tried the scheme with but one attraction—"In Old Kentucky." In inaugurating the plan the cooperating exhibitors took full advantage of a local condition applying to their respective cities when they grouped their advertising in the columns of the Beaver Daily Times, which publication has quite a large circulation in Rochester. The managers figured they could obtain a more effective display spread, creating far more word-of-mouth publicity and general interest if they went in for a combination advertisement centering on the points of merit in the picture and consuming but little space for the exaltment of the charms of either theatre.

"It is essentially a proposition of creating and meeting a big desire," said Mr. Nadler. The whole thing can be considered an out-and-out business way. Grant that a couple of business firms had a new commodity on the market. The firms are located in nearby towns. In order to popularize the article they want to sell, they could well afford to join hands in its exploitation, thus creating the demand and each meeting the demand on a sound and square business basis.

"Putting 'In Old Kentucky' over in either of the two cities would have required almost as much money as we spent for both cities. There was a saving. Furthermore, if Mr. Hayward and I had acted independently of each other with regard to this picture it is likely that neither of us would have experienced a three-day run. As any exhibitor knows, a three-day engagement is quite an event in a town under 20,000 population."

Mr. Hayward of the Beaver Falls house explains that there is a far more logical reason for the day-and-date in nearby towns than in the same city. It is his contention that the primary reason for the simultaneous showing is a factor of more significance in the smaller towns than in the larger cities.

"The day-and-date showing," said Mr. Hayward, "was conceived for the express purpose of impressing the public with the bigness of a picture. From the time the first two exhibitors agreed to pool their advertising money and advertise the same picture the main idea for so doing was to convince the public that the picture deemed great enough to be given a simultaneous showing certainly merited patronage. This is not saying that the day-and-date is dependent upon word-of-mouth exploitation for exactly the opposite is true. Even the most casual reader of a newspaper is impressed when he finds that two theatres are giving their unqualified endorsements to the same production. When one house puts its good reputation behind a picture the average theatregoer is not struck. Such is expected. But when two houses favor it with their preference, then truly the public feels the weight of a double endorsement.

"Mr. Nadler and I take no credit for originating the idea of day-and-date bookings in the large or small towns. Trade paper accounts show that such procedure has been in vogue over a period of eight or ten years off and on. But we do take credit for having put over a good box-office deal for ourselves and if there is any value to other exhibitors located in adjoining towns similar to our own in what we have done we are glad that it be made known.

So far as the word-for-word literary and copy value for other showmen is concerned, the campaign of the Messrs. Nadler and Hayward for "In Old Kentucky" is not vital. But their idea in joining hands, despite the fact that they were separated by more than twenty miles, is new and a bit of pioneer showmanship. And if results in attendance and box office records count for anything it is certain that the feat put across by Bob Hayward and Louie Nadler will have some good food-for-thought value to other exhibitors.

"Who Am I?" Brings Crowds to "Fortune Teller"

You can lead a horse to water but you cannot make it drink. The positive of the old adage is that you can lead a crowd to your box office and make them deposit the necessary admission to your theatre, providing you can excite their curiosity. The difference being that a horse is not always thirsty, but human thirst for motion pictures cannot be satiated.

With this idea in mind, the management of the Bijou theatre in Jackson, Mich., took the suggestion outlined in the press book on "The Fortune Teller." As suggested, they engaged professional "seers" to give demonstrations in connection with the showing of the picture, but they also persuaded one of them to walk around the street in his oriental make-up.

A crystal ball, which is used in "The Fortune Teller," was carried by the man in the capacious pockets of his flowing robes he carried a number of cards which he gave out to the hundreds who expressed curiosity in his appearance. The cards merely excited further curiosity for they read—"WHO AM I?—Come to the Bijou and find out."

The best proof of the success of the stunt was the crowds who followed the man to the Bijou and, as above noted, paid the necessary at the box office. The stunt created so much interest that the local papers carried stories about it in sufficient volume to make "The Fortune Teller" the talk of Jackson.

Opportunities for Those Who Operate Shows in the "Tanks" Says Todd

"THERE'S a wonderful opportunity for the man who wants to develop the motion picture theatres in the small towns," Bert Todd, secretary and general manager of the Manheim-Tucker Amusement Enterprises, National City Bank Building, Cleveland, said recently. "The small town motion picture exhibitor has neglected to read the sign posts on the road to success, and because he has not kept abreast of the times, he has made it possible for others to step in and give the small town fan proportionately the same kind of entertainment that the big town fan is getting."

The Manheim-Tucker Amusement Enterprises owns two big small town motion picture theatres. One is the Utopia, a thousand seat house in Painesville. The other is a house of like size in Geneva. Geneva has a population not in excess of 5,000 people. Painesville's last census numbered about 30,000. "We plan to own a chain of houses in all the principal northern Ohio towns of population from three to thirty thousand. We shall build these houses, so that they shall meet all modern requirements, and shall operate them on the same principle as other chain houses are operated."

"Fundamentally we believe that the small towns in northern Ohio aren't getting a fair deal. Most small town exhibitors think they are doing all that's necessary when they knock out a dilapidated store room, put up a theatre front, plaster it with a couple of posters and run a show. Now that's all wrong. The small towns want pretty theatres. They respond to pleasant surroundings just the same as the big town patrons do. More so. Because they have fewer diversions and take great pride in local civic improvements."

"We also believe in exploitation. That's another thing that most small town exhibitors fight shy of. They're afraid it might cost 'em a couple of dollars. We have been operating the Utopia in Painesville for over a year and by consistent exploitation, we have more than quadrupled the house's receipts. Seldom does a picture pass without special exploitation of some sort. Our displays are seldom costly. A ten dollar bill covers the most elaborate ones. Half of that is the average expenditure. People come from all over to see what the Utopia lobby has by way of lobby surprise. Take this one," Todd said, picking up a picture of his lobby for "Shore Acres," which just completed a phenomenal run at the Utopia, Painesville. "We gave over the entire side of the lobby to a painting of a water scene. It was done on Beaver board by Clinton Covert, our drummer, he has a knack for this sort of thing. He turned out the art work completely in an hour and a half. The scene was 10x12 feet. In one corner we had a ten-foot lighthouse, built up out of out-of-date window cards. When new cards are placed in display windows the old ones are collected. Placed one over the other and painted, they looked just like singleles. There was an on-again off-again light in the tower of the lighthouse, of course. And there was also a gong in the tower that attracted widespread attention. This gong was also the result of Clinton Covert's fertile brain. He took an old clock, and removed some of its organs, leaving only enough to move the gong. He inserted a small gong, and with every full swing of the pendulum, the gong sounded. It was great stuff, and made a lot of conversation. At the foot of the lighthouse were rocks and a small house, supposedly for the lighthouse keeper."

"This whole display didn't cost over five dollars, but it brought in many times five dollars."

"There's another point on which the average small town exhibitor has slipped, and that's in the matter of bookings. It's the usual thing to hear an exhibitor for a neighboring town say that he won't run a picture when it's new because it costs too much money. Now that exhibitor is all wrong. We run a picture in Painesville directly after its first run in Cleveland. Usually the following week. And we have been very successful in this method. Here's the reason. The Sunday Cleveland papers all circulate throughout the nearby towns. Everybody reads 'em. Everybody knows what's going on in town. The papers are full of advertising on the town shows. So we follow right on the heels of the big town, and ride right in on their exploitation. It's better than compensates for the big time prices we have to pay for the pictures. Also, many of the small town people go to town and see the shows. They come home and talk about them to their friends. And we show the same productions while they are still being discussed at the family dinner tables. What's the use of all this until a production is old and dead and forgotten? No matter how good it was in its youth, it will not have the same pull with the public as it had originally."

At the Liberty theatre in Geneva we proceed along the same lines. Big shows and new shows. Only in Geneva we have a more intimate policy of running the house. Mrs. C. Weisenberger is resident manager of the Liberty. She knows everybody in the town. And she makes it her business to know what kind of shows the people of Geneva want to see. How does she find out? Why, she calls on them and visits with them and asks them how their tastes run. And she has a unique way of getting patrons from the towns around Geneva to attend the Liberty. Every once in a while she offers a free pass for a month to the patron who travels the farthest to attend a show at the Liberty theatre. Every ticket that comes in is then marked and to the one who has ventured the farthest, goes the month-pass. That pass is seen by everybody in the place where the winner lives, and the Liberty theatre is talked about on all sides. If by any chance there should be a few people in Geneva who are not enrolled as regular patrons of the Liberty theatre, Mrs. Weisenburger gets them by offering a pass to the persons giving in the names of ten residents who do not attend the shows. When she gets the names, she calls on them, asks why they stay away from the pictures, and leaves a couple of passes on the sitting room table. It invariably works. And they always become regulars ever after."

The Liberty theatre, Geneva, and the Utopia theatre, Painesville, have also the admission prices in common with the city houses as well as their attractions. They are twenty-eight cents regularly, and thirty-nine cents for special productions. The Manheim-Tucker Amusement Enterprises do all of their booking from their Cleveland office. They do all of their special exploitation in their Cleveland office. But the local atmosphere of a picture is worked up individually by the local managers—H. F. Lederer in Painesville, and Mrs. Weisenberger in Geneva. As soon as this plan of booking and exploiting and managing is extended to cover fourteen or fifteen houses in towns near Cleveland, as it will within the year, the older, out-dated, small town exhibitor will be relegated to the ash heap, and all because he wouldn't hitch up to the wheels of progress.

Sugar Sacks Used as Ad for Willow Tree

As a means of cooperating with the New Garrick theatre in Minneapolis, Minn., in its exploitation of "The Willow Tree," A. H. Fischer, branch manager of Metro's Minneapolis exchange, devised a novel exploitation stunt recently. The stunt consisted in printing up a number of little paper sugar sacks, bearing the name of the star, the title of the production, name of the theatre and date of showing, and were placed in one of the big local cafeterias for use by its patrons.

Big Results Expected from "Passers By"

Based on the reports of Pathé reviewers and branch managers, Pathé Exchange, Inc., expects the latest J. Stuart Blackton picture, "Passers By," to surpass in distribution and in popularity anything ever produced by Commodore Blackton. The statement is made after a careful analysis of the advance situation and with full knowledge of the strength of the prediction.

A notable cast has been assembled. Herbert Rawlinson is claimed to be one of the best drawing cards on the screen. William J. Ferguson is one of the best known actors on the American stage and has been identified with the best productions of the last forty years. Tom Lewis and Dick Lee are two other really famous men of the stage who are in the cast Ellen Cassidy and Leila Valentine complete the leading characters of what may be termed an "all-star cast."

Exchangers Combine Baseball and Track

West was best when Metro exchange men from the East and West fought it out in a ballgame recently in connection with the annual convention of branch managers and branch managers in New York. For three innings it resembled a ballgame, but finally degenerated into a track meet, the final score being 20 to 6, with the Westerners on the top.

Blackwell Appears in "The Restless Sex"

Carlyle Blackwell, who has placed his name to a metropolitan contract, will make his first appearance with Marion Davies in her latest starring vehicle, "The Restless Sex," from the Robert W. Chambers' novel of the same name.

Metro Improves West Coast Plant

Studio construction operations started several months ago by Metro on the West Coast, are to be rushed to completion. Work has also begun on a three-story receiving, shipping, and property building at the Metro plant.

Another "Flying A" Soon

American Film Makes "The Week End," Cosmo Hamilton's Story

"The Week End," a play from the pen of Cosmo Hamilton, will be the next "Flying A" Special, to be released by the American, following "Peggy Rebels." It is a story of Margarita Farmer, a woman selection, and in it she appears in the stellar role at her best under the direction of George L. Cox.

An unconventional comedy-drama, startling with the Cosmo Hamilton touch, with most of the action crowded into a few days during an unchaperoned weekend at Hideaway Cottage, with Margarita Farmer delightfully in some amusing scenes—this is one of the American Specials offered for summer business.

Milton Sills, the handsome leading man, does some earnest love making in an exceedingly satisfactory manner, thereby winning the hearts of all the women fans, for all through his successful career there has been a tacit agreement that he is the sort of a man they would not mind serving coffee to morning out of the year. In the role of his rival for the hand of the whimsical Vera, Bertram Grassby is very much at home in a black society role for which he is celebrated.

The remainder of the supporting cast is said to be unusually well chosen.

Second of New Rolin Series Out in June

"Start the Show" is the title selected for the second of the new series of Rolin comedies, starring Beatrice La Plante. This picture will be released by Pathé June 13th.
"Humoresque" Huge Triumph

"HUMORESQUE," Cosmopolitan Productions' picturization of Fannie Hurst's story of mother love, featuring Alma Rubens, and directed by Frank Borzage, which opened an indefinite pre-release engagement at the Criterion theatre, Broadway at 44th street, N. Y., Sunday, May 30, is declared by many critics to be the greatest hit of the year in motion pictures. This judgment is made after considering the fact that the big Criterion has been packed to capacity at every performance of "Humoresque" and hundreds are turned away at each show.

Enthusiastically received by the daily press of New York, and hailed as the year's first screen offering and the logical successor to "The Miracle Man," "Humoresque's" popularity is daily growing larger. While capacity performances are the best attestation of a motion picture's success, the opinions of the critics of New York's daily press reveal in a measure the unprecedented hit "Humoresque" has made.

Says Kaufman in the New York Globe: "We do not propose to tell you the story. We propose to ask you to go to the Criterion to see what a combination of human people can do in a motion picture. It is the Miracle Man class. We've seen it twice — but there are more days of its run at the Criterion.

It is made by the New York Evening Mail: "Humoresque" to my mind is the second best picture ever shown on Broadway, and, although "The Miracle Man" continues to head the list, I am of the opinion that "Humoresque" carries as much, if not more, appeal than quality.

The New York Evening Sun said: "There is real humor and real pathos in 'Humoresque' and real characterizations of real people. When such scenes of drama appear in one moving picture, one should be duly amazed and thankful, and should register their gratitude by attending the picture.

The Brooklyn Citizen said: "The producers say the picture has the humor of 'Potash and Perlmutter' and the pathos of 'The Music Master.' It has more, because it has both, and it has both in their contrasts and in their finer shadings."

New York Press Enthralled by Production

Alan Dale in the New York American said: "Humoresque" is something ardently new in pictures. Even the most cullous need not expect to escape a lump in the throat. It sets a new picture pace.

Frank Pope in the Journal of Commerce said: "Humoresque" ranks with that other masterpiece of the screen, "The Miracle Man."

The Illustrated Daily News said: "We warn you not to miss 'Humoresque.'"

The New York Tribune said: "It is doubtful if a better picturization has been placed on the screen in a decade."

The Evening Post said: "Never before has the colorful atmosphere of the crowded East Side been so vividly sustained."

The New York Commercial said: "It stands unrivaled among motion pictures."

Seldom in the annals of the amusement world has an attraction of any kind received such unanimous and unqualified praise at the hands of the critics. And the fact that it did and that it continues to play to standing room only at every performance at the Criterion is proof sufficient of its tremendous appeal to the popular taste and its great drawing power. While its run at the Criterion is a pre-release showing, "Humoresque" already gives evidence of becoming one of the biggest money-makers ever known in motion pictures.

Reports Heavy Call for "The House of Toys"

Heavy advance bookings for extended runs in some of the largest "Class A" theatres are being taken by the producers as an earnest of the coming popularity of the New American Special, "The House of Toys." In fact, this new heart drama, starring Seena Owen, promises a new book for "Flying A" features of this class, says American Film Company.

Among the advance bookings for extended runs before the prints were shipped from the Chicago executive offices were the Isis theaters, Kansas City; the Southern at Columbus, Ohio; the Boston at Boston; the Victory at Providence; the Marcus, Low Circuit of New York; the Granada Circuit at Washington, D. C., etc., etc.

Two Metro Companies Out on Location

Metro's New York studios in Wets Sixty-first Street, which have recently been the scene of continuous activity with three productions going on at once, have quietly down this week to the comparative calm. The S-L production, "Love, Honor and Obey" is having its rural scenes screened on Long Island, and Cecil Raleigh's Drury Lane melodrama, "The Marriages of Mayfair," adapted by Julia Burnham, is having some of its outdoor scenes screened at Stamford, Conn.

Walsh Leases Office on Broadway

In line with the extension of his producing activities, R. A. Walsh has leased a suite of offices in the Capitol Theatre Building, Broadway, N. Y. The newly acquired quarters will house the producer's executive staff consisting of Harold Horne, production manager; J. T. O'Donohue, head of the play-reading and research departments, and Ralph Mahan, office manager and private secretary to Mr. Walsh.

F. P. - Lasky Exchanges Have New Managers

Al Lichtman, general manager of the department of distribution of the Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation, this week announces changes in the personnel of three exchanges. Herbert S. Edel has been made branch manager at Cleveland, and E. M. Strube is promoted to manager of the Pittsburgh office. In Boston, H. I. Kraus has been appointed manager of the branch office.

Plan Revival Featuring Shirley Mason

The Photo Products Export Company of 220 West 42nd street, New York, announce that the growing popularity of Shirley Mason has induced the firm to revive a series of dramas featuring this young artist. The revival involves seven pictures in all. They will be handled by the Photo Products Export Co., who is to act as selling agent. They anticipate no difficulty in disposing of the rights, they say.

Realart to Announce Its Policy

A

N announcement of its 1920-1921 plan and policy will be issued shortly from the offices of Realart Pictures Corporation regarding the company's policy for the current year.

The statement will be of a most comprehensive nature, including not only the production activities of the company for the next year but a complete booking plan which will embrace new and novel features for both large and small exhibitors.

The new policy announcement is the result of the strenuous conference held recently for a week between the Realart field men and home office officials. It will be the first detailed statement which the company has made, inasmuch as its activities during the last season were limited to six months of actual business.

There will be some welcome news for exhibitors all over the country, declared General Manager Woody, "in the announcement we are to make within a short time. Not only our old friends but hundreds of other exhibitors who, I am confident, will join the Realart family this year, but I am interested in the proposition we will have to offer.

While I cannot yet disclose any of the details of the plan, let me state that the evidence that progressive and co-operative spirit, which has characterized all of the first to earn the confidence of exhibitors and make our dealings mutually profitable and I think the new year's policy reflects a full realization of this purpose.

Realart called all its managers in, and after sending them into their territories to get a first hand knowledge of what exhibitors wanted. All of the material was presented to the conference, carefully gone over and analyzed. We have formulated plans to conform with this information and to advance, as far as we can, the interests of large and small exhibitors.

Realart is ready for any exhibitor who wants a showdown. Our cards are on the table, the entire front from a new adman deck and no joker running wild. Despite the fact that the company has many full houses, it is to be a gentleman's game and Realart invites the best in the business to the table.

"Although our plans may occasion some surprise for their size and importance, they are fully justified by the success which Realart has had in its year of existence. Despite the fact that we didn't get under way until late in the season, we made a record that places us at the head of the field. That such success is possible are at the foundation of our next year's plan. That's promising exhibitors something wonderful.

Items of Interest in Paramount Magazine

A sense of mystery pervades the heading of "No-Account News," Paramount Magazine's featured subject for June 13. The columns of ordinary routine in journalistic life—"no-account" items are done into something delightful. The picture has simply taken up odd incidents here and there about which no one could form any kind of a composite story in film which tingles with dramatic interest.
Love Letter Contest Ends
15,000 Answers Received by Robertson-Cole Help Boost Lew Cody

FIFTEEN thousand love letters, ranging in length anywhere from one hundred to one thousand words each, were received at the Robertson-Cole offices in answer to the love letter contest that was promoted in the name of Lew Cody. The judges have just announced that they have read all the letters and have awarded the first prize of $100 to Maude H. Bell, of Greeley, Colorado.

Anne Rankin Murray, of the Centennial Club of Nashville, Tenn., demonstrated that the Southern girls, although soft-spoken in speech, are love-making winners when they can put their thoughts to paper. She captured the second prize of $100. The Los Angeles girls will be delighted to be selected for writing to Lew Cody.

The judges have announced that they are not sure that Miss Cody and all the winners have been selected, and will announce the winners in due course. The contest was conducted in the name of Lew Cody, and has received the highest possible commendation from all offices.

Mack Sennett to be Busy
Comedy King Plans Many Five-Reelers During Coming Year

MACK SENNETT'S policies are outlined each time a personal representative, E. M. Ascher, who just returned to New York, comments a year of extraordinary activity. New associations will be established and new ventures hazarded on the sea of motion pictures.

Mr. Sennett's first necessities in New York, says his representative, will be the organization of the Producers' Association, of which organization Mack Sennett is president, and the members of which, besides Mr. Sennett, include Thomas H. Ince, Marshall Neilan, Maurice Tourneur, Allan Dwan, and George Leon Tucker.

On another front, the immediately forthcoming distribution of Sennett's latest five-reel comedy, "Married Life," Mr. Ascher's present duties relate to its release through First National. The release date is set for June 15, and the picture has been safely delivered in New York. The picture says Mr. Ascher will even eclipse the popularity of "Down on the Farm," which proved a record breaker.

Ninety days following the release of "Married Life" will see the beginning of the distribution of the second five-reel comedy, for which the First National has contracted, says Mr. Ascher. This will bring Mr. Sennett's activities up to the time of the beginning of operations by the Associated Producers which thereafter will distribute Sennett Comedies.

These activities of Mr. Sennett will include the production of two-five-reel feature faxes, five-reel comedies, and five-reel comedy-dramas. Mr. Sennett refuses the rumor that he is to discontinue the production of two-reel comedy features.

Seitz Serial Comes in August
Pathe Names August 15 as Date for Release of "Pirate's Gold"

WITH the designation of August 15th as the date of its release, Pathe announces Pirate Gold, starring George S. Seitz, with Marguerite Courtot, as one of its most important serial offerings of the year.

This new serial, in ten episodes, is the second offering in which George S. Seitz is star, and owing to the popularity he gained in "Bound and Gagged," the picture is regarded as a notable one. It is a personal, adventure serial form a new style and his employment of the situation of suspense in place of the mere physical action and thrill stunts of the conventional serial was hailed as a novelty. Mr. Seitz used the same method in the production of "Pirate Gold." The play is by Frank Leon Smith, author of "Bound and Gagged," and it deals with a refreshing idea in an adventure-romance. The story is modern dealing with a post-war incident, and plays in a locale near New York.

The picture has been pronounced by Pathe to be up to the expectations created for it by "Bound and Gagged." In every department of the offering "Pirate Gold" is said to attain the standards required to give it a place on the screens of the big theatres. The company appearing in support of Mr. Seitz and Miss Courtot, is headed by Harry Semels.

Broadway Goldwyn Strong
Spring Season Marks Record for Goldwyn's Broadway Showings

THE spring season is marking a record for Goldwyn Pictures at the leading Broadway theatres, the Capitol, the Strand and the Broadway. Early in May, after occupying the Capitol for a week, Rex Beach's "The Silver Horde" was moved to the Broadway for a two weeks' run that was terminated by the engagement of Edgar Rice Burroughs' sensational jungle story, "The Republic of Tarzan." The Numa production handled by Goldwyn. The run that started May 30th with capacity audiences bids fair to extend well into the summer.

"Will Rogers in "Bus Call Me Jim," which was received as one of the season's strongest attractions at the Strand during the week of May 23rd, was followed the week of the 30th by Madison Kennedy's "Dollars and Sense," an Octavian Roy Cohen story written directly for the screen. In telling characterization, pointed humor and story appeal, "Dollars and Sense" takes a place among the finest productions in which the Goldwyn comedienne has ever appeared. Harry Beaumont directed a cast including such popular players as Kenneth Harlan, Mary Kennedy's leading man; Willard Louis, well known for his work in Goldwyn pictures, and Richard Tucker, who has supported many of the leading stars of the day.

Other Goldwyn pictures scheduled for an early showing on Broadway are the picturization of Gertrude Atherton's great novel, "The Lover of Ivory," renamed "Out of the Storm," and Rupert Hughes' inimitable comedy, "Scratch My Back." Both of these productions are in the eminent authors series.

News Reel Shows Presidential Aspirants

In the International News Reel No. 31, distributed by Universal, are shown the pictures of many of the aspirants to the Republican candidacy for President, who are now more than ever before the public on account of the convention in Chicago. Views of Senator Johnson, General Wood, Senator Harding, Governor Lowden, Herbert Hoover, Senator Pomeroy, Governor Allen, Governor Coolidge and General Pershing are all shown.

"Miracle Man" Breaks Record for Remuschi

Frank Remuschi's American theatre, at Columbus, Ind., set a new record for itself when it recently played George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man." Manager Carrson, Mr. Remuschi's representative, put on a clever newspaper and outdoor exploitation campaign for the big picture, and was awarded with sensational results, the picture running two days, to be booked back in the near future for another day.

Hampton Picture Bests Its Predecessors

Few Interior Scenes in Leah Baird Picture

"Cynthia-of-the-Minute," starring Leah Baird, the Gibraltar picture version of Joseph H. V. Harms novel for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, is said to be one of the very few plays recently completed to represent the great outdoors by land and sea practically to the exclusion of interiors.

Heat Has No Terror for Pathe

With the approach of the summer period and the difficulty it presents to distributors and exhibitors alike, Elmer R. Pearson, Director of Exchanges of Pathe Exchange, Inc., strikes a reassuring note in a report he has just made to Vice-President and General Manager Paul Brunet, regarding the situation throughout the country. Mr. Pearson has gained from personal travel and from reports from Exchange managers that everywhere conditions are such as to warrant the belief that this will be the biggest summer in the history of the motion picture industry.

Mr. Pearson's report did not imply that business will hold up as it has during the last few months, but did indicate it will not undergo the severe decrease that has marked it during recent summers.

"There is only one cure for poor summer business," said Mr. Pearson, "and that is high-class pictures. People demand amusement and entertainment in the hot months, just as in any other period of the year. Yet there are exhibitors who invite a decrease in business by supplying their patrons with cheaper programs. They apparently fail to realize the serious consequence this will have on their business when the summer is over."

"Pathe will not enroll the class of its production in the least during the summer. In fact, a number of the biggest pictures in Pathe's history will be released during this season. For instance, there will be "J. Stuart Blackton's "Passerby," a production that cost more than $100,000, and which undoubtedly is one of the finest pictures the industry has ever seen. This is to be released on June 20th."

"Then, as an Independence Day issue, there will be William Desmond's "A Broadway Cowboy," which is in a class by itself for this type of picture."

"Harold Lloyd in his greatest comedy, "High and Dry," first of his second series of $100,000 two-reelers, is to be issued July 11th. This is a certain business getter in any kind of weather. In our Studio Department, we will release "Pirate Gold," second of the George Seitz series in which the producer is starred himself."

The public wants big, outdoor pictures for summer consumption. Consider then, these offers, which are of recent issue: "My Husband's Other Wife," a story of Broadway and the Kentucky Hills; "Other Men's Shoes," Edgar Lewis' first big Pathe feature; "The Deadlier Sex," with its wonderful settings in the California mountains; "Sherry," another Edgar Lewis offering, which is built largely outdoors, on the plane with other of Mr. Lewis' eminent works such as "The Barrier" and "Rio Grande," which transports one into the glorious Southwest—a picture with a punch throughout.

"Comedies, too, have their place in summer programs, and Pathe is offering exhibitors as fine a product as there is on the market—Bringing Up Father' Comedies; the Rolsys, starring 'Smith' Pollard and the Mrs. Sidney Drew series starring John Cumberland.

"I am thoroughly convinced that no exhibitor needs to lose money this summer, if he only supplies the public demand. It is much better to have the figures on the winning side, than on the deficit page—and the good picture is the deciding factor. The public must be pleased—and a pleased public means big money in the box office, even in summer."

Famous Boy Stories Ready

Educational to Release Judge Brown Pictures in Near Future

MOTION pictures made from the stories by Judge Willis Brown, probably the best known authority of today on the American boy, are hereafter to be released by Educational Films Corporation. The pictures will be in two reels and there will be at least one and probably two releases a month, the first being available at an early date. Twelve of the pictures are ready for laboratory work and production on others will be started in a short time.

Judge Brown, who personally produces the pictures, has devoted the greater portion of his life to work among the boys and embraces the rare qualities of knowing his subjects thoroughly, of being able and having the motion picture technique that enables him to produce quality films.

First of the "Judge Brown Stories," as they will be known, were made during the latter days of General Film Company's activities and Judge Brown's appearance in various sections of the country as a portion of his work.

"FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL"

The first motion picture production considered fine enough to form the basis of an elaborate Grand Opera

When it was learned that the magnificent Auditorium Theatre in Chicago was to be opened with Clara Kimball Young in "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL". The Exhibitor's Herald of Chicago said: "No more fitting picture than this could have been chosen by Andreas Dippel for the opening attraction. It is undoubtedly one of the best things Miss Young has done in years and will create and warrant unusual exploitation on the part of Exhibitors everywhere. It is as fine a piece of work as has graced the silver sheet for a long time."

The Billboard said: "It is a gem of superiority far above the ordinary drama picture of today. Photographic effects and many shots of Miss Young were exquisitely beautiful."

Exhibitor's Trade Review said: "Clara Kimball Young in 'For the Soul of Rafael' beautifully produced. Its lavishness and beauty entitled it to special attention... dramatic denouement of especial interest while Clara Kimball Young is given ample opportunity to display her emotional gifts and beauty which are distinctly individual."

Further criticism of the Exhibitor's Herald said: "One of the best performances of Clara Kimball Young's long screen career."

AEOLIAN HALL NEW YORK
Bert Lytell in Varied Roles

Settings of "The Price of Redemption" Decidedly Oriental in Tone

In "The Price of Redemption," his forthcoming Metro production, Bert Lytell will make a distinct departure from his customary roles, it is stated by Metro Pictures Corporation. At the opening of the picture he will portray a British soldier; then he appears in turn, as a London gentleman, a dope fiend, and finally a regenerating man.

The picture calls for many scenes in native East Indian towns, and in order to obtain an unassailable atmosphere for the settings A. W. Alley, the technical director, called to his assistance Dr. H. R. M. Maddock, a retired officer of the Indian British Army. The remarkably realistic sets finally conceived and constructed are exact reproductions of the original places in Aksar, India, states Metro.

A throne room, used in the last episode in the picture, is said to be an exact replica to the Diwan-Am, or Hall of Public Audience in the palace of Udaipur, Rajapatan. In this room are important scenes between Mr. Lytell and Edward Cecil, who enacts the Rajah and villain of the photoplay. Mr. Cecil's court costume is in every detail a copy of that worn by Rajah of Bhawanpur at the coronation durbar at Delhi in 1912.

Cleo Madision in "The Price of Redemption," plays the part of the Rajah's English mistress, a girl who through an emblazoned heart loses for a time her perspective of life's true values. The gorgeous jeweled costume she wears was cleverly worked out from suggestions furnished by Mrs. Maddock, who with her husband was a frequent guest at the various native courts where she had access to the privacy of the Zennas, a privilege extended to very few European women.

The picture is an adaptation by June Mathis of J. A. R. Wylie's powerful novel of England and the Orient, "The Temple of Dawn." It was directed by Dallas M. Fitzgerald.

Famous Has Two Features

"Below the Surface" and De Mille Reissue on Paramount Schedule

TWO features of unusual distinction, Famous Players-Lasky states, are released on the Paramount-Artcraft schedule for June 6. These are "Below the Surface," a Thomas H. Ince special production, starring Hubert Bosworth, and "Old Wives for New," the first of Cecil B. De Mille's specials dealing with problems of married life, which is now reissued.

The rocky coast of Maine serves as the picturesque background for the Bosworth picture, "Below the Surface," and the story, written by Luther Reed, is said to be as rugged as the scenery. Few motion picture actors are as much at home in stories of the sea as Mr. Bosworth. Something of the tang and power of the salt waves seems to have been transmitted to his staunch frame, and for that reason he seems to be ideally suited to his role as a veteran deep-sea diver in this Ince-supervised production directed by Irwin Willat.

Irwin Willat directed and Mr. Bosworth is given sterling support by Lloyd Hughes, Grace Darmond, Gladys George and George Webb, among others.

When it was first released just two years ago, "Old Wives for New" met with sensational success. Adapted by Jeanne Macpherson from the famous novel by David Graham Phillips, it won wide popularity because of its pictorial arrangement of the frailties of men and women and the futilities of modern society.

The production set a new standard in gorgeousness of costumes and settings, which Mr. De Mille has consistently followed in each of his succeeding society dramas. As for the cast, it may be said to be truly all-star as may ever assembled, including Elliott Dexter, Wanda Hawley, Theodore Roberts, Julia Faye, Louise Viger, Sylvia Ashon, Helen Jerome Eddy, Mareta Manon, Gustave Seyffertitz, Andy Marshall and Mayan Kelso.

The photography is by Alvin Wyckoff.

Author Visits Fox Studios

Seltzer Pleased with Picturization of His Western Story

CHARLES ALDEN SELTZER, author of many Western stories which have been used in motion pictures, was a visitor to the Fox studio in West Fifty-fifth street a few days ago, and for the first time saw one of his stories on the screen.

Mr. Seltzer, accompanied by Mrs. Seltzer, came to New York on a business trip, and, having sold several of his most popular stories to Fox Film Corporation, expressed a desire to see one of them in picturized form. Fortunately a new print of "Forbidden Trails," which was written by Mr. Seltzer under the title "The Ranchman," was in one of the Fox projection rooms.

After witnessing the picture, in which Buck Jones, the new William Fox screen sensation, is starred, Mr. Seltzer asserted that "nothing more could be desired," and that Buck Jones was the character he had in mind when he was writing the story. He was particularly thrilled by Buck Jones' daring horseback stunts and by the way in which he maneuvered the big man in the picture. The fine scenic effects which Director Scott Dunlap obtained also elicited much praise from the author.

Film Built on Feminism

"Restless Sex," by Chambers, Has Unique and Interesting Theme

"THE RESTLESS SEX," Marion Davies' newest starring feature for Cosmopolitan Productions, which will be pre-released in New York shortly, is announced as a spectacular drama of modern society life, a massive production with magnificent settings and scenic investures, and a cast of more than six hundred.

Done in Robert W. Chambers' best style, "The Restless Sex" which appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine, deals with the theme of feminism, the restlessness of the awakened woman who has tasted independence and craves for the topmost rung on the ladder. Under the guise of romance and love is a thought that it is said, his every woman in the civilized world and should interest every man also. Distinct from the question of suffrage which is purely political, the question of feminism as it occurs in "The Restless Sex" concerns woman's desire to be something more than a man's wife. It treats of her striving to rise above the status of mere chattel goods and become a factor in civilization. Woman's restlessness today is due to nothing else.

Producer Urges Independence

That the day is here when the young producer should avail himself of the opportunity to break away from the old established company and enter into production as an independent is the firm belief of Whitman Bennett, formerly connected with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and now producing a series of Lionel Barrymore pictures for First National release.

"The hour of the young producer is here," said Mr. Bennett in a recent interview, "a year or two ago the directors began to be independent. In a short time they were followed by such artists as Mary Pickford and Chaplin, and today should witness the branching out of the young producers of the industry. There is no reason why the best brains of the picture industry should be tied up with the larger companies to make money for them. They should be willing to take a chance and risk their own capital and time. They seem, however, to be unwilling to take the chance. Instead of supervising a large number of pictures every year, they would be able to produce a limited number for themselves."

Another great benefit that would accrue to the industry, said Mr. Bennett, is the fact that should there be more independent companies in the field, the money earned by them would be reinvested to produce more and better pictures. "The dividends which are paid to Wall Street," said Mr. Bennett, "are not going to find their way back into the industry. Rather they are going to buy automobiles for the stockholder who has no interest in the betterment and growth of the motion picture."

Mr. Bennett also deplored the fact that the business and producer ends of the business should be in the same hands. "It is not the same as making a suit of clothes," he said. "The producer is not a business man, and the business man is not capable of producing successful pictures. The ideal firm is a combination of each in such a way that both are allowed to work along their own lines."

"I wish to emphasize," continued Mr. Bennett, "that the time for the independent producer is here. There are in the industry no more than twenty-five or thirty minds capable of producing really first-class pictures. Why should not these men be willing to strike out for themselves, instead of being salaried men in a large company even if they are receiving high salaries?"

In speaking of the Lionel Barrymore pictures which are now being made in the old Triangle studios in Youkers, Mr. Bennett said he would make four of those during the year. In addition he plans a series of three special productions with all-star casts. Releasing plans for these three pictures have not as yet been definitely arranged. Mr. Barrymore's first picture, "The Master Mind," which will be released by First National, has just been completed and delivered to the distributors, "The Master Mind," ran on Broadway several seasons ago and was a decided success. Mr. Barrymore plays an almost straight part, with no make-up except a small mustache. One exception is the production of the production, said Mr. Bennett, is an example of behind-the-scenes exposure which illustrates a psychological point in the story in an effective manner, and the mechanics of which are called, produce an unusual effect. The story is handled in a delicate and effective manner, suggestion being used as much as possible to leave its impression.

Work has just started on Mr. Bennett's second Barrymore picture for First National, "The Devil's Garden." This ran as a stage play in both New York and London and is one of the greatest novels of W. B. Maxwell. All of Barrymore's productions during the current year have been dramatic successes on the stage.

Wallace Worsley Coming East to Direct

Wallace Worsley, Goldwyn director, who has been working at the Culver City studios, is coming East to make his next production at the Goldwyn studios in New York. It will be a glorification of Maximilian Foster's "The Thrift," named "To the Highest Bidder."

Mayflower Moves Its Eastern Studio

The Mayflower Photoplay Corporation has transferred its eastern producing activities from the Paramo Studio, Fort Lee, to the Biograph Studios, 177th street, New York, where space has been leased for the making of R. A. Walsh's second independent production to be presented by Mayflower through First National. Mr. Walsh will occupy the main stage at the Biograph plant and has already taken possession of his new quarters. He will begin his new picture shortly.

Goldwyn Gives Special Care to Short Stuff

In accord with its policy of supplying exhibitors with motion pictures of the highest quality in short lengths as well as feature productions and shorts, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has founded a Short Subject Department, whose province will be the production of the one and two-reel films that now are being distributed under the Goldwyn trade mark.

Pathe Will Distribute "Broadway Cowboy"

"A Broadway Cowboy," in which William Desmond appears, has just been taken over for distribution by Pathe Exchange, Inc. The production was made by Jesse D. Hampton from the very popular story, "The Man from Make Believe," written by Byron Morgan.
Ray Film Wins Contracts
"Forty-five Minutes from Broadway" in Many First Run Houses

First reports from all parts of the country on Charles Ray and his five first National Productions show increased demand for this star since his affiliation with Arthur S. Kane and the First National Exhibitors Circuit. According to John C. Ragland, general manager of Kane Pictures, there has been a veritable landslide in favor of this actor. His initial efforts "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway" have been so successful that famous George M. Cohan drama, is finding favor among exhibitors in all parts of the country.

Large first run houses are prominent among the hundreds of early bookings already made for Ray's initial effort "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway." The George M. Cohan comedy-drama is scheduled for the opening week's run in Chicago at Barbee's Loop Theatre, the well known picture palace of W. S. Barbee. In Salt Lake City, Utah, the American Theatre of the extensive Swanson Theatre Circuit has already arranged for the first run on Ray's forthcoming production.

At East St. Louis the film is booked at Joe Erber's house for a week's run; at the Hippodrome, Alton, Illinois, the Cohan play will be seen on the screen for a similar period. Week runs at the Apollo and Madison Theatres in Peoria, Illinois, have already been arranged while bookings are still being added to the calendar for the Galey of Springfield, Illinois; the Orpheum of Quincy, Illinois; the Bio Theatre of Moline, Illinois; the Lincoln Square of Decatur and the Princess of Joliet, Illinois.

The big Olympic Theatre of Watertown, N.Y., and the Regent Theatre owned by the Regorson Corporation of Rochester, are among large upper New York State houses to make arrangements for the Ray Pictures.

Lewis Signs With Pathe
Producer to Make Four or Five Pictures for Pathe During Year

FOUR or five Edgar Lewis' productions are assured for Pathe distribution during the coming year, under a new contract just signed by the producer, and Paul Brunet, president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

This is exclusive of "Sherry," which has just been released, and "Lahoma," which Mr. Lewis has just completed for release in the early fall.

This new Lewis contract calls for the production of "four or five superlative photoplays to be produced during the coming year commencing on or about May 15." These plays are to be produced from stories of the same merit of "Other Men's Shoes," adapted from the novel by Andrew Santt; "Sherry," taken from the novel by George Barr McCutcheon; and "Lahoma," produced from the book by John Breckenridge Ellis through the courtesy of Bobbe-Merrill Company, of Indianapolis.

Mr. Lewis will continue his policy of featuring the story, rather than a star, a policy he has maintained ever since he gained prominence in the directorial art. That his belief in the story is founded on a thorough knowledge of the demands of the public, has been manifested by the success with which every one of his attractions has been crowned.

The director is about to begin the first of his series under the new agreement with Mr. Brunet. The story has been selected, and Mr. Lewis has made all arrangements for the "shooting" of it. Announcement of his selection will be made after work has actually been started on the play.

Goldwyn Signs Dramatist
Clayton Hamilton, Authority on Stage, to Write Screen Stories

CLAYTON HAMILTON, author, lecturer, editor and one of the country's leading authorities on the drama, has signed a long-term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to write original stories and continuities. He went to the Calver City studios recently and is now working on his first picture.

Goldwyn's acquisition of Mr. Hamilton is another in a long line of stage experts to the list of authors and playwrights who are devoting their energies to the adaptation of novels and plays for production by Goldwyn. As a member of the Calver City colony, Mr. Hamilton will be associated with J. C. Hawks, head of Goldwyn's scenario department, Thompson Buchan and Charles Kenyon, both writers for the stage, and other equally prominent figures in the scenario department, also Rupert Hughes, Mr. Robert Rinehart, Gouverneur Morris, Basil King, Gertrude Atherton and Leroy Scott, the Goldwyn Eminent Authors, who spend a considerable portion of each year in Europe.

Up to the present time, Mr. Hamilton has at hand four pictures and he is constantly in receipt of suggestions, correspondence and other activities occupied so much of his time. The personnel of the Goldwyn producing organization and the policy followed in the selection and preparation of material, assured Mr. Hamilton of the harmonious conditions which he sought.

Goldwyn Product Sold in Two Countries
Two more deals for the distribution of Goldwyn Pictures in European countries were closed last week by Arthur Ziehm, manager of Goldwyn's foreign sales department. The transactions cover the entire first year output of Goldwyn for Holland and Finland. The figure paid is not disclosed, but it is said to be unusually high in view of market conditions as they exist today in the two countries. There are twenty-six productions in Goldwyn's first year output.

"World and His Wife" Cosmopolitan Film
The next Cosmopolitan Production schedule for general release is "The World and His Wife," a picturization of the play of the same name. Lewis B. Mayer, Frederick Nirdlinger, July 25th is the date set for its première showing in the different theatres of the country.

When William Faversham appeared in the stage play some years ago he registered one of the greatest hits of his career; and the play was spoken of as the most perfectly constructed drama of modern times. Frances Marion, who made the picture, has consistently followed the play's construction and characterization, adding greatly to its strength. Of course, by the greater possibilities the screen offers.

Alma Rubens as the featured player, and among the cast are such well known players as Montagu Love, Pedro de Cordova, Charles Gerard, Gorton Glass, Byron Russell, Margaret Dale, Mrs. Alan Walker, and a host of others. R. C. Vignola directed.

New Factor in the Film World

A New Announcements of far-reaching importance is contained in the incorporation at Albany, N. Y., of a new film producing company to be known as Greater America Films, Inc. This announcement comes from the offices of Mr. Bean Moore Patch, who was prominently identified with the picture industry several years ago as an exhibitor of big pictures at the Ft. Worth theatre in Pittsburgh.

During the war the Government asked him to realize the possibilities of the motion picture as a medium of spreading patriotism, said Mr. Patch. "At the outset, Liberty loan, Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus, Jewish Welfare and Salvation Army drives were given enormous impetus on the screen; and finally President Wilson's war messages were brought home to people all over the world by means of the comprehensive pictorial work undertaken by the Division of Films on the Committee of Public Information.

A careful study of these new uses to which the motion picture was put, convinced Mr. Patch, according to his own story, that national problems and policies should now reach the people through the motion picture screen, if they were handled in a subtle enough manner. This is the fundamental idea of the company, which is to be known as Greater America Films, Inc. The organization had been founded for the purpose of financing and producing scenarios written by men of national reputation on vital questions of the day. These scenarios will be put into final form by expert writers for the screen, so that they will be accurate on hand; and drama instead of propaganda, on the other.

Mr. Patch pointed out that since the armistice was signed many attempts have been made to write screen plays around important questions of the moment. Most of these efforts were undertaken by men who had not studied their subjects thoroughly, and who had scribbled upon current topics because they happened to be timely—and, therefore, of possible commercial value. On the other hand, various other producers, attempting to co-operate with the Government in spreading the Americanization idea, had produced films that were so obviously propaganda that they drove people out of the theatre, rather than attracted them to it. It is Mr. Patch's idea that a middle ground must be reached if the screen is to be of any constructive value. In other words, scenarios dealing with important national and international problems should be prepared by men well versed on the subjects in question, in collaboration with trained dramatists.

Mr. Patch has interested some of the biggest men in America in his scheme. They have all, he said, been quick to see that his vision is likely to make the discovery of a new and powerful channel for the shaping of public opinion. A year or more ago Mr. Patch took his plan to one of the most prominent financial men in his group, Joseph Leiter, of Chicago and Washington. Mr. Leiter not only placed a financial backer to Mr. Patch's disposal, but gave him the benefit of his knowledge, experience and advice.

Through the corporation he has formed Mr. Patch has announced the production of a half dozen big features dealing with as many separate vital problems of the day. The first picture will deal with the question of Negro equality, and on this subject Mr. Patch has been working constantly for almost two years. He has employed a small army of investigators, writers, private agents and travelers going to and coming from Russia and Siberia. While many of the scenes of this picture will deal with the terrible drama that has been enacted in Russia since 1917, the story reveals this tremendous problem in all of its dangerous phases in America.

Associated with Mr. Patch in Greater America Films, Inc., in an advisory capacity, in addition to Mr. Leiter, are the following well-known men: Franklyn D'Olier, prominent cotton broker of Philadelphia; George Beban, co-founder of the American Legion; Redwood Stewart, well known Baltimore lawyer; Joel Lederer, president of New York; J. D. Wooster Lambert, of the Lambert Pharmacal Company, of St. Louis; and Colonel Eric Fisher Wood, of Pittsburgh.

Critics Praise "Miss Hobbs" After Premier

Wanda Hawley's debut as a Redhead star in "Miss Hobbs" at Grauman's Theatre in Los Angeles has been hailed as one of the big events of the season by the critics of the local newspapers. Henry E. Doughtery wrote that he had never seen "a more beautiful picture." Another called Miss Hawley "one of America's foremost film beauties."

Sid Grauman made a special event of the American premier of the new star by设计ing the week of showing as "Lovers Week" and conducting an unusually heavy billboard and newspaper advertising campaign. In his advertising he described Miss Hawley as "the most beautiful girl of the screen," and the play as "the story of a great, big, wonderful love."

"Married Life" Prints Rushed to Exchanges

Following its Pasadena tryout last Friday night in "Married Life," the latest five part comedy from the Sennett studios is being rushed to New York to eagerly await the executive committee of the First National Exhibitor's Circuit by E. M. Asher, personal representative for Mack Sennett.

Immediately upon Mr. Asher's arrival in New York, ninety prints of the new comedy will be rapidly rushed to the various National exchanges in order that the production may have an early release.

"Athalia" to Be Ready to Ship in a Week

According to a wire received by Benjamin A. Prager, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation from the Brinon Studios California, Sidney A. Franklin has completed the final cutting and titling of "Athalia," adapted from Robert W. Chambers' novel of that name. The print, Franklin states, will be ready for shipment to First National within the ensuing week. The cast of "Athalia" includes such prominent screen players as Sylvia Breamer, who portrays the role of the seer, Conrad Nagle, Rosemary Thévenot, Shean O'Leary, Robert Cain and Edward Martindel.

Doralinda to Start Production

DORALINDA, the famous dancer, whose engagements cover one of its new stars, was recently announced by Metro, left New York for San Francisco, California, where she will begin work in about a fortnight on her first production under the Metro banner. This venture is to be a production of Carey Wilson's story, "The Passion Fruit," the locale of the subject is the Hawaiian Islands, and it will present Doralinda in the native atmosphere which she popularized by her famous hula hula dance. Doralinda first became prominent on the stage as the creator of the hula hula, which introduced to the American public the native dances of Hawaii. Her success in the role of interpreter of the dances of the Pacific Islands was so great as to instantly install her as a favorite with the patrons of restaurants and theatres everywhere. Her first appearance was at the Hippodrome, after her return from Spain where she had gone to study the Castilian dances, was in her husband's Cabaret. The success with the restaurant patrons resulted in her name being exhibited in electric lights in the windows of the Shuberts, who signed her to appear as a featured member of the musical play, "Step This Way," starring Lex Fields. Thus established as a headliner on Broadway, Doralinda's next con-quest was in motion pictures. George Fitzmaurice had been en-gaged by Pathé to produce "The Passion Fruit," her first picture under the Metro banner...
A. Johnny Mack Joins Equity Pictures

Joseph I. Schnitzer, general manager of Equity Pictures Corporation, announces the appointment of A. Johnny Mack, in capacity of director of exploitation for all Clara Kimball Young productions and Equity Specials. Mr. Mack, formerly president and general manager of the Little Theatre, Newark, is a showman of many years' standing, and his experience dates back to childhood days when he amused himself in and around circuses and outdoor amusement companies. Mr. Mack's first opportunity at keeping the Equity ball rolling will be the exploitation of Clara Kimball Young's production "For the Soul of Rafael," which will be seen in New York soon.

"Yanconna Yillies" Is Outdoor Picture

Work continues in the filming of Douglas MacLean's first starring vehicle for Paramount "Yanconna Yillies," at the Thomas H. Ince studios, or rather, in the surrounding country, for this is an outdoor picture and MacLean and the company spend most of their time on location. But it is not a rude picture in any sense of the word, in spite of its farm life setting.

Betty Compson Tells Plans

Star of "Miracle Man" Finishes Feature in West Coast Studio

BETTY COMPSON, who was literally catapulted into stardom through her portrayal of the role of "Rose" in George Loose Tucker's production of "The Miracle Man," and who is now at the head of her own company, has just made the first announcement of her plans for the future.

The studios and offices of the Betty Compson Productions have been established at the Robert Brunton Studios in Los Angeles, and Miss Compson has already completed the first of a series of super-features which will be distributed through one of the largest releasing organizations in the industry. The initial production is to be called "Prisoners of Love," and is of a caliber entirely in keeping with her extraordinary work in "The Miracle Man." The direction was by Arthur Rosson, assisted by his brother Edward.

Alfred A. Grasse, general manager of the company, was for eleven years with Henry W. Savage, in the capacity of his secretary, as assistant to the general manager, assisting to the press representative and in the engaging, booking, and stock play departments. His seventeen years intensive experience in the theatrical business caused Edgar Selwyn and Margaret Mayo to engage him for the scenario department of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Later on Mr. Brasso became assistant to George Loose Tucker when he was directing for Goldwyn, and served in a similar capacity to Mr. Tucker when he became director general of Goldwyn. Ernest Palmer, who was Mr. Tucker's principal cameraman, became chief cinematographer for Miss Compson; Jack Little came over as technical director from the Tucker unit; Chester Roberts, who was Mr. Tucker's secretary, became secretary of Miss Compson's company, and even one of Mr. Tucker's cutters was placed in the new organization. Miss Compson's present plans provide for about four pictures a year.

Universal Comedy Finished

Edith Roberts in Edgar Franklin Story Pleases in Latest Comedy

A NOTHER of the Edgar Franklin stories has been screened by Universal. This time it is "Alias Miss Dodd," starring Edith Roberts. The original title of the story was "Dodd—His Diary." It recently appeared in one of the Murray publications.

In "Alias Miss Dodd," the heroine thinks she is somewhat of a modern Joan D'Arc, to right all wrongs she encounters. She gets herself into a series of hilarious situations by presenting herself as the acknowledged daughter of a respectable old bachelor.

The photo-play is not without its dramatic moments, but they merely serve to accentuate the humorous situations in which the characters find themselves each turn. Among others in the cast are Johnnie Cooke, Walter P. Richardson, who plays the hero; Harry Van Meter, a suave villain as usual; Ruth King, as an elegant woman of the world, Margaret McWade and Vida Johnson.

Harry Franklin directed the picture. It will be released June 21, at one of Universal's first releases under Universal's present special attraction policy. Beginning with the July releases, a new Star Series will be put on the market. Miss Ulrich will contribute eight high-class photoplays to this series during the next twelve months.

Molly Malone Signed for Goldwyn Pictures

Molly Malone, the petite, brown-eyed girl with a voice that was leading woman for Roscoe Arbuckle and in other productions, has just signed a long-term contract to play exclusively in Goldwyn Pictures. Miss Malone recently completed a part in "It's a Great Life," and another in Robert B. Richeart's story, "Empire Builders," produced by Goldwyn as an Autumn release. She is now supporting Tom Moore in "Step Thief," a screen version of the famous Cohen and Harris stage farce.

She has been with the Vitagraph, Lubin, Lasky and Universal company, and is reported to have signed with Goldwyn, for whom Miss Malone is regarded as a valuable addition to Goldwyn's acting forces on the Coast.

Expert Title Writers Form Organization

Katherine Hilliker announces the formation of an organization of expert title writers, to be known as "The Hillikerettes," which will include besides herself Raymond S. Barnes, Merle Clark and William Hilliker. All three are well-known in the film industry and for the past year-and-a-half have been associated in the Outing Title Pictures organization, which they recently left to form this new association. H. H. Caldwell and Yanet Holm are in charge of the New York office, where they will handle all new association will be represented by Edna Schley, combining offices with hers in the Markham Building, Hollywood.

Next Alice Joyce Picture to be "The Prey"

"The Prey," a society drama of tangled lives, based on a special production in which Albert E. Smith will present Alice Joyce. In writing the scenario Lon Histine has provided Miss Joyce with many unusual opportunities outlined in the original story by Joseph Le Brandt. George L. Sargent directs "The Prey," after several weeks had been spent in casting it. Harry Benham appears as leading man, and L. Rogers Lytton, one of the most polished " heavies" on the screen, has a role in which he perpetuates his villainy in his usual convincing manner. The story is highly dramatic, but at no time does it become melodramatic. It will be released in September.

Goldfarb Made General Manager of Climax

Felix Goldfarb has been elected vice president and general manager of the recently acquired Climax Film Corporation. Mr. Goldfarb has been in the film business for the past twelve years, and recently resigned his position of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corp. His first release for Climax will be "A Coupon Lanute," starring Edmund Breese and Claire Whitney.

That the Simplex Projector is regarded by the industry as being a popular one is evidenced by the fact that out of the thirty-two Godfrey Building, thirty of them are Simplexes, leaving but two machines of other makes in the entire building.

These thirty Simplexes are installed in the projection rooms of the following companies with the number of machines used as indicated:

S. Rankin Drew Post to Hold Outing in July

Speaking before the S. Rankin Drew Post No. 340, W. H. Buxton, county chairman of the American Legion, declared that the North Carolina chapter of the Legion forces in the Memorial Day parade had dispelled the idea that the association was mere "paper organization" which he believed meeting at Keen's plans were laid for the promotion of Mr. Buxton's campaign to have the National American Legion Chapter No. 1 located in effective class. This will possibly mean an incidence in dues, the matter of being to vote on at the next post meeting, July 13. A committee headed by Sidney Samson has been appointed to arrange for an outing of the post to be held in July. At the last meeting films, taken in France at the decoration of S. Rankin Drew, were exhibited.

Print of "Midlanders" Reaches New York

"The Midlanders," Besse Love's first production for Andrew J. Callaghan, arrived in New York by special representative from Los Angeles last week and was hailed by its producer as being better than the post high expectations of it. His enthusiasm was not dampened by the fact that the delay in arrival of the print caused the cancellation by the film executive of reservations thereof the teamster on which he had been scheduled to sail for England. Owing to the scarcity of reservations Mr. Callaghan is compelled to defer his voyage indefinitely.

After completing Miss Love's initial Callaghan play he producer expressed himself as being highly elated at the successful result of the youthful star's first production under his auspices.

Sales Manager on Long Tour of Exchanges

S. R. Kent, sales manager, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was a visitor at the Lasky studio in Hollywood last week, Mr. Kent is on a tour of the various exchanges throughout the country, laying plans for the forthcoming season.

Christie Starts First Feature

"SO LONG LETTY" the first of the Christie's first all-star specials, goes into production in Los Angeles June 15th. Already Mr. Christie, who will direct the picture himself, is lining up the cast.

Probably the most prominent of the players in the special, which will be released by Robertson-Cole, are two pairs of characters who were made famous in the stage version. The plot, revolving about two married couples, has many farcical situations which, it is believed, have been admirably cast. The first of these couples who play together in the piece are Grace Darmon and Walter Hiers. Miss Darmond is "Letty" and Mr. Hiers the role of her abused husband. The second couple is T. Roy Barnes and Colleen Moore in this, case, Barnes being the abused husband.

The Christies are receiving congratulations on the securing of Hiers, Miss Darmond and Miss Moore, all of them being featured stars. T. Roy Barnes has just received his latest appearance in "Scratch My Back" with Goldwyn, but before that founded his reputation on many successful stage roles, one of the chief among them being the featured part in "Katrina" and in many musical and legitimate comedies and with his own company in vaudeville. Miss Darmond played several starring roles in pictures, one of them being "What Every Woman Wants." She has recently played the lead in "The Hope Diamond Mystery," and in Christie's latest production, "Below the Surface."

Hiers made a hit in Paramount's "It Pays to Advertise" and in "What A Woman Has Done." Colleen Moore was featured by Griffith Sefig, and in Christie special comedies and has recently completed a leading role in Marshall Neilson's latest production which is yet unnamed.

Following the completion of contracts with the studio, all two-reel comedies will be handled through the Educational-First National exchange. The first of these picture has been completed and negative is being sent to New York for the supplying by Educational of a large number of prints.

The first comedy is "Kiss Me Carol" featuring Bobby Vernon, with Vera Steadman, Teddy Sampson, Neal Burs and Charlotte Merriam, is directed by Al Christie and is a light farce.

Harold Lloyd Comedy is Due July 19

A new standard in comedy making is said to have been established by Harold Lloyd in "High and Dry," first of his new series of $100,000 two-reel comedy specials for distribution through Pathe. Surpassing even the "Hunted Spooks," "High and Dry" will be released on July 11th, is said to be a sort of a tonic for "summer illness" from which so many picture theaters suffer.

The initial release of the new two-reel series was longer in the making than any comedy ever produced by the Relin Film Company starring Harold Lloyd. It was a very slow process to create "High and Dry."

Alice Brady Will Not Desert the Stage

Alice Brady, Redirt star, according to reports will not desert the stage for the screen for a period of one year.

President of Famous Players-Lasky, in charge of production, some time before the latter's departure for London, annoucement of his engagement was made by Adolph Zukor just prior to his departure. Mr. Zukor had emphasis upon the fact that it was in keeping with the company's well-shaped policy of highly specialized production. "This policy," said Mr. Zukor, "first took definite form with the production by Cecil B. DeMille of the first of his elaborate dramas of married life. The immense success scored by these DeMille productions has been due, in no small measure, to the attention to detail in settings, interior decoration and costuming, bestowed by Mr. DeMille, himself a thorough artist in the largest and best sense of the word."

In addition to being a leading figure in the field of art and architecture, Mr. Chalfin is an expert in determining the authenticity of antique and decor and is called upon in consultation by leading collectors and importers. He was graduated from Harvard and the class of 1898 after which he studied at the Art Student's League in New York and at the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris. Later he went painted portraits under the tutelage of James McNeill Whistler of London studio and spent three years at Launceton, France, where he won the Lazarus scholarship in 1909.

Mr. Chalfin's greatest work, however, one which has engaged his interest for the past eight years, has been the decorative, supervision and furnishing of "Vizcaya," the palatial home of James Deering at Coral Gables, Florida, as associated with F. Burrill Hoffman, Jr. This house and its grounds form one of the show places of the United States and have been the subject of many articles in architectural magazines, in fact, of entire magazine devoted to it. Chalfin's review of July, 1917. In this connection it is interesting to note that the elaborate botanical setting in Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female," luxurious almost beyond the belief of the average spectator, was an exact reproduction of one of the baths in the Deering house.

In conclusion upon his entrance into the motion picture field, Mr. Chalfin called attention to the fact that the leading figures in literature and in other branches of the fine arts are turning their attention to the films. "The time has come," he said, "when the work of the men like Barre and Henry Arthur Jones should have an attention as serious and as highly considered as has been their work in literature. It is the time for architects and artists to step forward to put their work on the screen in suitable and proper settings. I am entering the motion picture field in spirit of cooperation, with the hope of assistance in establishing the motion picture as one of the permanent expressions of artistic feeling."
Lasky Reorganizes Staff
Famous Players’ Executive Makes Changes in Production Department

One of the last things Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the National Players-Lasky Corporation, did before sailing for London on Saturday was to complete the reorganization of the production department of Famous Players.

Mr. Lasky has appointed Walter Wang, production manager, and Mr. Wang is now fully installed in that position, having charge of all production activities during the absence of Mr. Lasky in Europe. Another announcement made by Mr. Lasky was that Robert MacAlarney, who has been given enlarged powers and greater duties, which will necessitate the enlargement of the scenario department. In connection with the enlargement of the scenario department Miss Ruth Haggard, who has been connected with the department for some time, has been appointed Mr. MacAlarney’s assistant.

H. Bergman Joins Realart
Former Vitagraph Writer Adapts First Picture for Bebe Daniels

Elmar Walton Bergman, who has been a successful scenario writer for two years and adapted fifteen O. Henry stories to the screen some time ago, has been added to Realart’s scenario staff. He will work at the company’s Hollywood studios.

Mr. Bergman has recently completed the first Bebe Daniels starring vehicle for Realart, “You Never Can Tell,” from two Saturday Evening Post stories by Grace Lovell Bryan. In it he has provided the new Realart with an opportunity to wear beautiful costumes and to exploit the striking dramatic talent she has shown in recent productions.

He Bergman wrote scenarios for Kalem some time ago and recently shifted to Vitagraph. When with that company he wrote “Hearst’s Busy” in which E. F. Sothern played; “Aladdin from Broadway,” “Womanhood” and the adaptations of fifteen O. Henry stories.

Mr. Bergman is enthusiastic over his profession. “I have been in all branches of motion picture production,” he said. “I consider that the scenario writer has by far the most exciting field. Many times one has to build the story from nothing, where the director and actor have more or less of a skeleton to work from.”

It is a real source of gratification to those in the profession that the scenario writer is gaining more recognition today. He considers that this is in the formation of a feature photoplay. It may not be significant, but it is at least a curious coincidence that the acceptance of the motion picture has been accompanied by the recognition and advancement of the profession of scenario writing.”

Elmo Lincoln Film Ready
Universal to Give Early Release to Central America Production

Universal announces the early release of a new Universal production, “Under Crimson Skies,” and is a dramatic photo-play of gun-runs and revolts in Central America. It is the feature picture of Elmo Lincoln, foremost of the strong man of a series of Universal serials, written and directed by Elmo Lincoln. “Under Crimson Skies” is in six reels. It was written by George F. Hurlbut, and is based on a real incident of the Pan-American War.

All-Star Cast Includes Miss Frankie Mann

The next international offering, under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, will be “The Passionate Pilgrim,” in which Frankie Mann, will play an important role.

Night display in front of the Criterion, New York, during the special pre-release showing of Cosmopolitan’s production, “Humoresque.” The Criterion is Hugo Biesenfeld’s last project, and situated at the corner of 44th Street and Broadway.

Cosmopolitan Keeps Busy
Has Five Productions Completed, and Several Others Start Soon

A new idea of the extent of Cosmopolitan Productions’ picture plans can be gleaned from the fact that this company now has five new productions completed, or nearly completed, two more to be started next week and several others ready to be put into work within the next few months.

“Humoresque,” now playing a pre-release engagement at the Criterion Theatre, New York, is the latest Cosmopolitan Production’s release. Written by Fannie Hurst, it was directed by Frank Borzage and has a notable cast, including Alma Rubens, Vera Gordon, Done Davidson and Gaston Glass.

“The Reckless Sex,” Marion Davies’ latest starring vehicle, is another Cosmopolitan Production that has been completed and scheduled for early release. This is the screen version of Robert W. Chambers novel of the same name, which ran serially in the Cosmopolitan Magazine and was later published in book form. In the cast supporting Miss Davies are Carlyle Blackwell, Ralph Kellard, Charles Lane, Robert Vivian, Elma Ross, Stephen Cari, Vivian Osborn and Corrine Barker.

“A Whiff of Heliotrope,” from the story by Richard Washburn Chiles—which appeared a short while ago in Hearst’s Magazine—has recently been completed by Director George D. Baker with an all-star cast and will be released by Cosmopolitan Productions in the near future.
Part of “Tarzan” Serial En Route to New York

David P. Howells, who controls the world rights for “The Son of Tarzan” serial, which the National Film Corporation has announced as its chief release for 1920, reports that the picture and the first episode of this chapter-picture have been completed and are now on their way to New York for preview.

Edgar Rice Burroughs’ jungle books have been unusually successful. “The Son of Tarzan,” which is the fourth of his books to be screened but the first to be adapted as a serial. Harry Revier, who directed “The Return of Tarzan,” is also handling this production, but Roy Somerville is writing the continuity.

Information on Selig Serial is Sought

Exhibitor’s inquiries are rapidly coming in on “A Vanishing Trails,” the Colonel Wm. N. Selig serial being state righted by the Canyon Film Corporation, according to an announcement from that company.

The Canyon pictures also announce that production is being made on the production of the Franklyn Furnam five-reel features, preliminary to production, started two weeks ago. The first picture is based on a story by William E. Wing who is at present working on the second story. The pictures are being produced under the personal supervision of Colonel Selig, and will be state righted by Canyon.

Hallmark Serial Set for Bookings

Stuart Paton’s fifteen episode serial, “The Fatal Sign,” is set for immediate bookings, according to the announcement of Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation.

“The Fatal Sign” stars Claire Anderson and Harry Carter. Attractive paper and press book, and a splendid publicity campaign backed by the work of a competent sales force are in working as exploitation helps.

Fine Arts Moves Into Larger Quarters

The Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., who are ushering in their activities as independent distributors of motion pictures with the six reel comedy “Up in Mary’s Attic,” have been compelled to seek larger quarters. The offices have been moved from 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, to the 11th floor of the Broadway Building. Forty-second street and Broadway.

St. John Comedies Sold for Southwest

The Arrow Photo Plays Corporation of Denver, Colorado, has just closed for Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, New Mexico, Southern Idaho, counties south of and including Idaho county, on the Al St. John comedies, being handled by Warner Brothers.

Hayakawa in Chinese Story

Robinson-Cole Star to Appear in “Li Ting Lang,” Just Completed

Chinese Gentleman,” published in the Green Book Magazine a short time ago, was definitely decided last week to preserve the working title as it is so typically Chinese that it carries with it the mystery of the Orient. The picture was completed just before Mr. Hayakawa made his recent trip east and it will be released within a short time. As the original title indicates, Sessue Hayakawa is seen in this picture in a Chinese role, but one that is quite different from any of the other Chinese roles he has played. As “Li Ting Lang,” he plays a Chinese prince, educated in the United States and the scenes are set in both America and China.

It is said that Hayakawa has never before had such an opportunity to display his splendid screen artistry and dramatic ability. The story, which was written by Howard P. Rockey, and adapted for the screen by E. Richard Schayer, abounds in unusual wealth of colorful atmosphere.

A splendid cast supports Mr. Hayakawa including Doris Pawn, who appeared with Lee Cody in “The Beloved Cheater,” Mare Robbins, one of Mr. Hayakawa’s “Tong Man” associates, Frances Raymond, Alan Forrest and C. E. Mason.

Fox Making Stage Success

Shirley Mason to Be Starred in “Merely Mary Ann,” Popular Play

Miss Shirley Mason is to do “Merely Mary Ann” as a motion picture. The stage success in which Eleanor Robson won international renown during the period in which she appeared under the management of the theatrical firm of Liether & Co., is to be converted to the silent drama by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation.

Work has already started on “Merely Mary Ann” at the Fox studios in Hollywood, with Miss Mason in the title-role. This part, known to most theatregoers of the country, is suited perfectly to the little star whose success since she started with Fox in “Her Elephant Man,” ”Molly and I, and “Love’s Harvest,” has been herds to the front rank of American screen stars.

The director selected for “Merely Mary Ann” is a past master in the production of stories of this type-Edward J. Le Saint, one of the veterans of the Fox studio in Hollywood. In addition to directing this film, Mr. Le Saint wrote the scenario.

“Merely Mary Ann,” with that very fine dramatic actress, Eleanor Robson, in the title-role, is probably one of the best known produced during the past decade. It was in this play that Miss Robson established herself most firmly in the hearts of theatregoers of this country, and brought to the author of the play, Israel Zangwill, the greatest success of the day.

According to arrangements made by William Fox from his headquarters in the new Fox building in West Fifty-fifth street, New York, a goodly portion of the original stage settings used by the Liether firm in presenting “Merely Mary Ann” to Broadway audiences will be shipped to the West Coast for the film version.

The remainder of the interior settings used in the screen production will be modeled after the design of the original stage backgrounds and properties, and every effort will be exerted toward making a most faithful production.

G. B. Seitz Will Make Feature in Spain

George B. Seitz, a producer, director and star in Pathé serials, is going to Spain to make the first feature picture he has attempted in his career in motion picture work.

Following arrangements made with Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of the Exchange, Inc., June Caprice, long one of the best known women stars in this country, will be co-starred with Mr. Seitz. Marguerite Court, who has appeared with Mr. Seitz in serials he has produced for Pathé, will also be a part in the production. Harry Semels, interpreter of heavy roles in several Pathé serials, is also to accompany the party.

The story selected for Mr. Seitz’s first feature starring vehicle is an adaptation from a play he wrote some time ago under the title “The Golden Senorita.” In making the picture, however, Mr. Seitz made over the title also and the picture version is to be called “Rogues and Romances.”

Brunton Studios Open Scenario Department

The Brunton Studios have opened a scenario department to co-operate with the seventeen other producing concerns at the plant. It is the intention that this new department shall take care of stories or books and prepare working scripts for any producing organizations that desire the new department is in charge of Jack Cunningham who has been under contract with George Loos Tucker and who in the past three years has written twenty-six photoplays. Associated with Cunningham will be Fred Stowers and George Elwell Jenks. The fourth member of the cast is Paul Scofield.

“The Four Horsemen” to Be Made in West

Metro’s all-star production of “The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse,” originally intended to be made at Famous Players-Lasky studios in West Sixty-first street, under the supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general, has been shifted to the West Coast studios at Hollywood, Cal.

The all-star cast of “The Four Horsemen” has not yet been selected, of course, but it has been decided that Rex Ingram will direct the production.

All Los Angeles Likes “Below the Surface”

Thomas H. Ince’s special production through Paramount, “Below the Surface,” starring Hobart Bosworth which was released June 6, proved a success and has brought an enthusiastic reception at Granum’s Rialto, Los Angeles, where it had its premiere in the middle of the second week of the run. E. G. Ballance, Famous Players-Lasky Branch Manager at Los Angeles, wired General Manager Leonard Lichman as follows: “Business far surpassing our fondest expectations. Press is unanimous in its approval of this production.”

Year's Schedule Completed

FIFTEEN independent production units having contracts for the exhibition of their total minimum of sixty special feature attractions for the 1920-1921 season in the six thousand independent theatres which, this fall, will be franchised members of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., this week announce the list of titles of their respective releases.

This information is augmented by a detailed schedule of release dates which exhibitor officials of Associated First National Pictures have established for the sixty attractions. This schedule lists each production, the star producer or director-producer, with its release date from August 30, 1920, the start of the new season, to February 4, 1921, on which date the summer season for that year will begin.

Beginning August 30, of this year, the First National schedule opens with "Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway," on which Charles Ray is working at present. Production has already started on "Good References," the forthcoming Constance Talmadge production that will be directed by R. William Neill. Release date will be August 30th. September 6 will mark the release of "The Scoffer," an Allan Dwan production.

Louis B. Mayer's production of "Harriet and the Piper," in which Anita Stewart will be starred, is announced for release on September 15th. This story by Kathleen Norris ran serially in the Pictorial Review and is now being published in book form. Norma Talmadge in Jane Cowl's successful stage play, "Smilin' Through," will be released on September 20th.

Whitman Bennett announces that the initial Lionel Barrymore feature to be distributed by Associated First National Pictures entitled "The Master Mind," will be ready for release by September 30th. Frank Capra, now working on his initial independent production for the Circuit. This will be entitled, "Attila," and is adapted from the story by Robert W. Chambers. "The Woman," a special feature production which will be exploited in very much the same fashion that characterized First National's handling of "Auction of Souls," will be released October 4th. Arthur S. Kaye announces that "Peaceful Valley," Charles Ray's second production for release through First National, will be ready October 11th.

The initial production of R. A. Walsh and personally directed by Mr. Walsh will be ready for release on October 18th. "Old Dad," from the novel by the same name by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott, will be released later in the season, on November 1st. Charles Ray in "Ramos of the Border," a Norma Talmadge picture on February 1st, and a Charles Ray picture on January 17th; "Sowing the Wind," with Anita Stewart, on January 6th, "Jim, the Penman," with Lionel Barrymore a week later; a Norma Talmadge picture on February 7th, and a Marshall Neilan production on the same date; Katherine MacDonald in "The Notorious Miss Lisle," on February 14th; Katherine MacDonald in "The Fair," on February 19th; and a Katherine MacDonald feature for release on March 26th.

A Mildred Harris Chaplin release on March 7th, an R. A. Walsh production to be released on March 14th, and a Katherine MacDonald feature for release on March 28th, which is to be "The Devil's Garden," starring Mildred Harris Chaplin, will be released on April 11th.

A Norma Talmadge and a Charles Ray release on April 18th, a Marshall Neilan picture on April 21st and a Katherine MacDonald starring in "Mama's Affair," to be released on May 2nd, carry the Associated First National schedule almost a year in advance.
Hampton Picture Scoring “Riders of the Dawn” Gives Evidences of Being Great Success is Report

"BACKED by Zane Grey’s literary reputation and audience power and the production and direction standards given it by Benjamin H. Hodkinson, "Riders of the Dawn," has already won its way to the forefront among the few big productions generally regarded as the highlights for the approaching summer season," says W. W. Hodkinson in a statement just issued by that organization.

Trade showings held simultaneously this week at all Hodkinson exchanges lead to the opinion that first run exhibitors throughout the country feel toward "Riders of the Dawn" as did Moe Mark of the New York Strand and Tom Moore of Washington, both of whom gave the Zane Grey production immediate presentation.

Raymond Grombach, the power behind the Liberty theatre, Spokane, Wash., where another current Hodkinson success, Louise Clcam in "Sex," just closed a week of capacity business and "Riders of the Dawn" signal tribute by booking it for early June showing and beginning his campaign with one- column teaser ads in the Spokane dailies two weeks before its first local presentation, Tobler’s Grand, Denver, has also booked "Riders of the Dawn" for a week’s engagement in mid-June.

Harper & Brothers, publishers of the Zane Grey novel, have inaugurated a bookshop link-up campaign on "Riders of the Dawn" that surpasses anything of its kind ever attempted before in the promotion of a picture, the big publishing organization having already linked up close to 18,000 bookdeallers throughout the country, whose cooperation may be had for the asking, says Hodkinson, by exhibitors in the larger cities playing the big Hodkinson release.

Bessie Love Picture Ready
Agent Brings Print to New York to Be Screened for Callaghan

IMMEDIATELY following the assembling of the completed production of "The Midlanders," Bessie Love’s first photoplay for Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Al Rogell, a special representative of the Los Angeles company, left the Western producing center for the East with the first print. Mr. Rogell is expected to arrive in New York City within the next few days, thus giving Andrew J. Callaghan, head of the Callaghan producing company, an opportunity to see the completed version of his initial Bessie Love film prior to sailing for Europe in the interests of his concern.

Mr. Callaghan left his Los Angeles studios several weeks ago when work on "The Midlanders" was well under way. After viewing the rushes of the complete production, the film executive was satisfied to trust the assembling and titling of the film in the hands of Miss Love’s two directors, Ida May Park and Joseph De Grasse, while he came on to New York City with the principal intention of buying rights to additional famous plays and novels for his star.

This week Mr. Callaghan announced to his associates that he had practically completed all arrangements for sailing for England where he will personally supervise the preliminaries to the premiere of Charles Dickens’s "Old Curiosity Shop" to produce which Miss Love will shortly cross the seas. Mr. Callaghan will precede his star to make all necessary arrangements, and following his return to this country, he expects to send a company abroad to make this photoplay in the locale in which the original novel transpires.

 Actors’ Legion Post to Honor Capt. R. S. Gill!
Earl Metcalfe, secretary to the Robert Stowe Gill Post No. 742, American Legion, consisting of the members of the Lambs and Players’ Clubs, has issued a bulletin requesting the members of this organization to be present at a ceremony on Decoration Day. The members of the post will parade in memory of Captain Robert Stowe Gill.

New Star’s Picture Ready
Anne Cornwall Makes “The Girl in the Rain,” Universal Release

ROLLIN STURGEON, Universal studio director, has just announced the completion at Universal City of a new photoplay starring Anne Cornwall, Universal’s most recent star. The picture, "The Girl in the Rain," is a production of Varick Vanadyr’s popular novel, "The Girl By the Roadside." It will be one of the first releases under the newly established series plan of Universal bookings. "The Girl in the Rain" is Miss Cornwall’s third picture for Universal. It is a story of a potted life, played out by a tempest in a desert shack with a socially prominent young man.

Supporting Miss Cornwall in this picture are James Liddy, Lloyd Bacon, Josselyn Von Trump, James Farley, George Runkel and Neal Hardin. Both Miss Cornwall and Mr. Liddy, who plays opposite her, are newcomers in the films. Both are former musical comedy favorites. Miss Cornwall formerly was one of the chorus girls in the series of intimate musical shows presented at the Princess theatre, New York. Her principal screen debut before joining Universal, was that of the ingenue role in "The Copperhead," with Lionel Barrymore.

Mr. Liddy was a star foot-ball half-back before he went on the stage. He was a University of Arizona alumnus and made the All-Western team. "The Girl in the Rain" will be released July 12th.

McLean Picture Has Change of Title
Douglas MacLean’s recently completed Thomas H. Ince Production, announced previously under the working title of "Shakespeare Cheater," has been changed to "The Jailbird." It will be released through Paramount-Artcraft.

H. S. Lavner Resigns
According to an announcement just received, H. S. Lavner has resigned from the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation as publicity and exploitation manager. The resignation was made by Mr. Lavner as to his future plans.

Goldwyn Stars All Busy
Many Productions Prepared for Coming Season at Coast Studios

HAVING finished his work in "Cupid, the Conqueror," a story by Eleanor Gates, produced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation at the Culver City Studios, Will Rogers, who has taken a place among the most popular comedians on the screen, is waiting for the completion of "Old Hach," Garret Smith's story that ran in The Saturday Evening Post. In the new picture, as in his previous successes, "Almost a Husband," "Jubilee," "Water, Water Everywhere" and "Jex Call Me Jim," about to be released, Rogers will be directed by Clarence Badger.

The production of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Empire Builders," a story of "pre-Pro" school life, is progressing under the direction of E. Mason Hopper, who at present has an army of 500 colored people on an island north of Santa Monica where scenes representing life among South Sea Island savages are being filmed.

"Just Out of College," George Ade's play, has been selected as the next starring vehicle for Jack Pickford, who, directed by Al Green, is nearing the "Dliness," role of "The Man Who Had Everything." By the latter part of this week, Tom Moore will be engaged on the production of the mystery fable, "Stop Thief!" with Hazel Daly as his leading woman, Harry Beaumont is directing, Wallace Wormley has just finished editing, Gouvernor Morris' "The Penalty," a Goldwyn Eminent Authors Picture. The author has expressed his admiration at the wonderful characterization given by Lon Chaney in the part of Blizzard, a legless man.

Pathé Reports Big Business
Peak of Pathé's Feature Bookings Said to Have Been Reached in May

THE peak of Pathé's feature business, which has been growing steadily for the last year, was attained during May, according to an announcement just issued by the distributing organization. Bookings for May showed an increase of thirty-three and a third per cent over March, "Bronté Mouth," which upset all previous business in the annals of Pathé Exchange, Inc. During March the thirty-two Pathé branch offices averaged a gross increase in all business over November, December and January, of forty-five per cent, it is declared, indicating the big strides that must have been made by the Pathé feature department during May.

Elmer R. Pearson, Director of Exchanges, in making his report for May to vice-president and general-manager, Paul Brunnert, attributed the great growth of the feature business to two things:

"First, the upbuilding of a feature sales organization, which in numbers and ability, is outranked by none at this time.

"Second, to the ever increasing merit of the Pathé feature product, which, during May, was augmented by two sterling productions—Edgar Lewis' "Sherry" and "Simple Souls," Jesse D. Hampton's production starring Blanche Sweet.

"The showing being made by Rio Grande," the Edwin Carewe production, which, during the first month following its issue, was booked by 2,000 exhibitors, was also a factor in the increased bookings for May. "The Blood Barrier," "Dollar for a Dollar," and "The Miracle of Money" likewise were heavily booked during the month.

Busy Days at Ince Studios
Florence Vidor Engaged for Stellar Role of "Beau Revel" Feature

FOLLOWING a temporary halt in activities, the Thomas H. Ince Studios in Culver City, with production in full swing as four companies are at work on forthcoming Thomas H. Ince productions to be released through Famous Players-Lasky Exchanges.

Edith Bennett's newest vehicle, "I Wonder If," which marks her last picture under the supervision and banner of Thomas H. Ince, is progressing under the direction of Fred Niblo. The story is by Frank Dazey, and the scenario by Agnes Christine Johnston. Donald MacDonald appears opposite Miss Bennett in the leading masculine role.

"I Wonder If—" is said to offer many possibilities for theex-actress and director, and possesses an appeal of romance and mystery. Moreover, the production is described as a genuine fashion show.

The new Ince-Vance special, "The House of Toys," under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince and the direction of John Griffith Wray, is in its second week of filming.

Thomas H. Ince announces that he has engaged Florence Vidor for the leading role of "Beau Revel." In connection with the acquisition of Miss Vidor for the stellar role, the following statement has been issued from the Ince office:

"The role fits her like the proverbial glove, and her vivacious beauty and great personal charm will be seen to the utmost advantage in the settings of gay New York life, which will make "Beau Revel" one of the memorable pictures of the year."

Douglas MacLean and his company are shooting "exteriors" for "Yanoculla Yullies" under the direction of Jack Nelson. Gladys George has the principal feminine role. "Yanoculla Yullies" is bringing over with laughs, states a report from the Ince studios. "It presents the 'back to the farm' idea from a very different and modern angle, but there is genuine farm stuff in it, and the farm which is serving as the background leaves nothing to the imagination."

Phewa Owen Becomes Star
"Flying A" Says Her Latest Work Qualifies Her for That Position

THE work of Seena Owen as the star of the "Flying A" special, "The House of Toys," is the subject of a statement just issued by the American Film Company, Inc. The statement claims that the theory of Miss Owen's lack of a "camera face" is absolutely discredit in the actual results that have been achieved with her, and in the production of "The House of Toys." The statement follows:

"Seena Owen has at last come into her own, in the American Film Company special, "The House of Toys," in which she carries the role of the typical farm girl which is ideally suited to it, and it would be so romantic to marry and be poor and work together," forgetting that there is nothing poetical or inspiring about a small flat on a side street, or last year's millinery.

"Seena Owen has always been acclaimed a gifted actress, and yet a magazine article of recent date started a long article with the query, 'Why isn't Seena Owen a star?' She was described as 'vigorous, athletic, clear-skinned and clean-eyed,' with gray-blue eyes that look at you frankly from under curly lashes, finely arched eyebrows, and thick blond hair which was long and curly until the fashion of the minute bid it, and yet the idiosyncrasies of the camera never did her justice. In fact it was said the camera was cruel to her. They said she didn't have a camera face! Now a true camera face is nobody has defined, because just about the director thinks he knows, along comes a star who departs from every theory which had been culminating into rules, and photographs to perfection. So with Seena Owen, by some little trick of lighting, or as a result of some study on the part

Censors' Objection to "Sex" Wins Publicity

The objection of three women to the showing of "Sex," the Hodkinson release starring Louis Glauam, resulted in front page publicity in Lawrence, Mass., papers and led the manager of the Rialto theatre to abandon his proposed exploitation campaign.
Penn Import to Handle Hallmark Pictures

Through a contract recently consummated, the Penn Import and Export Company will handle the entire foreign distribution Hallmark Picture Corporation’s product. The contract was signed last week by Frank G. Hall, representing Hallmark, and Adolph Penn for Penn Imports, and covers all of the Hallmark projects for the next twelve months.

A number of subjects which have been released in the United States are ready for distribution in England, on the Continent and in the Far East. Included in these are “The Phantom Honeymoon” and “Wits vs Wits” with Margarette Marsh, “The Heart of a Gypsy” with Florence Billings, “High Speed” with Gladys Hulette; “The Veiled Marriage” with Anna Lehr; “What Children Will Do” with Edith Stockton; “Parted Curtains” with Henry Walthall and Mary Alden; “The Discarded Woman” and “The Common Sin” with Grace Darling. Several serials are now in preparation.

‘The Black Sheep’ Is Being Picturized

The “Black Sheep” by Will Payne, that ran as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post and published in book form under the title of “The Scared Chin,” is being produced as a special feature by the One-Off Film Corporation at the Enwood Studio, Denver, Colorado. No expense is being spared to make it one of the year’s big successes under the direction of John B. O’Brien with a well balanced cast.

Arrow Indian Picture Ready to Distribute

A five-reel special production, announced by the Arrow Film Corporation. This is an all-Indian production titled “Before the White Man Came.” The picture was made entirely by the Crow Indians of the Crow reservation in Montana. Not a single white man is seen in the entire picture. The attraction is now ready for distribution.

George Tucker Signs Contract

Suit with Mayflower Definitely Settled with Signing

Benjamin A. Prager, president of the independent Photoplay Corporation, this week received George Lorne Tucker’s signed contract, definitely and satisfactorily closing the Tucker-Mayflower litigation which has been pending for almost a year. Mr. Prager expressed himself as gratified that an amicable settlement has been reached, a sentiment echoed by the entire industry.

Immediately upon affixing his signature to the new contract, Tucker resumed the cutting and editing of “Ladies Must Live,” his second independent production to be presented by Mayflower. Actual filming of the Tucker production was completed some time ago at the Brunton Studios. According to the terms of the contract, the producer of the sensational film success, “The Miracle Man,” will make four more specials to be presented by Mayflower.

In commenting upon the Tucker settlement, Mr. Prager stated that Mayflower will give the producer of the “Ladies Must Live” contract, the resources of its organization and lend him all possible support to help him in every way possible to achieve his forthcoming production. In this connection, Mr. Prager declared that the Mayflower studio is one of the largest and most modern units in the country that made “The Miracle Man,” the greatest film sensation of the past decade. We feel that he can more than duplicate his achievement, and we will leave nothing untried in our efforts to further his success.

In characterizing Mr. Tucker as one of the screen’s master directors we are merely reflecting the opinion of the motion picture industry, the press and the public. We welcome Mr. Tucker’s return to the studio, for he has and will continue to contribute much to the artistic development of the photoplay. Film experts who have seen “Ladies Must Live” in the rough, are said to agree that the noted director has produced another epoch-making feature. In many quarters, it is predicted that the new Tucker-special is destined to surpass in box-office strength and popular appeal its notable predecessor. In story, it is said, transcends in power and emotional intensity “The Miracle Man,” while Tucker’s handling is very effective and to the penetrating mind and technical skill that found expression in his great photoplay classic.

The cast of “Ladies Must Live” includes many of the screen’s foremost players, the principal feminine role is played by Betty Compson, who leaped to stardom overnight by virtue of her performance in “The Miracle Man.” As the painted grizette of New York’s underworld who found her soul in the crucible of Faith, Miss Compson startled the film world by the consummate skill and artistry of her performance. In “Ladies Must Live,” the talented artist is entrusted with a role equally rich in opportunities for dramatic expression.

International Film Moves

Executive Offices and Other Departments Will Be Centered in Studio

In order to bring about closer coordination between the production and business departments, International Film Service Corporation has moved its executive offices and all other departments to its main studio on Second Avenue at 127th Street. This action has been found necessary, according to Vice President Henry M. Hohart, because of the rapid expansion of the company. Plans for the future call for increased activity on an unprecedented scale. The new studio building of International occupies an entire city block.

“Success can be had only by cooperation and coordination of effort,” said Mr. Hohart, “and the reason for centering our entire personnel under one roof is because we feel that in that way we will obtain better understanding between the different departments of the organization, which will, naturally, a favorable effect upon our production. Under the new system each department has close touch with the other departments without waste of time and effort. Our plans for the coming year are very voluminous and we believe that by concentrating our various departments at the studio we strengthen our organization by a considerable degree.”

International Film Service has occupied the entire sixteenth floor at 729 Seventh Avenue, for the past three years. These quarters have contained the executive department, the auditor’s department, the sales department, the finance department, the publicity and advertising department, the cartoon department where the animated cartoons were made, and the news reel department. Under the new plan these departments are moved up to the studio with the exception of the news reel department which takes up quarters at 238 William Street on the basement floor. This is our last effort so as to be in closer touch with the news of the day.

Lowell Made Special Foreign Agent

Bamberger & Levy, general sales agents to the trade, announce the appointment of Edgar Lowell as special foreign representative. Mr. Lowell leaves New York June 12 for London where he will close several big deals for Bamberger & Levy.

Louise Glama Picture on Hallmark List

Louise Glama in “Love or Justice,” one of her best early successes, is on the list of June releases announced by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation.
Unique Characterization in NeIan’s Picture

Marshall NeIan believes his third independent production will offer an unusual characterization in the part that “Bull” Montana, former champion middle-weight wrestler and trainer for Douglas Fairbanks. The natural assets of cauliflower ears, a fierceness of expression when he gets into action have been augmented by an effective make-up.

“Literary Dept.” for Pathe

Mary Edith Butler-Curtis Dunham Comprise New Publicity Extension

An innovation in motion picture publicity work has been initiated by Pathe Exchange, Inc., with the formation of a “literary department” as an adjunct to its publicity force. Mary Edith Butler and Curtis Dunham, well known in the newspaper and magazine syndicate field, have been added to the Pathe publicity staff and at present comprise the “literary department.”

An insistent demand from newspapers and magazines throughout the country for a grade of publicity suitable for actual syndicating led to the organization by Pathe of its “literary department.” One syndicate alone has placed with Pathe an order amounting to 180,000 words.

Mary Edith Butler, new special writer for Pathe, has been engaged in newspaper, magazine and book work for about eight years. Her experience in the writing game has been unusually varied. It ranges from campaign work and political articles on the practical side, humorous and straight feature stories in the newspapers and magazine field, to varied libre—and the production of wild-west fiction and romance in the realm allied to the literary.

Curtis Dunham was for twenty-one years associated with the Hearst newspapers as reporter, correspondent, music and dramatic critic, and special writer for the Sunday sections. During this time he published a dozen volumes of fiction with Houghton Mifflin Co., Bobbs-Merrill, R. J. Fenno and Co., and Dick and Fitzgerald. Included in this series was “The Casino Girl in London;” “Two in a Zoo;” “The Golden Goblin;” “A Legend of St. Patrick at Tara;” and “Gambling With Galatea.” He is author of the English metrical versions of the war poems of Edmond Rostand. He has produced several short plays and wrote and produced a motion picture of his own.

Mayer Purchases “The Drums of Jeopardy”

Louis B. Mayer, producer of Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin First National attractions, has purchased the world’s motion-picture rights of Harold MacGrath’s great Saturday Evening Post story, “The Drums of Jeopardy.” It was not announced for which of his stars the story was secured. The success of “The Yellow Typhoon,” which was also written by Mr. MacGrath, prompted Mr. Mayer to secure this latest offering of Mr. MacGrath.

To Take Scenes in Frisco’s Chinatown

Chester Bennett will take his company, headed by Earle Williams, from Hollywood to San Francisco this week to spend two weeks in obtaining colorful Chinatown scenes and in filming submarine incidents in the bay. The story is “The Purple Cipher,” announced by Albert E. Smith as the next Williams release. It is taken from a popular magazine novel.
Special Service on Georges Carpentier in “The Wonder Man”

To the exhibitor that will play "The Wonder Man," we would recommend two exploitation angles which we feel should receive the greater measure of his selling force; first, the star as a personage of international prominence, and secondly, those scenes that set him off in his contrasting roles as a gentleman and a pugilist. The second suggestion needs a word of explanation. "The Wonder Man" proves conclusively that a clever prize-fighter can at the same time be a perfect gentleman, not only in appearance but in manners as well. This fact is somewhat opposed to the regular notion of what a "pug," ordinarily is. That this element is of supreme exploitation value in selling this picture to the public we will point out later. For the present, we would advise that the exhibitor in his display emphasize those scenes that play the star up in his "ring togs" and his dressing-room. Consequently, let the keynote of your exploitation for "The Wonder Man" be-Carpentier a figure famous on the Continent, and Carpentier the gentleman-pugilist.

That the picture is pleasant; that Carpentier shows a surprising screen personality and gives a genuinely creditable performance; that the production is really one of the big ones released this season; and that the cast represents a carefully selected line-up, including Faire Binney, sister to the better-known Constance Binney, star of "39 East," are all of comparatively small consequence to the patronage that you will bring into your house by means of your exploitation campaign. Curiosity to see the star—this figure well known to Europe and America—to watch him work in the gymnasium and the ring and thus secure a general idea of his somewhat-discussed physique and boxing prowess—these are the dominant factors that will serve to attract your audiences, especially the male element. For the men, Carpentier's reputation as a clever ringmaster and his standing as a war "vet" who saw service under fire will possess an inherent appeal, and provided you play up these two facts strong enough in connection with your exploitation of the star the male component of your patrons will be well provided for. But how to get the ladies. That is the main problem.

The idea of prize-fighting is repulsive to the average feminine mind. It smacks of brutality, of bottle-browed "beef" and of low ideals. The ring-encounter in the woman's mind takes on the aspect of a contest where brute-force alone matters; where intellect has no part to play; where all the finer and nobler sentiments of man's character must be discarded and his primitive instincts depended upon to prove his superiority over his opponent. These are the prejudices that you must seek to overcome in exploiting "The Wonder Man." First of all, make it plain to your clientele that this picture is not one where a professional "bruiser" is given the opportunity to fight his way through several reels of blood and thunder. There is no blood; there is no thunder. There are a couple of ring-encounters in which Carpentier figures as the member of a fashionable club, but these serve only to demonstrate Carpentier's slim graceful build, his ability, even temper, quick eye and rapid-calculating mind. In other words (and this is the point to drive home), Carpentier's ring-appearance in this picture is only a specimen of perfect "team-work" between the mental faculties and the physical make-up of a clean-cut, self-confident, and scientifically clever young fellow.

Moreover, let the ladies know that the star's role in the roped circle is only a small part of the action in the production, comparatively. For the greater part of the footage, Carpentier is playing the part of an agent for the French government—the resident of a fashionable hotel where he "hobs-nobs" with the gentility in evening dress, a lion with the ladies and a gentleman to the tips of his fingers. In the garb and part of a French gentleman he moves about in the most gorgeous of settings, for the greater part of the action, lending his attractive personality and winning smile to the appeal of the story itself. So, as far as the ladies are concerned, be sure to play Carpentier upon the Frenchman of France, a World-War hero, who moves and plays his part as gracefully in the ball-room as he does in the prize-ring.

In the foregoing we have tried to indicate what we feel should be the key-notes of your exploitation campaign. Now for a few suggestions that can be put over in behalf of "The Wonder Man."

Educators See Special at Hotel Astor

An unusual tribute was paid to Robertson-Cole's special during its showing last week at the Hotel Astor. In the midst of an unusually successful run of "The Wonder Man" in the Grand Ball Room of the Hotel Astor, the Society for Scholastikoi, composed of the principals of the New York City High Schools, bought out the Grand Ball Room for Thursday evening, June 3, and fifteen hundred educators and others of prominence saw the Carpentier picture on that evening, it is stated.

Word-of-mouth praise of the picture reached the New York High School principals at a time when they were planning their banquet to celebrate an increase of salaries in Greater New York. It was only after much difficulty in arranging for a cancellation of the hundreds of seats sold in advance for Thursday evening that the educators arranged with the Legion, at considerable expense, it is said, for a special showing for them and their guests. Among those invited to the Thursday evening showing were Governor Smith, Mayor Hylan, members of Congress from New York City, and members of the Assembly.

The opportunity for window displays in stores that specialize in sporting goods is an excellent one. Robertson-Cole has a liberal stock of stills showing the star in gymnasium togs at various poses, attitude of defense, punching the bag, getting a rub-down, etc. These stills mounted as a series and placed on.

On the left is the elaborate balcony set in "The Wonder Man," a Robertson-Cole picture, and in the center and right, two views of Carpentier in his boxing togs.

SYNOPSIS OF "THE WONDER MAN"

In "The Wonder Man," Georges Carpentier is given the part of Henri D'Alour, residing at a fashionable Washington hotel. His youthful appearance, gentlemanly bearing and, above all, his air of mystery excite much comment and attract the attention of the feminine complement among the younger set. He falls in love with Dorothy Stoner, daughter of a prominent business man, who holds important contracts for war supplies from the French government. Shortly after D'Alour's arrival on the scene, Mr. Stoner's office is broken into and the Stoner safe rifled. The attempted robbery of the French contracts seems to have been the motive for the crime. Who is the prominent murder?

Another issue also is involved. Mr. Gardiner, champion athlete of the fashionable club to which D'alour has received entry, is also in love with Dorothy Stoner. During a gymnasium session Gardiner easily outpoints D'Alour in an informal boxing bout. Later Gardiner angers Dorothy by his forced demonstrations of affection. D'Alour arrives in time to see Dorothy's rebuff of his rival. She requests D'Alour to thrash Gardiner for his insulting conduct. D'Alour's failure to do so at once is interpreted by the young lady as a confession of cowardice, and she leaves him in scorn.

Meanwhile, evidences of a compelling kind point to Henry D'Alour, the man of mystery, as the murderer of Mr. Stoner's secretary. Shunned by the girl he loves and suspected by his associates as the one responsible for the crime in Stoner's office, D'Alour sets about to reestablish himself in the good graces of his sweetheart and to detect the true assaulter. After an intense series of events which begins as he meets Gardiner in the big ring-scene of the picture and spurs to supreme efforts by the arrival at the last moment of an encouraging note from Dorothy, he turns a losing fight into victory. Aided by one of Stoner's servants, D'Alour lays out a plan of campaign against the secret forces that are working for the possession of the coveted French contracts. He eventually exposes them and captures the true culprit responsible for the murder in the final scenes of the picture. The mystery of D'Alour's identity is also cleared up when he is revealed in the closing moments as an agent of the French secret-service system.

delivery, cool temperament, his clean, scientific boxing, etc., being careful to avoid anything that might suggest the "brute-force" and lack of mentality so commonly associated with the professional "pug.

Basic story for press notice or program reader.

Georges Carpentier, the French World War hero and champion heavyweight of Europe, will be seen in "The Wonder Man" at the Strand Theatre on Friday of next week. "The Wonder Man," while giving the star an opportunity to demonstrate his agility, grace of action, speed and boxing science in the roped-circle and the gymnasium, is a dominantly society picture, presenting the French celebrity in the role of a gentleman who moves about amid gorgeous settings in the unfolding of an interesting story. "The Wonder Man" is no a "blood and thunder picture," in which the hero is called upon to smash his way through five-olds by force of brute-strength and clever "bruiser tactics." There is no blood in this picture, and there is no thunder. Instead you will find a gentleman playing his part in most creditable fashion and leading to an interesting story the support of a winning smile and remarkably attractive personality.

The supporting cast, led by Fair Binnen, sister of the better-known Constance Binnen, represents an array of carefully selected talent. The director, John G. Adolfi, is conceded to have realized in this production his greatest achievement since his direction of "The Casey Case" with Julia Arthur as the star. To this appeal of strong cast and clever direction is added the beauty of rare and gorgeous settings in which colorful surroundings and beautiful costumes vie for supremacy. And with it all runs a story of romance and mystery which is built to keep your interest fully aroused from start to finish. So draw a circle around the dates of and and visit the Strand Theatre to view a star, famous on two continents, supported by a cast of unusual quality in a story which under capable direction and with the help of beautiful settings is bound to give you an afternoon or evening of rare entertainment.

Pioneer Will Release
Series of Comedies

The Pioneer film editorial department which has just completed its work on "The Way We Was" with Lonnie Huff, is now busily engaged in preparing the forthcoming series of the two-reel comedies, which are to be released within the next month or so.

These comedies deal with the humorous exploits of "A Modern Peck's Bad Boy!" They will be released at intervals of two weeks.

The leading part is played by Frank McGlynn, Jr., the son of Frank McGlynn, who is now appearing in the title role of "Abraham Lincoln," in New York.

Matty Roubert Pictures
To Be Shipped Soon

"Circus Day" and "She's a Vamp" are the titles selected for the first two Reelcraft pictures, starring Matty Roubert of the 12-year-old "leading man." Sample prints of these two pictures will be in the hands of all Reelcraft exchanges shortly for screening for exhibitors.

The pictures are to be but two reels each and released one a month at the Reelcraft and allied exchanges throughout the United States.

A national advertising campaign on this series has already started in the trade papers, and Reelcraft plans to carry a separate advertising campaign for each release.

Hallmark Has King Picture

"The Discarded Woman" Scheduled for Early Release by F. G. Hall

"THE DISCARDED WOM-AN," a Burton King production in six reels, is announced as the June 15 release on the Hall-mark Picture Corporation's program by Frank G. Hall, its president. The picture is in six reels and was produced under the personal direction of Mr. King whose last special production was "The Lost Battalion."

Grace Darling and Rod La Roque are the featured players with a supporting cast including E. J.
Rolph, W. D. Corbett, Madeleine Clare and James Cooley. Miss Darling recently completed the starring role in a Robert W. Chambars novel and Mr. La Roque is one of the screen's best known leading men, his latest appearance being opposite Mary Miles Minter in the screen version of Israel Zangwill's novel, "Nurse Majorie."

"The Discarded Woman" is the story of an unhappy marriage and of a wife who would deceive her husband to safeguard the home but sacrificed all rather than betray her.

The locale takes in the East and West giving rise to strong dramatic moments and action. The Western dance hall and the Eastern high life are presented with a "true-to-life" faithfulness that makes the picture, according to pre-viewers, ideal entertainment.

This King production is Hallmark's early summer special and will be followed in July by the second of King's, a screen version of an original story by William Mach.

Hemmer Finds Location
in New Jersey

Edward Hemmer, president of the Hemmer Superior Productions, reports that he had considerable difficulty in finding the correct exterior for the picture he is now making. A sufficiently dilapidated farmhouse was finally discovered in New Jer-sy.

"Isle of Destiny" Can Be Well Exploited

Virtual exploitation possibilities as well as strong entertainment values are said to be features of Character Pictures Corporation's special production that has just been completed, "The Isle of Destiny." Realizing the importance of exploitation, special consideration was given, according to the producer, to all elements entering into the making of the production that would tend to give it the best of exploitation possibilities.

Cannibals play an important part in the picture and much time was given to get the correct cannibal atmosphere. One of the freak "shots" is a scene in which it is estimated that at one time 50,000 fiddle crabs are in evidence. In trying to get scenes and locations that were different, the company had great difficulties and only secured them at the expense of much time and money.

Christie Studio to the Fore in News Reels

graphed a scene at the Christie studio showing members of the Bankers' Association taking part with Al Christie, Bobby Vernon and Dorothy Devore in a comedy.

Screen Snap Shots, another novelty reel, shows scenes of Ray Tim-cher, Christie, and Al Christie at home. It will also show in one edition a back-stage view of putting on a special Christie comedy with the Christie Folies girls.

The Paley Weekly has another view of the Christie studios, with Dr. Neal Dodd addressing players in his campaign for a Motion-Picture Church in Hollywood.

Booklet Helps Boost
Reelcraft Pictures

Reelcraft Pictures Corporation has issued an attractive booklet of twenty-four pages, entitled "Analyst's Lamp for the Industry," it is set forth interesting statistics givning the number of theatres in the United States and their estimated daily attendance, as well as the investments in the industry. It also contains, under the heading "Pictures Owned or Distributed Generally or Sectionally," a complete list of all Reelcraft subjects. The booklet is attractively gotten up and contains pictures of Reelcraft laugh makers.

Annette Kellerman's
Premier in West

"What Women Love," starring Annette Kellerman, was given its initial showing at Santa Ana, California, on June 1st. The premiere has been the source of great satisfaction to the producer and the members of his organization. The new picture does not emphasize her acquatic skills but presents her in the comedy held as an American girl of the out-door, athletic type.
George Beban is also reported as putting the finishing touches on his "One Man in a Million."
Reelcraft for Independents

Deals Directly With Twenty-five Exchanges Throughout the Country

In response to the present popular query from the Exhibitors "Where Do You Stand?" comes the report from the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation declaring for the independent exhibitor and the independent exchange the history of Reelcraft is dealing directly with more than twenty-five independent exchanges throughout the United States at the present time, and attributes a big measure of the present success of Reelcraft to the close co-operation maintained by this independent distributing organization. There is no desire to interfere in any manner with those independents selling Reelcraft releases, each independent takes those releases he wants for his territory, and permits Reelcraft to sell those he cannot place among his releases to any other independent exchange in the territory.

That the present plan is an ideal one is said to be proven by the cordial and successful relations established between Reelcraft and the R. D. Marion Attractions Company of Boston; the Arrow Film Company of Denver; the Standard Film Service of Cleveland, Detroit and Cincinnati; The Dooley Exchanges of Syracuse and Buffalo; the Consolidated Film Company of Los Angeles and San Francisco; the Greater Features of Seattle; R. D. Lewis Film Company of Dallas, San Antonio and Little Rock; the Supreme Photoplay Company of Denver; the E. & H. Distributing Company of Atlanta; the S. & S. Film Supply Company of Pittsburgh; the United Film Company of St. Louis; the Magnet Film Company of Davenport and Omaha; the First National Film Company of Kansas City; the Arrow Film Company of Boston; the Exhibitors Exchange of Washington; and the Alterman Film Company of Knoxville.

Chatkin on Way to Coast

Secretary of Kohn Productions Returns After New York Meeting

David J. Chatkin, secretary of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, who has been in New York for the past week attending the independent producers convention, has just left for the coast, before leaving New York Mr. Chatkin was asked about the market for short subjects, in which the Kohn Productions specialize.

He expressed himself as very optimistic regarding the future for two-reel and single-reel pictures. "I believe," said Chatkin, "that the coming fall and winter will mark the greatest point in the history of the short reel pictures. Time, effort and money are being put into these pictures on a scale never anticipated. All the energy that is put into producing a five-reel production is now concentrated in the making of two-reelers. Short subjects were formerly program fillers. They were flashed on the screen without main titles and swept off in the same manner. "Times are different now. The finest houses in the country are actually featuring the two-reelers. They appear in electric lights along with the big features on the theatre signs. As a result managers are scoring the market for really good short subjects." While in New York Mr. Chatkin arranged for the sale of all Marion H. Kohn Productions to the Federal Film exchanges.

Radin Subjects Bought by Exhibitors Film

The Exhibitors Film Company of Pittsburg has purchased the rights from Radin Pictures on the "Zip Comedies," featuring Chris Rub and Enrique E. Turner, and the two-part series of "Real Star Dramas," for the Pennsylvania and West Virginia territory.
Frank Losee Will Support Farrar

With the engagement of Frank Losee for an important part in support of Geraldine Farrar in her first Associated Exhibitors Production, "The Riddle: Woman" to be produced by Pauline Director Edward J. Goodwin, rapid progress during the last week in the filming of the great stage play. The addition of Frank Losee to the cast, gives the production a trio of excellent players in support of the star. Adele Blood and Montague Love are members of the company, and Farrar is expected to make "The Riddle: Woman" a great contribution to the silent drama.

Mr. Losee is a veteran of stage and screen, and his work is known to motion picture exhibitors throughout the land. For twenty-five years he appeared in many of the great stage plays, under the direction of Belasco, Frohman, Klaw & Erlanger, the Shuberts and John Curt. For three years the actor appeared in Famous Players' productions, numbered among which were "La Rosca," "The Spiders of the North," "Helen of the World," and "In Full." The Egyptian set upon which Mr. Losee is now engaged in filming the scenes of "The Riddle: Woman," is said to be one of the most pretentious ever built for a motion picture.

Exhibitors Said to Be Seizing Pictures

With the idea that they can force somebody to make good for the losses they have sustained through the failure of United Theatres, a number of exhibitors are said to have seized United pictures received from the Halmark Exchanges, formerly operated by United. They have held these, it is alleged, without regard for the bookings of other theatres which are scheduled to play the same features.

Hallmark has issued a statement calling attention to the fact that such seizure is illegal and that the United States District Court, which appointed the receiver, will not permit such seizure of property in the possession of the court. The exhibitors, it is said, will be held responsible.

Lesser Will Not Make Underwater Picture

So! Lesser wishes to deny any reports which have been circulating to the effect that he would star Annette Kellerman in a sensational underwater serial. Mr. Lesser is now busy engaged in having his staff put the finishing touches to the latest Annette Kellerman comedy drama, "What Women Love," on which he will soon announce distribution policy.

Independent Field Is Strong

That "The Independent Exhibitor, exchange man and distributor are now individuals of prominence in the picture art and that the independent field was never in a better state of progressiveness and stability," are phrases containing the essence of a statement made by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, who five weeks earlier in the week for the Cleveland convention.

Mr. Shallenberger is head of one of the largest dist"ributing organizations in the film industry and has the authority to speak on subjects vital to the independent film man. He has offered the following statement to the trade press for publication:

1. Have a two-fold purpose in attending the exhibitors' convention in Cleveland. One is to watch the actual convention proceedings and the other one, the major reason, to meet all the independent exhibitors and exchanges that attend.

This convention is a time when the independent man is reap- ing the deserved harvest of his straightforward business policies. The independent exhibitor, exchange man and distributor are new individuals of prominence in the picture art. By the same token, they are considered in a more serious manner than ever before.

While the larger distributing organizations have been progressing and carrying on an internal war, the independent organizations have been working together for the purpose of bettering their condition.

In discussing the condition of the independent field Mr. Shallenberger pointed out in detail the stability of the organizations themselves. He said, "As proof of the stability of the independent field I point to the men in the independent organization. They are among the most capable in the entire industry and in many cases more so. They are level-headed individuals imbued with the earnest desire to provide the public with real screen drama of high character."

The independent field was never in a better state of progressiveness or stability. At least twenty to thirty buyers visit our office here each week, seeking as it were, the highest class of attractions. They are not seeking ordinary pictures—pictures which go over because of a starting title or a lurid appeal, but pictures that contain clean dramatic action or wholesome humor.

Mr. Shallenberger and Mr. Dana and Shallenberger expected to go to Chicago after the Cleveland convention, where they will hold discussions with the independent executives in that territory.

Washburn Picture Last of Kremer Revivals

With "Skinner's Dress Suit" Victor Kremer Film Features close their revival. This is chiefly due to the lack of "Big Beats" among reissues. In other words the climax of this branch of the business offers no attraction big enough to suit Mr. Kremer.

Most extensive new press matter has been prepared, the novel combination "Dress-Suit-Suit," especially designed for the purpose being most in demand. Judging from the "Skinner's Dress Suit" is booking where the feature has been released, Mr. Kremer is sanguine that "Skinner's Dress Suit" will suppress all competition with the exit of "Revivals" Victor Kremer makes his debut as producer and distributor of New Independent Big Feature Attractions.
To Executives and Advertising Managers:

I am bringing before you, somewhat bluntly, the following facts because they seem worthy of your very serious consideration:

The subscription circulation of the News, issue of May 29th, was guaranteed, every single subscription.

10,327

Subscription circulation is the only circulation test. If a paper includes newsstand circulation in its circulation figures you can subtract just that amount.

If, therefore, any other paper is lower in subscription circulation by 20% or 30% or 50% your advertising in that paper, compared with the "NEWS," is just 20% or 30% or 50% less effective.

If, furthermore, a paper has not selected its subscriptions and confined them strictly to trade prospects (as the News has, returning over a thousand non-trade subscriptions), then you can subtract another 10%, at least, from the effectiveness of your advertising.

Do you think it fair to yourself, or fair to us, then, to put all papers in this field upon the same basis of advertising effectiveness—by giving to each the same amount of copy either by duplication or alternation?

You would not expect pictures to be rented on such a basis.

We are not asking you a higher advertising rate—higher by 20% or 30% or 50%, because of our greater circulation.

We simply ask that, in your own business interest, you place your advertising upon a basis pro rata with circulation quantity and quality——And to arrive at this, that you ask all trade papers for an analysis of circulation—by subscriptions.

Sincerely,

[Signature]

P. S.—An A. B. C. audit report will shortly verify and analyze the above figures
News Notes from the West Coast

By J. C. Jessen

CECIL B. DeMille is now doing the preparatory work on his next production which will be started the latter part of June, and a significant feature concerning this is that a number of new people are being engaged to play in this subject. Recent DeMille productions have had Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels and Wanda Hawley in leading roles, but as Miss Hawley and Miss Daniels are to be started for Realart, and Miss Swanson is to retire from the screen temporarily, Mr. DeMille has found it necessary to find a new leading woman for his production.

It has been definitely decided that Ethel Clayton is to make but one picture for Paramount-Arcaft at the West Coast studios. This, "Rosie de Janeiro" now in the making under the direction of Tom Forman from script written by Mary H. O'Connor. Immediately following the completion of this play Miss Clayton will take a vacation, and will then go to the London Famous Players-Lasky studio for the making of at least two films.

Tom Geraghty has completed the scenario for the "Charms School" to star Wallace Reid, and Director James Cruze will begin the filming of this next week.

Wallace Woods is at work on scenario for Roscoe Arbuckle, "The Traveling Salesman," to be directed by Joseph Henabery; and William DeMille expects to begin the filming of "His Friend and His Wife," within the next week.

The George Melford company, making "The Judge's," is working in superior locations near some large settings are being built at the studio; and the Bryant Washburn unit filming, "Wanted a Blemish," from scenario by Douglas Bronston, is working under the direction of Maurice Campbell at the Morosco Studios.

Under her contract which she renewed for five years with Mr. Laskey, Gloria Swanson will be starred in a number of productions. Last year she made a tremendous hit by her work in "Male and Female," and "Why Change Your Wife?" both Cecil B. DeMille productions, and under the new arrangement she will work under Mr. DeMille, who will select her stories and supervise all details of production. Another feature of the new season will be George Loane Tucker's picture, "Ladies Must Live," a Mayflower Production.

Billie Burke will be starred in four pictures next year, according to the terms of her new long-term contract. The first of these, "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's play, is already in production and will be released late in November. It is announced by Mr. Laskey that the new plays for Miss Burke will be of a somewhat more serious nature than those in which she has appeared in the past. All will be from well known books or plays.

Thomas Meighan, whose work in Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female" and George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man" won him stardom, will be starred in six pictures next season. Five pictures from the Saturday Evening Post story by Charles B. Alcorn, will next do "Jeanne of the Marshes" from the novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim.

Wallace Reid, who is making "The Charms School," a lively comedy from the novel by Alice Duer Miller, will be starred in seven pictures during the coming season. Ethel Clayton, who is completing "A City Sparrow" by Kate Jordan, also will be starred in seven pictures.

Douglas MacLean, Thomas H. Ince star, is expected further to increase his popularity though the six pictures which will be released under the Paramount banner next season. MacLean already has completed "Laced Interiors" and "The Jailbird" and is now at work on "Yancon Yellies."" The first picture to be released in November Post story by Herschel S. Hall.

Six pictures starring Enid Bennett, Thomas H. Ince star, will be released, coming on schedule. These include "The Inebriates," "I Wonder If," "Her Husband's Friends," which already have been completed or are in work.

Dorothy Gish will be seen in four new productions, the first of which "Little Miss Rebellen" will be released in September. "The Princess of New York," one of Cosmo Hamilton's stories, probably will be the first picture to be made next season by Violet Heming.

Maurice Tourneur will make two productions for release next season by Famous Players-Lasky. The first of these, "Cayley West," from the story by P. Hopkinsmith, will be released in November.

With the vast literary reservoir of the Hearst publications to draw upon, the Cosmopolitan Productions are unusually well equipped to provide twelve pictures during the year. Four pictures featuring Bryant Washburn will be released next season, "Murder Proof," and "A Full House" already have been completed and "Wanted, A Blemish," the screening of which is scheduled.

Two pictures starring Charles Ray, Thomas H. Ince star, will be released during the coming year, "The Village Heirloom," and "An Old Fashioned Boy." Sydney Chaplin has completed the

BRUNTON

THE initial Betty Compson production made at the Robert Brunton studios under the working title of "The Test" is nearing completion under the direction of Arthur Rosson and has been given the final title of "Prisoners of Love"
A new story has been selected as Miss Compson's next starring vehicle and work of filming that will start shortly. Lindsay McK-Compson company.

The scenario staff of B. B.
Brunton productions is now working on the continuity of the William Allen White novel, "A Certain Rich Man," and this script will be ready for filming in the near future.

FOX

I F William Fox should come to his West Coast studios he would find every unit save that headed by William Russell at work on new productions. It is reported in numerous quarters of Los Angeles that Mr. Fox will arrive in Los Angeles during the coming week, it being his intention to come West immediately following the Fox convention. At the studio, however, this report could not be verified.
The only statement that was there was that Mr. Fox expects to visit the studios during June or July but the exact date that he will come West is not definitely known to the executives.
Isracl Zangwill's play "Merely Mary Ann," is now in the making for the screen and will star Shirley Mason under the direction of Edward LeSaint. Raymond McKee is leading man and other principals of the cast up to date are Harry Springer, George Woodthorpe and Babe London. The play will have additional members for its cast but the scenes now being made do not require the players for a week or more.

Lyn F. Reynolds, who for the past year has been directing for Universal following eighteen months with the Fox organization, has returned to the William Fox studio and is to direct Tom Mix. During Reynolds' previous engagement with Fox he directed Tom Mix, Madeline Traverse and Peggy Hyland and his present work will be the filming of "Three Gold Coins." Reynolds has specialized on out door pictures for the past several years and by Fox executives he is considered most capable for directing pictures of the type best suited for Mix.

William Russell has made the last scenes for "The Twins of Suffering Creek" and while supervising the editing of this subject he is working with the scenario department in the preparation of his next production. Scott Dunlap was the director of the Russell picture just finished and it is very likely he will continue with this star.

The Fox scenario department have prepared continuity for the Eileen Percy vehicle which will be entitled "The Husband Hunter." It is an adaptation from the magazine story, "Myra Meets His Family," by F. Scott Fitzgerald. Howard Mitchell is to direct the new Fox star and the cast selected to support her in her initial vehicle includes Emery Johnson as leading man, James Miller, Harry Dunkin, Evans Kirk, Edward McWade and John Stephing.

FIRST NATIONAL

PRESIDENT Sam Rork has purchased two novels to be used as starring vehicles for Katherine MacDonald. One of these is "The Brass Bowl" by Louis Joseph Vance, and the other, "The Second Latch Key" by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. "The Brass Bowl" will probably be filmed next, production work being taken up upon the completion of the present subject, "Curtain" by Rita Weiman, which was directed by James Young, and who is now in charge of editing the film. Director Young is to be retained for the filming of additional MacDonald subjects.

The administration offices of the King Vidor Productions are being moved to the new studio at 720 Santa Monica Boulevard, and all will be in readiness there in about two weeks for the filming of Vidor's third production for First National.

HERE AND THERE

THE American Film Company is next to produce a screen version of the Robert Browning poem, "A Little Woman," which is to be made under the direction of George L. Cox. Helen Jerome Eddy and Charles Clary have been selected to play the leading parts.

Maurice Tourneur is taking the final scenes for "Caleb West, Master Diver," and has selected as his next film, "The Tiger Lady," which will be the second film made by this producer with Hope Hampton in the featured part. The continuity for this is to be written by H. H. Van Loan and Catherine Carr.

The Monroe Salisbury Players have begun the filming of "The Barbarian," and will make the Brunom studios their headquarters.

Salisbury and Director Donald Crisp have just returned from a two weeks trip in Northern California where they selected locations for the exterior scenes that will require two or three weeks for filming.

Only a Motion Picture Producer with a Vision of the Future of the Screen Will Be Interested in This—

With all its fine progress, the motion picture holds possibilities at present scarcely realized. The greater evolution of the screen art will come within the next few years.

Much more dramatic truth, plausibility and expressiveness can be attained in the motion picture than in anything so far achieved.

The public knows this, and is becoming more exacting and discriminating in its taste.

Within two years there will be a non-theatrical field for certain types of films that will more than double the size of the theatrical field.

This announcement is addressed to motion picture producers interested in broadening the art, the appeal and the influence of the screen.

I want to be associated with a motion picture producer who has the vision to see the splendid future of the screen, and plans to proceed as such a vision dictates.

A long and important experience qualifies me to render a valuable and unique service. I have the knowledge and intuition to do distinctive things. My work has received international recognition.

If you are a motion picture producer with the vision to want such a man associated with you, address AUTHOR. Room 715, 4 East 26th Street, New York.

Author Acquired Fame in Seven Years

No writer in America has risen to the heights of popularity more rapidly than Zane Grey. His first novel appeared in 1913 and won instant recognition. No other writer of American fiction has won so large a public in seven years. "Desert Gold," produced by Ben-J. B. Hampton, from the book of that name and "Riders of the Dawn" based on Zane Grey's novel, "The Desert of Wheat," are claimed to be representative of a new development in the screen drama.

Pathe Traces Serial's Rise

Present Roster Shows Ten Stars Engaged in Making Serial Films

The proportions to which the Pathe serial program has been built since the days when "The Perils of Pauline" was brought forward by that organization find its best illustration in the Pathe serial-star roster for this year. Ten celebrities of the screen plays appear on the 1920 schedule.

Of the ten listed for starring honors, which include Ruth Roland, Juanita Hansen, Marguerite Courtot, Eileen Percy, Frankie Mann, George B. Seitz, Warner Oland, Charles Hutchison, Jack Dempsey, Stuart Holmes, there are four whose names feature in two releases each for the year. Ruth Roland, whose "Adventures of Ruth" was running when 1920 was ushered in, will be seen again in the vehicle she is now producing at the Astra Studios at Glendale, as it is planned to release "Ruth of the Rockies" during the summer months.

George B. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot are listed for two appearances in serial plays, "Pirate Gold," and the picture now in production at the Seitz plant in New York, "Violet Fingers." Warner Oland, starred with Eileen Percy in "The Third Eye," Pathe's most recent serial offering, released May 23d, is now playing in "The Phantom Poe," in which Juanita Hansen is to make her bow as a Pathe star and which is on the 1920 list of offerings.

The working title of the serial Charles Hutchison is doing for Pathe at the Bruniom Studios, is "The Double Adventure." The picture will be Mr. Hutchison's first since his return to the Pathe organization under a new contract with Jack Dempsey, it is generally conceded, has measured up to the mark set for him by Pathe when it was decided to make him a serial star in "Daredevil Jack." Stewart Holmes and Frankie Mann co-star in the Faye serial production of Charles Turner Daze's story, "Trail of the Three." "The Third Eye," in which Warner Oland and Eileen Percy are featured, is reported to be listing enormous bookings.

Meighan and Warfield Traveling East

When Thomas Meighan comes East shortly he will be accompanied by no less a celebrity than David Warfield, who has recovered from his recent accident in Los Angeles, sufficiently to travel. Mr. Meighan and Mr. Warfield are warm friends. The former worked with the latter in "Return of Peter Grimm."

Good Illumination Helps to Make the Barbee Beautiful
Why the “Barbee” in Chicago is Called The “Theatre Beautiful”

A Theatre Where the Illumination Was Placed in the Hands of Experts

By Darwin Curtis

Last Week’s Blue-Print Section

A

SPECIAL, blueprint section in last week’s issue of the N. B. S., was devoted to the design of the Le Rose Theatre, owned by the Jeffersonville Amusement Company of Jeffersonville, Indiana. This theatre, which cost $75,000 to build, has a seating capacity of 1,000, and was designed by Temple and Epping, Architects of Louisville, Kentucky. Mr. M. Swinou is the President of the firm owning the building and Mr. John F. Gillooly, Jr., is the Manager of the house.

The interior color scheme, as carried out by the architect, consists of grey, cream and blue harmonized throughout. There is no balcony, but twelve mezzanine boxes occupy the balcony position. The Manager of this theatre calls it the perfect ventilated amusement place.

Above the ceiling line there are 24 Louvres, 6 x 8 feet, and in the auditorium proper, there are 30 windows. By means of these two sets of ventilating ports the air is changed without artificial help of any kind.

An equal amount of thought was given to the question of illumination. In the ceiling there are 38 glass domes containing forty 150-watt nitrogen lamps backed by reflectors. These are controlled through dimmers which make it possible to throw away any degree of illumination into the auditorium proper.

In addition to the foregoing there are 38 lights arranged above colored glass panels in the ceiling and the light shining through these panels produces one of the interior effects found in any theatre in the country.

A lattice work effect with hand-painted flowers has been arranged over the proscenium arch. This decorative matter is illuminated by 78 15-watt lamps of all colors shining through diffusers. A beautiful rainbow effect is the result. These lights burn throughout the show.

As for equipment the Le Rose is well placed. The projection room, with dimensions of 15 x 12, contains two motor-driven Powers, 6-18, arches. A throw of 80 feet carries the beam of light to a gold fibre screen 15 x 18. The theatre is equipped throughout with intercommunicating phonographs, and the aisles are illuminated by aisle lights.

Cross-section of Cove, Barbee’s Loop theatre

After fifty per cent of the capital invested is spent on interior decoration the cost of operating the lighting system (probably less than an hour per evening) does not deserve consideration here. It is sufficient to say that the current consumption is only slightly more, if any, than in the case of any other system. At the same time, the expense of operation is interesting to us all in the case of any subject and to minimize this expense is the ambition of the man who pays the bills.

Like the rest of us, Mr. Barbee is ambitious, and after deciding to adopt “lighting from concealed sources” in his new theatre he called in an expert illuminating engineer for advice on the most efficient equipment, or in other words, the system which would direct the maximum amount of light to the ceiling. When finally laid out the complete extending a long each side of the auditorium were equipped with lamps spaced at a uniform distance apart from the front to the rear. Each lamp was equipped with its own individual reflector, a reflector made of glass with a mirrored backing, and of correct design to deliver the flux of light from the lamp outward and upward from the cornice to the ceiling. The peculiar shape of the reflector used can be easily seen in the accompanying illustration, and the cross-sectional diagram of the cornice shows its installation. The back of the reflector which is nearest the wall is curved to prevent “splash” or white streaks above each lamp.

may be blended, in fact almost any shade of color found in the spectrum may be had by using the primary colors, red, blue, green, and the combination which results in white, arranged alternately in the cornice. Now, by the use of a dimmer, any intensity of any color, or combination of two or more colors, makes these variations possible.
When This Theatre Was Remodelled it Was Practically Rebuilt

The New Gardner (Mass.) Theatre Not Recognized By Old Patrons

The original Gardner theatre was built many years ago at a time when the thrifty New Englander tried to combine business and pleasure and was content to force his audience to go up stairs to a theatre so that he could rent the ground floor for income. Such a combination is so contrary to the public convenience and safety that when the Gardner theatre property was acquired by Mr. George A. Giles about one year ago he immediately decided to throw away the return from the stores and to reconstruct the theatre on the ground level, thus doing away with an extreme fire hazard and at the same time making the theatre easy of access, modern and up to date in its general arrangement. Advantage was taken of the opportunity also to make a number of changes in the arrangement, greatly improving the sight lines, the acoustics and the means of egress, also giving a far better stage and modernizing the whole structure. In the alterations the old ceiling line was retained, the balcony dropped down approximately to the former second story and the parquet level dropped to the approximate grade of the street. It was thought at first this would mean an unnecessarily high auditorium, but the proportions of the revised house have been so carefully studied that the appearance of height is even less now than it was in the old house, while the comfort of the audience, the sight lines and the exits are far more attractive than they were before, so that in every way the theatre is roomier without losing its comfortable, intimate quality and the problems of heating and ventilation are very much simplified and improved.

The entrance to the theatre is, as before, from the main street, under a new marquee projecting over the sidewalk. The recessed outer vestibule is panelled in mahogany and has a cornice and ceiling carried out in dull gold with a light stencil work beneath the cornice. Inside of the doors is a ticket office and a few steps lead up to the foyer on a level with the rear of the parquet. From this foyer a double stairway leads up to the right and left to the mezzanine lobby. This foyer is carried out in a Colonial style with white and mahogany woodwork and a very simple panelled wall Colonial treatment. Beyond it is an ample coat room and a manager's office.

The mezzanine lobby is one of the features of the theatre. The stairs lead directly into it from each side, the ceiling is covered by a broad arch with a light stencil ornament carried around for a cornice, and from this lobby steps lead up into the centre of the balcony so that there is easy access from the lobby floor to the seats of the balcony without any long flights of steps. Opening off from the mezzanine lobby at each end are the men's and ladies' rooms and lavatories, all strictly first class in their appointments.

The balcony is entirely new in plan and in its sight lines. The parquet is greatly improved by the elimination of columns and the change in the lines of the soffits so that as at present arranged every seat in the house is a good one and commands an uninterrupted view of the stage.

The quality which has been most sought in the finish and decorations of the theatre is comfort and intimacy. The scheme of the decoration is a very simple one, following the general tones of Symphony Hall in Boston, the walls of the parquet being painted a strong, rich antique red, and the walls about the balcony and the upper part of the prosenium on each side carried out in tones of stone color, with a pale blue ceiling, the blue, however, being so dull as not to introduce a discordant note.

The front of the balcony and the soffit immediately adjoining is finished in a simple treatment of dull, rich gold, enlightened by a delicate checker stencil, this stencil being repeated in various parts of the house and being a feature of the whole scheme. The draperies are a deep, rich rose damask in harmony with the colors of the first story and contrasting with the colors of the balcony, and the electric fixtures are all carried out in rich dull gold and red and were supplied and installed by McKenney & Waterbury Co., of Boston. The chairs, manufactured by Heywood Brothers and Wakefield Co., are of Spanish leather and mahogany. The whole effect of the interior is quiet, home-like and intimate and the deliberate intention was to keep away from the merely theatrical type. It will be a home-going theatre, where the audience can hear, see and enjoy either pictures, drama or comedy, the theatre being fully equipped for any form of theatrical entertainment.

In connection with the alterations an entire new heating and ventilating plant has been installed which will insure comfortable conditions at all times for the audience. The heating work was carried out by McLean & Cousens, of Boston, heating contractors. The electric work, which is also new throughout, was installed by Mr. A. L. Hinds, of Gardner, Mass. The theatre alterations and finish were carried out by general contractors, John McGaw & Sons, of Boston, from the plans and under the direction of Blackall, Clapp & Whittemore, architects.
A Hot, Stuffy, Ill-Ventilated Theatre is the Greatest Drawback to Summer Business

During the summer months you may get by with pictures that are only fair, and perhaps music that is just passable, but — with a theatre that is hot and uncomfortable — NEVER. To experiment and test the correctness of this statement during the summer will cost you hundreds, perhaps thousands of dollars, therefore why not start right now to save this money and put in a

Cleveland's New Film Exchange Building

(See front cover Equipment Section)

The site selected for the future home of all Cleveland film exchanges and their allied industries is at the southwest corner of Payne Avenue and East 21st Street, on a lot 136 feet front by 143 feet deep. The building covers almost the entire lot, and is being erected in 1 shape, so as to provide better lighting facilities. It will have a basement and eight stories, being constructed of reinforced concrete, brick and terra cotta. Every new fireproof equipment of value is being used in the construction of the Cleveland Film Exchange Building, including fire doors, stroll stair, fireproof vaults, and the latest model of sprinkler system. The entire area of floor space of the building available to the motion picture industry is 131,400 square feet.

At the present time Cleveland has twenty-eight film exchanges, located in scattered sections of the city. All of them have executed five-year leases in the new film building. The exchanges and allied industries who have committed themselves for space at this time, and who, by their support, have made the building an actuality, will pay $1.15 per square foot. Those who will execute leases in the future will pay from $1.25 a square foot up, depending upon location.

It will be a great saving to those doing business with the film interests, to find all branches of the industry all in the same building. Beside the exchanges, there will be the poster concerns, printing companies, motion picture supply industries, developing companies, and any side interests that are in any way allied to the motion picture industry.

The Film Exchange Building will be ready for occupancy by November 1st. The William Dunbar Company, of Cleveland, are general contractors for the Film Exchange Building. It is being financed by a company of Cleveland capitalists incorporated under the laws of Ohio. The directors of this company are: J. D. Patton, of the Empire Rolling Mills Company; H. H. Conaghan, of the Franklin Oil and Gas Company; W. W. Taylor, of the Taylor Machine Company; C. Clay Nims, of the William Dunbar Company; George T. Bander, attorney; F. R. Blakeslee, insurance, and J. I. Callahan, of the James E. Milliken Company.

The Cleveland Film Exchange Building will provide every convenience possible for the exchanges, and to this end, the exchange managers have been consulted as to their requirements. According to present plans, each floor will have two completely equipped projection rooms. Each floor will have four fireproof vaults. This is said to be ample space for the purpose, and will give each exchange independent vault space.

Among the exchanges which have already signed leases for space in the Film Exchange Building are: Vitagraph, Incorporated; Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, First National Exhibitors' Corporation, Metro Pictures Corporation, Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, Universal Film Exchange, Select Pictures Corporation, Republic Film Company, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Realart, Wernor Films and Standard Film Service. Technical Data on the Barbee's Lighting

The auditorium of this theatre is illuminated by means of X-Ray indirect lighting from concealed sources. Hanging ceiling fixtures are entirely absent. The illumination comes from special reflector equipment placed in the cornice or cove extending along two sides of the room.

The notable feature in connection with this installation is the use of color lighting. By the use of special color mediums of red, blue and green, in connection with white, many very striking and unusual effects may be produced in the auditorium.

The equipment producing the colored illumination consists of 169 specially designed X-Ray E65 reflectors with 100 watt Mazda "C" lamps.

The electrolyte for a lead-acid cell should be made up from sulphuric acid and water. The sulphuric acid need not be chemically pure but must be free from any impurity which is injurious to the lead plates.

In the construction of a storage battery a space is left between the bottom of the plates and the jar in allowing for any sediment or active material which might fall from the plates. This space is designed to take care of all the sediment which may accumulate during the life of the cell for should it touch the plates there would be danger of short circuit.

In order to obtain a large capacity for a storage battery it is necessary to connect a group of plates in parallel since the total capacity depends on the surface area exposed to electrolyte. The plates for a single cell are sandwiched together being separated by wooden and rubber separators. In order to protect the wood from the action of the acid the separators must be specially treated. They are also grooved in order to allow the escape of gases during charges.

When an excessive current is drawn from a battery there is danger of buckling the plates due to the rapid action in the plates. A short circuit will cause such violent action because of the evolution of gas, that there is danger of forcing out the active material where pasted plates are used in the construction of the cell.

When replacing electrolyte due to evaporation pure water only should be used. The sulphuric acid is not used up in the chemical action so that when the water is kept at such a height as to cover the plates a uniform strength of electrolyte is maintained.

Compare This With Your Projection Room

L. C. Martin, Orpheum theatre, Terre Haute, Ind., sends in a complete description of his room and accessories. He says:

As I am quite a reader of your Projection Department News, I am sending you an outline of my booth and equipment. Am sending under separate cover a blueprint or drawing of same. It is of asbestos board, quarter-inch thick, half-inch floor, quarter-inch by 2½-2½ L. angle groove. Size of booth, 8 by 8 by 12 feet. Am using two Moliograph De Luxe Machines and a Knittel Spotlight. Have a Transverter two phase 440 volts with a 50-50 split for the two lamps. Also have connected to the two lamps for emergency use a Mercury Rectifier 220 volts and a Compensator 110 volts. All three facts are on different transformers the alley, so if there is any power in the city at all I will get it. And all I have to do to change currents is to throw a few switches as they are all so connected that two lamps ready for use at any time in a minute's notice. I have three double throw two blade switches, four single throw two blade switches and one four blade switch single throw, and this amount of switches does the work perfect and you can't throw one juice into the other by this plan of switches. All wire is in conduit. I control all light in front of the booth by three way switches. All lights can also be used on the stage switch box also as well as in the booth if so wished. I have a 16 inch exhaust fan which goes through the roof to open air, also an 8 inch vent pipe through the roof to open air over each lamp which you will note by the blue print. Hope this will or may be of service to the operator. On the Mercury Rectifier and Compensator you have to steal from one lamp to the other. But on the Transverter you can light up both lamps 50/50. I believe it is a wonderful improvement over the motor generator set. Both machines are motor driven, also motor driven rewind. All port holes have asbestos slides and slots fuse link attachments, also fuse link and spring door if you wish to leave door open while running. In my next letter to you I will try and tell you a little about our projection. Thank you in advance for the good will of your paper by letting us operators express our opinion on a few things that would never get out if it were not for the Motion Picture News.

Reply

The blue print of Mr. Martin's projection room not having come to light we are publishing the letter without it. The blue print will be printed as soon as it is received.

It is evident from the description alone that Mr. Martin is well protected from all chance of loss of power supply. While his room is none too large for two machines and a spotlight it is well equipped otherwise. The ventilation is ample to take care of considerable of the heat from the arcs and the high 12-foot ceiling will make many another projectionist envious.

95% of the Machines used by the Studios and Laboratories of Los Angeles and vicinity are Power’s Projectors

Gentlemen:

We are using your projectors exclusively, ten in number, and they are giving us excellent results. Our work is very exacting, more so, in fact, than in any studio I know of. We must have perfect projection in order to judge photography and printing; poor projection would be worse than nothing. In addition, owing to the large number of companies at work, the machines are used constantly all day long, and a large part of the night—a severe strain that only mechanical perfection can meet.

The fact that we are using Power's Cameragraphs exclusively speaks for itself.

Yours very truly,

Manager Boosts Projectionist

There has always been considerable talk about the non-concern of Managers regarding Projection. In a large percentage of cases this attitude of the Manager was correctly described. He cared no more for the projectorist's part in the box office returns than if the projectionist had been a soul-less automaton.

It is with pleasure, then, that there comes to our attention a real honest-to-gosh Manager who recognizes the immense value of good projection and the man who makes it possible. Not only does this Manager recognize these things, but he thinks so well of them himself that he calls them to the attention of his trade paper.

Mr. E. B. Raifstanger, manager of the Mahaiwe Theatre at Great Barrington, Massachusetts, is the gentleman who has called our attention to the wonderfully fine work done by his projectionist (Mr. Raifstanger calls him “operator” but that makes no difference when the “operator” is better than many projectionists). The letter reads:

I have an operator here who is one of the most enthusiastic operators I have ever met and he puts his whole heart and soul into his work. Every minute he is conscious of the fact that the audience knows he is running the show and he endeavors to give them the best that is in him every minute.

With the year ending today he has kept a record of the number of reels he has run and number of breaks and has given them to me.

We run one show in the afternoon and two in the evening and are not open Sundays.

During the year he has run 8,080 reels through his machines and has had just thirty breaks during the year, or rather, stops of any kind, whether it was a belt breaking, power being cut off or whatever it might have been—thirty was the number of stops for the whole year.

He has allowed 900 feet to the reel and this figures up to 5,454,000 feet, and with sixteen pictures on a foot he has run 87,254,000 separate pictures through his machines.

He has done such good work for us that I think such a thing should be encouraged and if you will publish this article it will help him to do better work by being encouraged and it will also give other operators something to think about.

He has kept a complete record, as follows:

Operator's Name—James Tracy, Mahaiwe Theatre, Great Barrington, Mass.

Has been operating here about two and one-half years.

Uses two 6 B motor drive Powers Machines and considers them the best thing that he can find or hopes to find.

World's Largest Projection Room

The projection room of the Fox Film Corporation is the largest in the world, devoted solely to motion picture machines, containing a battery of eight Power's projectors. The immense projection room which is part of the splendid new Fox Studios is nearly sixty feet long and about twelve feet wide.

The projection room, which is one of several in the Fox Studio, is used for showing films, but the full projection installation is not yet in operation. It is hoped that the laboratory projection equipment will be ready in the near future. Power's machines will be used exclusively and the projection is in charge of a corps of expert operators, Dean J. DeZitter is in charge of Mr. Fox's private projection room and projection in other parts of the building is looked after by J. Lefante, Theo. Kidder and Fred Bochner.

As the room is so narrow in proportion to its length that it is impossible to secure in the photograph the full effect of the "squad" of Powers lined up ready for action. The Fox projection room of course is equipped with all the modern ventilating and lighting devices which are a part of the carefully worked out plans for the entire Fox building.

M. H. Thoreau, of Victoria, Writes Interestingly on Several Projection Subjects

Has Something to Say About Examination as Practised in Province of B. C.

Says Mr. Thoreau:

In answer to W. B. Allen of Edmonton in the Feb. 31 issue (rather late but I have been very busy working on several of my inventions pertaining to projection) I might say that I also believe that the censors do a lot of damage to films, since often when a subtitle has been removed (their favorite pastime up here) the splice will be an awful crude affair and make one half of a picture passing the intermittent sprocket. But why didn’t the exchange or the Projectionist (I who ran the picture before me, remove the offending splice?) I get pictures from theatres where I am personally acquainted with the men in the projection room and how they can run a picture with some of the splices in them that they do is more than I can understand.

New pictures which as a whole are perfect except for a few bad splices, yet they didn’t have the ambition to cut them out. These men do not work in Victoria (as this house is a first run house here) but in near-by points.

I have visited their projection rooms and watched their work and wondered how they “not away with it.”

Bro. Allen says “today I received the ‘Lone Star Ranger,’ funny, was that because the day I received the “News” with his letter in it I also received the ‘Lone- Star Ranger’ to project. It would have been a good picture had it had a good over-hanging as it was far from worn-out but as it was certainly was not fit for projection.

In blaming censors for some of the film damage I don’t believe we can include the British Columbia board. They have a member of Local 348, Vancouver, B. C. projecting their pictures on two “Taylors” and a Simplex or two.

Mr. Oswald (the Ass. Censor and theatre inspector) is well versed on projection and I don’t believe he would permit such outrages as Bro. Allen says are practised in the eastern provinces.

I am sending the Feb. 21 issue to Mr. Oswald and possibly he will have something to add to what I have said. In the March 27 issue Bro. Allen says Mr. Hayas and their local City Electrician would probably think I was crazy if they read my examination article. Well, maybe I am crazy, but when the Vancouver local (of which I was a member) and hope to transfer back to some of their present examination, they too had some interesting sessions with the City Electrician and most of the theatre managers.

Some of the managers became quite panicky but still the examination was held.

But today I believe that all the managers in Victoria and Vancouver realize that it was to their benefit that the examination was held. The men who were not able to pass were given ninety days’ permission to allow them to study and try it again. Oh, boy, how some did study too! The result was that with the exception of three or four, they all passed and the managers received Better and More Economical Projection. Of course B. C. could certainly be improved upon, but still I believe the projectionists here average better than in any other Province or State.

Most of the B. C. projectionists quit their studies as soon as they passed the examination, but the knowledge they gained in their studies will be a long time deserting them.

I would certainly like to hear what Bro. Allen has to say regarding the Alberta’s Examination and should there be anything that he wouldn’t like to publish—well my address is at the end of this letter. (Take the hint Bro. Allen?)

Some of these fine days, I hope to write my experience with examinations as I have been given four or five. Some bad, some good points, but most of them were a joke.

In the April 3 issue Xyatron E. York illustrates a shutter which I believe is useless. As you say the teeth are either wasting light or causing slight travel ghost, which possibly he can’t see from a distance and causing a general loss of definition.

His statement that he can get as good results as D. C. as with D. C., answers itself when he says “although I have never used D. C.”

York’s take-up tension is causing that grinding noise at the lower sprocket the first few minutes of every reel, although a worn sprocket or improperly set idler would tend to increase the noise. I hope others won’t take him too seriously when he says “it don’t hurt the film any.” Excessive take-up tension wears out many lower sprockets and lots of film in the course of a year.

The description of the Projection Room of the Allen theatre in Winnipeg was interesting. I wish more would publish a description of their equipment.

I remain,

Yours truly,

MARVIN H. THOREAU,
Projectionist, Royal Victoria theatre, Address St. James Hotel, Victoria, B. C.

Out-of-Focus Effect

D. J. B., Conn., writes:

I guess I will blurt into the department and ask one little question which has been puzzling me for some time.

I am running two of the latest type of Simplex motor driven projectors with a throw of 70 feet. Both are on a perfect level with the screen. The right-hand machine throws a perfect picture, but the other seems to be out of focus on the left of the picture, not very much, in fact, hardly noticeable, but it annoys me very much. When I get the left side in perfect focus the right side is out. Could you tell me the cause of this?

Reply: We believe that some element of your optical system is out of alignment. It may be the condenser, a sprung aperture plate or the objective. Line up the various elements and see if the out-of-focus effect does not disappear.

It might be a good idea before going to the foregoing trouble to exchange objectives if this has not already been done.

The Secret of Success

In a letter received from Walter W. Gilreath, chief of projection, Isis Theatre, Alice Theatre, Mr. Gilreath gives the formula for success in any profession when he says, “I like the work and take an interest in it.” The absence of this feeling is the main reason why there are so many operators and so few projectionists. His letter reads:

I get the Motion Picture News and several other trade magazines. The Projection Department of the News beats them all, according to my opinion. Although I seldom run up against a problem that I can’t work out myself (that is with the help of a good handbook) I often pick up some good idea from my brother projectionists.

I am not such an old hand in the projection game, I guess about three years I have been in the game.

I like the work and take an interest in it, and have done quite a bit of studying the past three or four years.

Making Exchanges Behave

The following letter from J. H. Keough, of Williamsport, Pa., is on the subject of "Who's to blame?" It is addressed to all projectionists--yes, and operators--who have ever had to wrestle with misframed, thick splices and punch holes.

To The Projector:

Thank you for your second letter appearing in your issue of April 17th, 1920.

Let us start the fight right. Subject: Why have we not perfect projection today?

Because we have so many operators that are bum ones--yes, everyone blames the poor operator and everyone knocks him to the bone until he is reduced to nothing. Well now let us see if we can't get rid of those bum operators and make projection better. Where will we start? That is what we want to know. If we are wrong give us your opinion, don't be afraid, you won't harm anyone. This country will not send you up because you try to do good. You have as much right, or I have as much right, to tell some exchange they do rotten work as it has to send you a piece of impossible projection and have your boss tell you that you know nothing. It would do just as much good for the boss to write the exchange a letter as send you that copy so I think it's about time the operators or projectionists got together and rid ourselves of this reputation. Then, and not till them, will projection be perfect.

Can we do it? Yes, it can and a word of co-operation from every operator would make a big change in one week or a month.

Let us start telling the exchanges we want better work so we can give our boys the results and so he can't come back and say 'You're not worth half what I pay you, your projection is so bad. The people all kick and tell me to fire you, you're no good.' If you want to stand by this, say nothing and 20 years from now you will have the same old story and the same old wage and the others will be getting more than you for working six hours and you will be in the coop for eleven hours.

Let us tell the exchanges we do not want those defects which we get today: out of focus, misframes in the picture which would mean the cutting out of the film to eliminate the trouble; or that slimmy all over the screen and make the people walk out wishing the operator good luck. Is this not enough to make the best operator in that business throw up his hands, and say, "Never again!"

What's the use of good sharp lens, good steady machines and spending a thousand or so of your boss' money in telling him of the wonderful projection you're going to have? Is it go for an increase in your salary two or so months later. He looks at you and tells you, why man, you're not worth it, you don't know how his hands up, and say, you got a bad film and burnt or ruined some of their film. Your boss or you would have to pay for it. Why don't they do the same in this case in place of having the blame lodged on the poor operator by the [illegible] people of his trade.

This is why there are so many good operators driven to carelessness, who don't care what their projection is like or how they handle the film because the exchanges work against him.

We are far enough ahead in the booth. Let us stop and wait until the exchanges and film producers catch up with us. This is where the improvement is needed. It is only a waste of money to get this, that and the other thing and have one copy of such junk come in and spoil the name of your house after your hard work, sleep lost and time wasted fitting it up.

Listen to this--try to run a picture called "The Tiger Girl." That picture knocked all the spirit out of me and made me feel like getting out. It's got fins like a rubber ball in it. I imagine if I owned it I would cut those parts out and make a new one. If you cut all I had. This picture has got a man's name on it has done a great deal for the picture game. I wonder if he knows it. If he does, I don't think he would be so keen to have his name taken away that he has a chance to do any good work, when the money comes in and to lay down his tools. Some guy will say I should not have run it. I would if I were not a thousand miles from nowhere. You can't shut your box up and break him. Let the film exchanges send good copy and get the good work started, then we operators will help them more, while they work to kill us never will be perfect projection.

Give the operator a chance and after a short period there will be no bum ones. It's the bum stuff they get acts like bum drink on them.

Comment: Although there is nothing entirely new in this letter, it presents conditions such a way as to cause the reader to think about his work. Without doubt the exchange of today presents the most fertile field for the improvement in projection. It is said, there has always been talk, on the subject of "Better and more Costly Projectors." The fact of the matter is, that projectors as now manufactured are good enough for the quality of film they are called upon to present. The costliest motor car in the world will do a poor job of motoring on a poor grade of gas. The best projector that can be manufactured cannot rectify misframed splices and punch holes. A picture can never be any better than the physical condition of the film although some managers seem to think otherwise. And as for exchanges, they seem to have the idea that the condition of the film has nothing to do with the quality of the picture thrown on the screen. When these things are considered it is easy to see that the step first in improving projection must start with the Exchange.

The Exchange in every case may not be the culprit who's responsible; or the operator, but the Exchange. It may be the Censors, as some correspondents think. It probably is the projectionist, careless, unthinking and heedless. But the Exchange is the place where the fault must be corrected as they who use the film previous to their handling it last and if they know but do not act, it is proof enough that they care not one whit for the Manager's business.

If all of the others who happen to read these columns can add anything pro or con to this argument let the ideas come.

Motion Pictures in Natural Colors
Recent Development of French Process Soon to Be Demonstrated Here

By GEORGE M. RECLUS, Ingénieur des Arts et Manufactures

Motion pictures in natural colors are today an accomplished fact. Mr. Léon Gaumont, director of the large French motion picture firm, is the inventor of this remarkable process. He gave the first demonstration in Paris on November 10, of last year, before the Académie des Sciences, and he received from this illustrious society the official recognition of his discovery.

A few days later the general public was invited to visit and judge the exhibition. The first picture presented in natural colors showed the Victory Parade. The enthusiasm throughout France, which greeted the production of this historic film, bore witness to the great progress which the new development had brought to motion picture art. For here we saw the boys who marched behind Pershing through the Arc de Triomphe, no longer in black and white, but real boys in khakis with the real red-white-and-blue of Old Glory floating above their ranks.

The perfection of this discovery is called for veritable inventive genius and a vast amount of patience. It called also for a highly scientific mind, guided by a thoroughly artistic spirit.

Mr. Léon Gaumont had begun his researches several years before the war. In 1913 he had given his attention to the development of the process, demonstrating, both in France and in America. He was applying himself to the perfecting of his process when the war came, and interrupted his researches. Immediately after the armistice, he returned to his work and event permits later his efforts were crowned with success.

The principle of Mr. Gaumont’s color motion picture presents a certain analogy with the three-color process employed in making of color engravings. It is well known that in the making of a color engraving three plates are applied to the paper—a blue, a yellow and a red plate. Suppose that instead of having three solid plates one had the idea of three transparent plates—blue, yellow and red. If these three colors were simultaneously projected on a screen, one upon the other, with the greatest exactness, the result would be the same as that which is obtained upon paper by the successive application of three plates. The problem to solve consisted, therefore, in obtaining these three single colored photographs by direct impression, and then to accomplish their simultaneous projection upon the screen. In order to explain how this result was obtained, it may be well to recall, briefly, a few simple facts about light and color.

The white light which we get from the sun is, in reality, composed of the entire scale of colors; this is proved by making a ray of sunlight pass through a prism of glass. We see the same colors in the rainbow, where the raindrops act on the sunlight just as does the glass prism. The things that surround us and that receive the light of the sun, absorb a part of the color rays contained in this light and reflect the others which our eyes see. That which we call the color of an object is the color of the rays of light which it reflects. Thus an object which absorbs all the rays of the sunlight, except the red rays, appears red to us. An object which does not absorb any of the color rays appears white, and that which absorbs all of them appears black. We must remember, too, that light rays of its own color is to filter through it. If one looks through a blue glass at a green object (a color composed of yellow and blue), the yellow rays will be stopped and the blue rays alone will pass. If, through the same blue glass, we look at a red object, no rays will pass through and the object will appear black.

Electric Installation at Fox Studio
Specially Designed for New Building

Eleven Foot Switchboard, Complete Fire Alarm System and New Light Control Methods Are Some of Features

The advances in studio construction and equipment during the last year or so have been the best indications of the growth of the industry. So rapidly has studio technique gone forward that the studio pre-eminent today is probably superseded tomorrow by a new structure with far greater possibilities and with equipment of later types.

When the new Fox studio at Tenth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street, New York City, was opened for inspection a few days ago, any man interested in the technical side of picture production was struck by a lay-out that represented as advanced an accomplishment as can be found among such buildings anywhere.

From time to time as the various departments at the Fox Studio are completed separate articles will be carried in this publication. At present the electrical system has progressed to a point where it merits an extended treatment.

The huge studio building houses three separate sections divided into laboratory, studio and administration. To supply these establishments requires a number of direct current and alternating current supply lines. An indication of the immensity of the current demand may be gauged from the statement that when being employed at its maximum the studio itself may draw from 18,000 to 20,000 amperes.

The administrative offices are equipped throughout with duplexities for general illumination. Projection rooms are supplied with both a. c. and d. c. for either arc or incandescent lamps. All parts of the building are in communication with each other by dictaphones, while a 500-line P. R. X. exchange forms the connecting between the outside world and the offices within the studio walls. A complete fire alarm and central station watchman's system protects the entire building. On the studio floor a unique pilot system has been devised by the E. J. Electric Co., who also laid out the entire electric layout throughout the studio. This pilot system makes it possible for watchmen to turn on pilot lights ahead of them and then to switch them off after passing the various corridors.

It is the studio floor itself that will prove to be of the greatest interest to studio technicians. At the Fox studio the floor is divided into 7 stages, 55 x 100 feet. Each stage has its complete electrical system for controlling all lighting within its area. The switchboard are each 11 feet long by 10 feet high, and for purposes of protection are enclosed in heavy mesh partitions.

On these switchboards are mounted the heavy duty, contactors which comprise the heart of the remote control system evolved at this studio. These contactors were developed by the Sundh Elec. Co., and were selected because of their ruggedness, ample rating and general satisfactory design. By means of a vacuum dash pot the noise usually accompanying contactors of this sort is practically eliminated.

The contactors are actuated either from push buttons at the switchboard or from small push button stations placed near the director. Mr. J. A. Marronbeim, of the E. J. Electric Co., in describing the equipment at the Fox Studio took special pride in the unique push button arrangement worked out for this installation. By its means any one or any number of lights on a "set" may be controlled at the will of the director by simply manipulating the "on" or "off" buttons.

In selecting, testing out and accepting much of the equipment and the new devices used in the electrical system of this studio, the word of Walter Quinlan, the chief studio electrician, had considerable weight. Mr. Quinlan has been in the technical end of the motion picture industry for a number of years, the last four with William Fox. So varied has been his experience that a large amount of the equipment at the Fox Studio was selected from his suggestions.

Devises Baby Arc

A "baby" arc light, designed to take the place of a tallow candle, to be used in fire-place scenes and also as a wall bracket or table lamp in place of the ordinary incandescent light, is the ingenious device perfected by Mr. Houck after more than five years' research and labor. The new light will be given its initial test in a forthcoming production at the Fox Studios.

The arc is of 1000 candle power and in cases where more than one light to a setting is necessary all can be illuminated through one switch, instead of by individual operation as heretofore. It is the smallest baby automatic arc ever used in studio lighting. The arc which takes the place of a match in the hands of an actor lighting a cigar is but seven-eighths of an inch in diameter and but four and one-half inches in length.

As an example of the arc's illuminating powers a test was recently made with a player lighting his cigar in a dark room. With the arc secreted in the palm of his hand and the connecting wire extended invisibly through his sleeve and down his trouser legs out of focus of the camera, the performer pressed a small button which brought the carbon collector, providing a 1000 candle power light on his face.

Mr. Houck has been connected with studio electrical work for several years. Previous to studio connections he was in charge of the arc lighting system in El Paso, Texas, and for five years was connected with the Stone and Weber company of Boston.

Cooper-Hewitt Reports
Good Business

Since control of the Cooper Hewitt Electric Company, Hoboken, N. J., was assumed last June by the General Electric Company, new business of the Company has more than doubled. The plant has been running to capacity and working overtime in effort to catch up with orders.

In order to meet the increased demand for industrial lighting outfits as well as motion picture apparatus, the Cooper Hewitt Electric Company has recently purchased some adjoining property. This will eventually give more than double the present floor space.

Rapid strides have been made in the improvement and development of the Cooper Hewitt lamp, chief among which is the standardization of the new 85% power factor outfit. Some radical improvements are under way which will materially increase the efficiency of this lamp.

The Engineering and Sales Departments have been materially increased by the acquisition of new men.

Abbot Invents Studio
Appliances

Two inventions of paramount importance to the motion picture industry have been developed in the research laboratories of the National Film Corporation of America. Lenwood Abbott, superintendent of National's laboratories, has perfected an enlarging camera, which will make a clear-cut print from a motion picture negative. This machine will make it possible to reproduce pictures for publicity purposes without the use of a Grafex camera.

Music for Your Theatre

By Charles D. Isaacson

I CHOOSE to take the oldest stunt of the motion picture drama. The exciting chase. The plot has thickened and the cat is out of the bag. The villain is exposed for what he is, the heroine realizes all—that she has been duped; that the hero was another man, and that she is in the clutches of an individual not entirely a gentleman. The hero is on the trail, with outraged parents of the heroine in his party. Various villagers are there, to assist in the capture of the villain, who has committed such nefarious deeds that the constable, the sheriff, the chief of police and the fire department are after him.

It is not a comedy, but a real old-fashioned melodrama.

Music? Where will we use music?

To make the entertainment more exciting. Yes! To make the audience feel the excitement more. Yes! To bring out the inner meanings of the plot. Yes! To give voice to the characters in the action. Yes!

You will remember the early days when a brilliant showman conceived the idea of using a pistol shot where a pistol was fired in the picture. It thrilled the audience, because it gave a feeling of realism. You didn't only see the shot—you heard it.

When you put music into the chase, you not only see it but you hear it. You not only hear it, but you feel it. Hearing the right kind of music is almost as exciting as being in the chase yourself. The rhythm of music has an effect on your system—your blood runs faster, your pulses beat quicker.

Where is the man whose foot doesn't start to tap when he hears a certain kind of music? Where is the man who doesn't want to march when he hears a military band? Where is the woman—and to man too—who doesn't want to get up and dance when a dreamy waltz is playing?

Do you think that it is only an idea which reacts in the intelligence when a band plays? No sir, it is a physical thing first of all. I mean that your body is acted on by some music, that the effect is unconscious, and nothing can stop it. If you hit a blow sharply on the knee, the leg jumps. Try it. The scientist tells you this is a natural phenomenon. If you rub your hands together, you generate some electricity—and if you then touch your finger to some thin paper, it sticks. If you play a note on a violin and hold it close to a piano, the note in the piano vibrates as if by a sympathetic response.

Music is all vibration. Watch the violin string and see how it vibrates. Watch the piano strings—the same thing happens. When the music is playing, the air is vibrated—that is how you hear—you understand voice, by the vibrations which hit your ear-drums.

Scientists are beginning to use vibrations to cure disease. I have personally brought musical concerts to convalescent soldiers, suffering from shell-shock, and it had a marked effect on them. Some kinds of music would drive them mad; some music had a softening, soothing effect, like a gentle massage. I have gone to insane asylums for the purpose of seeing how far a simple piece of music might go in its effect. Melancholy patients have smiled at some music; violent patients have been made calm by certain chords. I have put insomnia patients to sleep with certain kinds of calm, restful music; I have calmed and relieved nervous patients with soft music; I have aroused dulled, lethargic patients with exciting music.

(I fancy I can hear the busy motion picture executive saying: "What's the use of all this discussion? What has it to do with the box office?" But, my dear sir, let me assure you, that it has a great deal to do with the money you make; for when you get the right viewpoint on music's powers, you will then see how you can use it for your gain. Remember, last week we agreed that you must think further than the individual feature you're programming this week. You must be able to look ahead—a little bit away for the moment, from the pocketbook.)

The vibrations of music, then, you will agree, are able to affect your audience physically. You can excite them by using the proper effects. You can hash them into a fury as if you were whipping them, if you build up the correct and appropriate musical atmosphere.

On with that chase! Now hear that rushing, presto music. Notes pour over notes, racing onwards. There is a breathlessness in the style of the composition. You hear chord after chord piling on the ear. Oh, will the music cease? You can scarcely keep up with it. Almost you feel as if you are running too, after the villain. You can feel the speed of the horses; you had only seen them before, but now you are in the chase.

The beautiful heroine is distressed. What is she saying? Nothing. But what is she feeling? Ah, heart-breaking harmonies in the music show you that her spirit is crying out for pity. You are not concerned in the audience with how it is done, but you know that something has stolen into your heart and made you feel like that beautiful lass.

See the villain smiling. But do not think that he is all smiles. Listen! The jerky, guilty notes in the music give you an insight into his real self.

The hero is spied. Yes, he is brave. But how brave! Hear the bold, true, majestic strokes of the notes, they inspire you with faith in the youth.

Now the chase grows wilder. The hero is almost upon the villain, almost within reach of his sweetheart. You, Mr. Exhibitor, must use this moment to get the maximum thrill in the audience. Are you going to let the moment go by tamely? Whip the auditorium into a frenzy. Now, out with it, orchestra; now use your skill, pianist or organist; now, with all the art in you, Mr. Showman, take advantage of the pictures on the screen to make your audience wild with excitement. This is the art of showmanship. This is the moment when the right chord, the right composition, will turn the blood cold and pull the listeners to their feet. Realism comes through the voice of the screen.

The silent screen calls for a voice, and that voice is music.

Why, I could take you into a room, with only a piano for an equivalent, and without a picture, without a play-stage, I could make you feel the excitement of that chase.

Just with the piano. Just with the all-powerful compositions which have been written to excite listeners. There are bits of music which, staged with only amateur sense, would make you want to scream for fear! There are bits of music so realistic that you would be afraid to look about you.

The chase in your picture—now, Mr.
Exhibitor, do you begin to understand, and to see more clearly, how you can apply music to bring out the hidden meanings of the action, to accentuate and itenify the emotions? You are dealing with an audience of individuals, who are moved emotionally, physically, intellectually.

And as we have just barely touched, there is a profit to be made in using every art to have your audiences get as much as possible in every way, out of your pictures.

We will come back again to the analysis of the musical language. But next week
I want to show you the opportunity which is at your door, if you will capitalize the vast interest in good music.

"Edgar's Jonah Day"
(Booth Tarkington Comedy—Goldwyn—Two Reels)

BOOTH TARKINGTON's series of "Edgar" comedies have created quite a stir in the film world because of their natural plots and characterizations, not forgetting the human touches of the author, who is in a class by himself as a painter of young boyhood. The latest entitled "Edgar's Jonah Day" is quite up to the standard of the two previous essays. While it doesn't carry the same amount of mirth-provoking incident and the Ridolavenport accepted it in silence, Drunken buttonos and trick photography have lost their novelty.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Bromley Case"
(Produced by Steiner—Released by Arrow—Five Reels)

THIS is the fifth picture of the "Tex, the Educator of Mysteries" series. It follows much along the lines of its predecessors. There is the usual murder and the usual mystery enveloping it. Only in this case there are about five suspects and some audiences may get a little confused. Tex, the detective, played by Glenn White, solves the mystery in the end, clears the innocent party under the shadow of suspicion, and quietly smokes his pipe to await another murder and mystery.

Ethel Russell appears as the girl, and Joseph Striker plays opposite. The love interest is well maintained despite the fact that the picture is essentially one of mystery, and this helps a lot to keep it from becoming too strained and overdone. Production is satisfactory and the entire cast is up to the average. It may not quite equal The Trail of a Cigarette, falling a little behind in gripping interest, but it is better than the earlier picture of this series, and can be served to any audience unless they are on a purely "love story" diet.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Dangerous Hero"
(Five-Reel Feature Starring Owen Moore—Selznick)

THIS picture won't create any unusual comment, being what might be termed an average feature. It will interest and please, however, and give entertainment to those who witness it. The story is of the comedy variety and although it runs along smoothly and has its bright moments, it never sparkles. Still, it could have had the characters and situations been stretched a little.

The story runs for about a couple of reels before the author reveals that it is to be a comedy and when the idea suddenly dawns upon us we feel that we have been misled and have to re-set our minds to fit the scenes that follow.

Owen Moore plays his opening scenes in a convincing manner, but when he strikes the comedy situation, he is entirely too timid.

If he had gone right into them with comedy uppermost in his mind, he would have had his audience with him and caused many laughs. Instead, he seemed to drag through the important scenes while you were expecting and waiting all the time for something funny to develop.

But he is not entirely to blame for this, for the director should have known the tempo of the scenes and should have suggested "business" for him to do.

Moore is seen as a young man in a penniless condition who is loved by a wealthy young lady. He is still possessed of a second-hand car, which he raffles off at a picnic in the hope of gaining a few extra dollars to pay his debts. He gains the requisite calisthenics in a thoroughly white uniform, when he is informed by a friend that his tailor is becoming impatient for the money owed him.

He hands over the money to the impecunious one, and begins to feel a bit relieved as it seems the lady will now be quite satisfied with his return. The picture's director seems to have set his heart and is useless.

In order to make good the loss to the one possessing the winning ticket, Moore promises to work two weeks for nothing and to do anything his lady will have him do.

An enemy of his secures the ticket, whereupon he takes our hero home with him and proceeds to make the unfortunate one the family drudge.

If this is unsuccessful, for Moore takes no interest in the work allotted to him and in the end is ordered from the house. But not before a calous rival has tried to concoct a scheme by which to gain the heroine's love.

Her, too, is unsuccessful, and after many exciting and farcical scenes in which the two "villains," the young ladies' father, a "vamp," and hero and heroine are concerned, the final showdown exposes the lovers in each other's arms.

This picture is a good one and includes Gloria Hope, Emmett King, Henry Miller, Jr., Virginia Cadwell, Charles Arling and Neil Craig.

The picture contains many beautiful exterior shots.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Monkey Business"
(Sunshine Comedy-Fox—Two Reels)

DESPITE the title, the Fox monkey does not monopolize the picture, although both he and the dog get in some effective work. The plot is simply that of a husband who tries to outwit his clever and slyly wife who pursues him, leaving a very pretty baby to get into trouble while she is away. There is not so much slapstick in the two reels as there is real good gags, some of them novel, and all of them good for a big laugh.

Almost all of the regular Sunshine troupe appear, not forgetting the score or so of girls who romp and dance to their hearts content in the cabaret scenes. This set is quite elaborate and is the center of considerable of the action.

The second reel is the better of the two, containing some unique and side-splitting bits of action on the beach, when the supposed baby is strangled on a rock some distance from shore. The player who dives in ankle-deep water should get a big laugh.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"SCRATCH MY BACK"
(Eminent Authors-Goldwyn)

Scintillating Comedy Is a Sure-Hit Fire

For a feature which simulates from inception to conclusion—which sparkles with genuine flashes of humor and wit—which travels along breezily and occasionally kidding itself—which doesn't carry a single dull moment—which presents a new and refreshing type of comedian, "Scratch My Back," a picture of Rupert Hughes' humorous story, is entitled to be called "the comedy hit of the season." In the first place it contains a genuine gag which is treated in an ideal manner. In fact it is a model of its kind because there is no attempt to embellish it with serious touches. Most farce-comedies fail on the screen because the directors think that the action must be reinforced with bits of melodramatic incident. "Scratch My Back" is the antithesis to any element. It simply relies upon its original idea which is elaborate enough to furnish sixty minutes of solid entertainment. But taking into consideration the humorous situations and the spirited acting of T. Roy Barnes and his assistants, it is the subtleties which bring out the values of the offering. No finer sample of wit and satire his ever flashed on the screen. Each caption is a gem. One in particular brought forth a sal de amusement to the Capitol. Which is an unheard of incident at a picture theatre. It expressed the idea that "in the history of the Drama and Movia, this is the first time that a girl refused to go unaccompanied to a man's room."

Perhaps Rupert Hughes wrote them. Why not? He is versatile enough.

Mr. Barnes comes to the screen with a full stage experience and introduces a breezy and refreshing manner. His style is rather unique. The role he assumes—that of a young man "who always did what he wanted to" is cut exactly for his personality. He is kidding and being kicked about in equal measure. The girl of the story is his courage to scratch a woman's back at a theatre. Seated in the stalls he comes to the rescue with his soothing fingers, and from this novel situation arises a friendship which carries a deal of humorous complications. He is not exactly the hero since she is married to another. But he has his reward when the conclusion brings her scratching his back. The picture is well directed by Sidney Olcott and the backgrounds are delightful. Helene Chadwick as the heroine, Lloyd Whitlock as the husband, and Cesare Gravina in a character study lend admirable assistance. The offering should be a knockout with any audience. —Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

T. Roy Barnes, one of the foremost comedians on the stage, is making his debut in motion pictures as Val Romney in the screen comedy "Scratch My Back," written by Rupert Hughes and directed by Sidney Olcott. This is one of the merriest of back stage comedies. The man who writes this story has a ten-act "as the man who always did what he wanted to." He is the comedy genius who has just got out of the graveyard of the comedy and melodrama picture through the inspiration of "Scratch My Back" and "escape.

Val Romney in his early life is shown. He is a professional man-in-a-runaway-convent girl who becomes a professional dancer. But she gives up this profession when her dancing partner insists on knowing his affection upon her. She goes home and shortly after marries the American consul, Lorton. What of Romney? Well, he comes into her life when visiting the theatre. Seated immediately behind her he notices that she is having trouble in keeping quiet due to the itching of her back. Val, living up to his theory, scratches it for her. And she adores his tact and courage. Complications develop which make her husband suspicious in the end she requests Romney's assistance by scratching his back as it itches. There is a sparkle to this picture which is spontaneous throughout. The titles are perfect gems of satire and wit. And the players assisting Mr. Barnes have caught the spirit of the comedy in splendid fashion. "Scratch My Back" doesn't carry a dull moment. It is screen comedy at its best.

PROGRAM READER

What is considered by impartial critics the brightest and brightest farce-comedy of the year will come to the screen. It is under the title of "Scratch My Back." This Goldwyn offering is written by Rupert Hughes and directed by Sidney Olcott and features the screen debut of T. Roy Barnes, one of the most genial and able performers of stage comedy. Mr. Barnes will outline this scintillating story. It must be seen to be appreciated. But rest assured that one of the most surprising pictures to have been seen is for you see "Scratch My Back." The subtleties are as rich as the comedy situations. And Mr. Barnes and his excellent company take full advantage of the humorous possibilities.

SUGGESTIONS

Don't fail to go after the crowds with this one. Bill it as the brightest and funniest farce-comedy of the year. Tell that it introduces T. Roy Barnes to the screen. He is destined to be a long time a star. The setting is a stage comedy. The scene is a humorous fashion and use catch lines, stills, and posters. Use a teaser campaign, advising your patrons that the chance is the to have the laugh of the season. Emphasize particularly that you stake your reputation as an exhibitor on this picture. Mention that Sidney Olcott directed and that Helene Chadwick

"BELOW THE SURFACE"
(Ince-Paramount)

Bosworth's Active and Graphic Incidents Make Entertaining Picture

The vivid personality of Hobart Bosworth—his ability to dominate his scenes through sheer dramatic power call for stories of strong ingredients. His sponsors have not missed "Below the Surface," an original contribution by J. L. Rein and J. B. Howard. And they need look no further than material based upon plots of the briny deep. He can represent the stern, resolute sea-farer better than any other actor of the screen. But instead of depicting him sailing before the mast, this picture offers him the role of a deep-sees diver. It may be called a character study, because every element of dramatic conflict is established to bring out his dominant personality.

The plot here is rather weak and won't carry truth in several instances, and much of the action is of an arbitrary kind. But there is no denying that it holds the attention. The picture starts with a punch, loses its dramatic effect, follows, but finally has a powerful climax.Romney is subordinated in a Bosworth offering and its introduction here only capitalizes some theatrical melodrama. The conflict is presented in the attempt of get-rich-quick promoters to engage the diver and his son in a fraudulent enterprise. Their scheme is to use the two men as divers in lieu of the third, much to the deep-sees man's disapproval. The son willfully entertains the project. A woman is introduced whose object is to intrigue the young man into matrimony. This incident is too buried to expect it.

The boy becomes delirious when he leaves him and the father goes to an underworld dance to bring the money. But there he gets lost and during a collision with a decaplet and the promoters perishes. The boy refuses to believe his father's story that the woman is worthless, until he puts on his diving suit and locates her watery grave. And thus his sehen behind in the embrace of her lover. The picture is rich in the sub-marine scenes—several views are presented the divers carrying on their work in a life-like manner. The illusion is so perfect that Irvin Willatt, the director, deserves full credit in making this part of the picture vivid. Bosworth's emotion and restraint are so compelling that the operator is always held at attention despite any story weakness of his pictures. The action, the novel incident and suspense give "Below the Surface," an adequate punch. Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The sea again furnishes the background for a strongly dramatic story in Hobart Bosworth's "Below the Surface," which will be seen at the Palace week of April 19, in the Fishing village on the rocky coast of Maine and the star has the role of a stern old New England deep-sees diver. His partner is his son. Luther. The two are approached by a fraudulent enterprise to extract treasure from a sunken wreck. The old diver declines, but Luther, attracted by the pretty girl who accompanies the promoter, accepts the proposition, marrying the young woman at the same time. The old man is left to his fate. "Below the Surface" is a story of exciting interest. It is a vivid graphic document—one entirely suited to the screen personality of Mr. Bosworth. The plot is filled with tremendous punch which thrill, while the heart appeal is sufficient to give it balance. Luther Reed, who wrote the story has given it all the value of his wide experience, and Irvin V. Willat, the director, has endowed it with the necessary action. The star and his assistants have provided excellent performances.

PROGRAM READER

When "Below the Surface" comes to the — theatre next — you will see Hobart Bosworth, then there is no better actor on the screen, in a vivid love story of the sea. You will look upon underwater heroes and deep-sees figures. You will be identified with a father's love for a widowed son, a boy's love for an unworthy woman, a girl's love that wins, the narrow escape scenes, it is a picture of tremendous action. Some of its starling scenes disclose a fog, a wreck and a rescue. And to give this story its small town charm is exploited. The most exciting sub-sea events are declared to be the most vivid and pictures of this presented in a phantasmagoria. Don't fail to see this pulsetting drama.

CATCH LINES

They were dying down there like rats in a flood! No man could reach them until — See Hobart Bosworth in "Below the Surface," the most gorgeous photopty ever written.

"ALIAS MISS DODD" (Universal)

Little Entertainment Value in This Short Story

There is a semblance of a story within a story here which sort of compensates for the slight idea upon which it is founded and the mass of extraneous detail which composes the action. "Alias Miss Dodd" is episodic and lacks point and construction and carries very little story interest, the chief point of attraction being the presence of the personable Edith Roberts in the title role. There can be neither rhyme nor reason in the idea of a timid old bachelor expressing romance through the employment of his imagination. He takes his diary to a hidey and the heroine, an employee, believes that which is brought to the shop by Thomas Dodd, she decides to give up her work and begin other out of chaos in the old man's imagination.

In this activity, he took upon himself the task of incorporating on paper what he would have liked to accomplish in real life. So it happens that the factory girl enters his domicile and palms herself off as his daughter. After a series of confrontations, it is decided that the old man has a niece and her nephew are a couple of rogues, the truth is established and the girl is happy because of her newly found romance with Kent, the nephew. The picture may be called a satire on sentiment and it offers the star plentiful opportunities to score her delightful touches. Harry Franklin's direction is entirely capable and the other members of the cast contribute good performances.

Program Reader

She picked up the rough manuscript of a diary and what she read made her blood run cold. What was the reason of the author's trouble? She would go and investigate. She would put his house in order. And so she became Alias Miss Dodd. What happens in this delightful story cannot be told here but suffice to state that it presents a novel entertainment. The picture is rich in romance and sentiment and Edith Roberts is united throughout the action. There are scenes such as Mrs. Bessie McVade and Harry Van Meter, also a scene which is memorable for its own sake. The screen sensation Ruth Ford is to be seen in this picture.

"Remodeling Her Husband" (New Art-Paramount)

Moth-Eaten Story Lifted by Dorothy Gish's Inimitable Charm

Only the presence of Dorothy Gish, with her unforgettable charm and inimitable comedy, saves this piece from becoming a tiresome entertainment. We can think of no other actress who can endow the tried and true role of the young bride, whose object is to tame her husband, with much originality. Whatever appeal this picture has is found in her performance. She proves that her leading man, James Rennie, a newcomer to the screen, gives a distinctive bit of acting. He catches the spirit of the part with true comedy insight—never for a moment losing his balance and overstepping the mark.

The idea is indexed in the pigeon-holes of producer-directors, and it makes one wonder why the plot was adopted. It is hardly big enough for feature expression, but the Continuity is so even, the direction so spontaneous, the acting so spirited, that the lapses are not unduly noticeable. Lilian Gish shows her versatility as the director and her ability to make the most of the story is a creditable achievement.

Program Reader

Would you marry a good looking flirt on the chance of reforming him? Gish—yes it is a risk to marry any man to reform him of certain habits! If you have any doubts on the question go and see Dorothy Gish in her latest screen comedy, "Remodeling Her Husband." This is a delightful story about a young girl who marries a man and finally decides that it is time to reform him. His weakness for a pretty face gets him into repeated difficulties, until finally she forces him to make a speech which makes him a power in the business world. Later, however, she decides that hubby is worth while and she marries him. She is a most submissive and repentant husband.

The piece is a jolly comedy of domestic adventure and the action is light and rapid. Scene follows scene in which Miss Gish scores her points with the comicality which made her "Little Darner" famous. James Rennie, a promising leading man on the stage, makes his debut in pictures here and he gives a good account of himself. In fact he proves an excellent foil for the star's quaint touches. Lilian Gish, who is also a star, has shown some progress as a director. The offering is said to be on a par with "Heart of the Hills," Out of Luck," and similar Gish vehicles which have made the picture public laugh and which have brought the star a worthy following.

Suggestions

A Dorothy Gish picture should be exploited on the personality of the star. Miss Gish is popularly called the Little Darner and all of her recent features have been "Dorothy Gish." The star is a "Dorothy Gish," and in "Remodeling Her Husband" is declared to be one of the liveliest and most entertaining of the recent Gish feature productions. Miss Gish is a newcomer to the screen, in the leading man's role. His ability and personality will bring him a large following.

"THE NOTORIOUS MRS. SANDS"
(Robertson-Cole)

A trite story with interesting and dramatic moments

An average feature which is mildly entertaining. It is of the society-drama variety, with a theme which has been used many times—the sacrifice of a young society girl by her mother to a wealthy man whose society is used as an aid to pay off old debts.

The picture, however, has its share of interesting and dramatic moments and contains enough suspense to excite the emotions. But its weaknesses lie in the fact that the story has no new twist.

The heroine is seen falling in love with a young man who has lost his fortune and is in the employ of his rival to retrieve it. Meanwhile the latter marries the girl. He is unable to hold her, because of his jealous conduct. The big scene between the two shows the husband choking and then roughly throwing the wife to the floor—a rather strong and exciting moment.

Scenes in the courtroom follow. The husband accuses his rival of robbing his safe.

The wife's testimony clears the accused and another separation in which hero goes to South America and heroine becomes a school teacher, they are brought together again in the final scenes.

Bessie Barriscale is in her usual role, wearing many beautiful gowns to set off the character. She is supported by an excellent cast.

The carefulness in both the planning of the sets, the selection of exteriors and detail in action is a notable feature of the picture.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Mary Wale—Bessie Barriscale
Ronald Wolfe—Robertson Cole
Dorothy Curtin—Dorothy Curtin
Gray Sands—Gray Sands
Child—Dorothy Curtin

BESSIE BARRISCALE, in her usual role, Robertson-Cole's success, "The Notorious Mrs. Sands," will appear at this theatre next week.

In this society-drama, Miss Barriscale has a role that should please her many followers and give them interesting and dramatic moments. As Mary Wale, a society girl, she falls in love with Robertson Cole, a young man who has squandered his fortune.

Her mother, however, is desirous of her marriage to Gray Sands, a wealthy man, whose fortune would help to pay off some of the old debts. Robertson secures a position in the employ of his rival, goes west and is succeeded in his new job, when he marry Miss Barriscale.

But the marriage did not turn out as Sands had hoped to have it. For Mary did not love him. In a jealous rage he attempts to choke her and finds this has no effect, accuses that he did not marry her.

Our heroine, however, comes to the rescue and proves his innocence.

After a separation in which hero goes to South America and heroine becomes a school teacher, they are brought together again for a beautiful finish.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Manager announces that "The Notorious Mrs. Sands," Robertson-Cole's picture starring Miss Barriscale, will be the attraction at this house on the 22nd of this week.

In this picture Miss Barriscale will be seen in a new and entirely different role, from any she has ever portrayed before. She is a society girl, and as Mary Wale, in love with Robertson Cole, a young man who has squandered his fortune.

SUGGESTIONS

This is just an average feature and should not be played up too strongly with the idea of misleading your patrons into the belief that it is excellent entertainment.

In houses where they are given to society-dramas, it will of course go much better than in the others.

"WHITE LIES"
(Fox)

Story of France in Wartimes Is Strong in Plot

No one can say that "White Lies" is lacking in plot material. The complications are woven into the narrative almost to the point of being tragic. The interest is held by the many tense situations and the pleasing glimpses of French uniformity. It shows an attractive dramatic for the fans that like the heavy stuff. Gladys Brockwell is the star. The character is sympathetic and Miss Brockwell gets past the emotional spots without being sentimental or maudlin. She does better work in this than in her past pictures.

There is no psychological picture about the story. Character development is not emphasized and is subordinate to the weighty plot. The overlooked prayer, and the mis-taken-for-dead ideas are worked in, and the intrigue of the situation is carried up to climax.

A French baroness has two daughters who try to keep from her husband their secret of the marriage. Once he discovers that they are not a traitor, when her husband is reported lost at sea, the two are married. Therefore the first husband returns to prove that he was not lost at sea. A younger sister claims the bars and her own romance is shattered.

Everything seems to be in the right place until the chivalrous husband number one strand of hair is shown. The man does not show any delusive effect. Rather it creates a romantic and picturesque support. Direction and detail hit one hundred per cent.—Length, 5 reels.—Arthur H. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Once said that "White Lies" is a picture to be the attraction at the theatre at the theatre. Gladys Brockwell, who already has a large and enthusiastic following of pictures in this picture is the star—the story in France during and after the Great War. It shows no gruesome battle scenes, and the romance of the women who stayed at home during the struggle.

A picture of the beautiful and romantic war scenes found to be the war scenes in the charming picture. And the charming place where Baron Du Beaurepaire and his two daughters were allowed to keep up a little romance after the Battle of the Marne. The story is of the romance of the women who stayed at home during the struggle.

William Scott plays opposite Miss Brockwell, and Josephine Crowell and Charles K. French help to make the picture one of the most interesting of the year. The picture is a beautiful and romantic one. It has been faithfully represented in the scenes. Besides the star there is a host of other beautiful actors; all of whom will be recognized by all picture lovers.

The plot is well constructed and the photography of the beautiful scenes in uniform and that of the war scenes is fine. It is filled with the tale of love and beauty and the romance of the beautiful and romantic war scenes.

Eight Ready for Reelcraft

Short Subjects Are Delivered to General Office in New York City

Eight more pictures have been completed for the exclusive short-subject program of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, and delivered to the general office in New York.

Alice Housat completed "Rubies and Romance" at the Chicago studio of Reelcraft, produced under the direction of Frederick J. Ireland and Dick Smith, who also plays a prominent part in the picture.

Texas Guinan has completed her twelfth two-reel Western drama under the direction of Jay Hunt, titled, "The Girl of the Range."

Milburn Moranti has finished another two-reel farce comedy which he has titled "Barber Shop Gossip," making a total of nine pictures ready in advance of release date which has been set for June 20.

The Matty Rourtbiert producing unit has completed the simple print of "Circus Day," which is in the general office for screening for exhibitors.

All of the above-mentioned pictures are released by the thirty-six Reelcraft and allied exchanges throughout the United States, covering every principal city and territory.

Southern Rights Sold on Fine Arts Pictures

Fine Art Pictures, Inc., announces that they have acquired the rights to their six-reel super-comedy "Up in Mary's Attic" for the six southern states, consisting of North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee to the E. & H. Film Distributing Co.

As a part of the campaign of this release, a song has been written, entitled "Up in Mary's Attic," which will be linked up to the presentation of the picture in all sections of the country.

Charles F. Schreiber, treasurer and general sales manager of the company, attended the convention of exhibitors in Cleveland, O., where he disposed of further territory.

HalloomComedies Are Entirely Sold

With the entire foreign rights for the Hallroom Bays Council disposed of for 1920 and two succeeding years to the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation and the complete domestic distribution of the well-known two-reeler already under contract, Jack and Harry Cohn, the producers, are now concentrating their efforts on production and exploitation of the series.

A campaign to aid exhibitors in the exploitation of the series is now about to be launched, which is, it is believed, will greatly enhance the box-office values of the comedies for exhibitors.

Community to Release Big Superfeature

"To-morrow," a superfeature made by the Community Productions, Inc., is about to be released.

The picture is produced under Director Stanley Miller, and the story by C. S. Clancy, is said to be one of the most engrossing type, built upon a theme that has gripped the minds of men since the world began.

The length taken to produce this feature as well as the reliance on the producers regarding it, make it especially noteworthy.
